Union Vote Imminent

By BRIAN BUINEWICZ

An election on faculty unionization at Villanova could be held within a month, said Dr. James M. Berquist, president of the school chapter of the American Association of University Professors.

A petition was filed with the National Labor Relations Board on Jan. 3, 1980. The petition asks the NLRB to hold an election among faculty and professional librarians to determine if the Villanova chapter of the AAUP should serve as the collective bargaining agent here on campus.

The petition was supported by nearly 58% of the faculty and librarians. With only 30% respondent rate necessary to petition the NLRB, the high rate at Villanova shows a strong interest in bringing this to a vote. Dr. James Berquist, president of Villanova's AAUP chapter, said that he is hopeful that the AAUP will win the election.

"We know from our conversations with colleagues that they have many different reasons for considering the change. But we can perhaps make the generalization that all are seeking a more orderly, structured, and certain method of resolving issues that are important to them," stated Berquist.

"When the faculty can present its concerns through a collective bargaining unit, there is a legal assurance that their concerns will be negotiated and dealt with and that there will be a contract to carry out what is agreed upon," continued Berquist.

Following the petition, the next step the AAUP took was a meeting to be held Wednesday, January 16, between administrators, AAUP officials and an NLRB official.

An agreement between all parties would lead to an election within a month. If agreement is not reached at the meeting, formal hearings will be conducted through the NLRB.

Villanova professors' salaries rank approximately in the middle of comparable institutions (ones offering baccalaureat degrees and some graduate programs). But Villanova is located in a high cost of living area, with inflation annually chewing away at income. The AAUP contends that it will provide a more explicit contract and hopefully provide a more secure financial future for Villanova faculty.

Board Chooses Chairman

The Rev. Francis X. McGuire, O.S.A., a former president of Villanova, was elected chairman and five new members were named to the board of trustees at its December meeting.

Father McGuire, presently Religious Superior of the Augustinian Retreat Center in Staten Island, N.Y., succeeds Thomas F. Devine, Philadelphia attorney and business executive, as board chairman. Mr. Devine was the first layman ever to serve as chairman of Villanova's trustees.

New members elected to the board are: Mr. Thomas J. Burke, a Detroit, Michigan builder; Dr. Jesper Chen See, of Reading, Pa., physician; the Rev. Joseph D. Duffey, O.S.A., assistant provincial of the Eastern Augustinian Province; Dr. Margaret M. Healy, former dean of Rosemont College and presently treasurer of Bryn Mawr College, and Dr. Robert Rea, a retired utility company executive.

Father McGuire was president of Villanova from 1944 to 1954, one of the longest terms ever served by a president. It was during his period as chief administrative officer that Villanova went from college to university.

Following his term as president, Father McGuire became founder of the university's development program.

He left Villanova in 1960 and for the past 20 years has been engaged primarily in parish work. He was elected to the board of trustees in 1971.

The Board of Trustees also approved the communications major for Villanova at the meeting.

Commencement

Commencement Exercises will be held on Sunday, May 18, 1980 in the University Field House. Following are the times of the various ceremonies and the colleges graduating.

Sunday, May 18th at 10:00 a.m. College of Liberal Arts and Sciences, College of Nursing. Sunday, May 18th at 3:00 p.m. College of Commerce and Finance, College of Engineering.

Passes required for admission to Graduation exercises. Four guests per graduate. Sunday, May 18th at 8:00 p.m. University College Graduate School. No passes required for admission.

Saturday, May 17th. 10:00 a.m. NROTC Mass — Commissioning Ceremony; 2:00 p.m. Nursing — Convocation Ceremony; 6:00 p.m. Baccalaureate Mass — No passes required.

Friday, May 16th. Law School commencement exercises, 11:00 a.m. Additional information regarding academic attire, commencement announcements, passes, guest speakers, etc. will be announced. For more information, contact the Vice-President for Student Life.

Dance Club

The dance club will be holding its first general meeting on Monday, January 28, 1980 at 12:15 in 110 Bartley. Those who are interested but cannot attend the meeting should contact the student activities office as soon as possible. Beginner's lessons will be offered so that new as well as old members are urged to attend.

Dance Classes

Modern Dance classes will be offered Spring 1980. Prerequisite: Dance experience and permission of Instructor. Time: Tuesday and Thursday 1:30-2:45. Cost: $50.00 for 24 classes. Call 352-8047.

Musician Wanted

Wanted: Pianist or Percussionist needed to provide music for Modern Dance classes at Villanova University. Hours: Tuesday and Thursday 1:30-2:45. Pay: Negotiable. Call 352-8047.

Library Hours

Effective Wednesday, January 16, the regular hours are as follows: Monday-Thursday — 8 a.m. - 12 midnight; Friday — 8 a.m. - 5 p.m.; Saturday — 9 a.m. - 5 p.m.; Sunday — 12 noon - 12 midnight.

Irish Travel Class

A few spaces are left in Dr. J. Murphy's travel-study courses on Irish Literary History. Classes will meet on Sunday evenings. Contact Dr. J. Murphy, English Dept., 201 Vasey, Extension 262.

History Lecture

On Wednesday, Jan. 23rd, Dr. Bernard Reilly of the History Department will present a seminar entitled "The End of Peasant Society."

The lecture will be held at 7:30 p.m. in the Physics lecture hall in Mendel Hall. The presentation is the second in a series of seminars sponsored by the honors junior class as part of their program entitled "The Me Culture: The Nature of Changing American Values." Refreshments will be served after Dr. Reilly's presentation.

Leadership Posts Open

The Student Committee for Organizational Development is now accepting applications for membership positions. S.C.O.D. provides leadership training and organizational development programs for campus organizations. Applications are available in the Student Activities Office, Dougherty Hall, room 214. They are due by Friday, January 25 at 3 p.m.

Mask and Wig

The Mask and Wig Club of the University of Pennsylvania will present its 92nd annual show, starting Thursday, January 24. This year's musical revue, "DAZE A VU," is a satire of insignificant events of the past, present and future.

The show will play Thursdays through Saturdays from January 24 through February 23 and again March 20 to 29 at the Mask and Wig Clubhouse, 310 S. Quince Street. It will also play at the University's Zellerbach Theatre February 29 and March 1. Thereafter, "DAZE A VU" will embark on a 10-day tour of Eastern states including New York, Boston, Rochester and Syracuse.

Buddhist Course

"The Battle of Ego" introductory course in Buddhist thought and practice will begin January 10 and continue for five Thursday evenings at 7:30. The course will be held at Dharmadhatu Buddhist meditation and study center, 1015 Chestnut St., Suite 906. Cost $20. For further information please call 925-5126.

College Bowl

Beginning January 28 till February 1, the Union Recreation Committee will be sponsoring the College Bowl Tournament. Teams of five persons (four players and one alternate) will be competing for the chance to go to the ACUI regionals on February 22 and 23. Sign ups will take place immediately following Christmas vacation. Get them together now. For more information contact Cathy Lombardozzi or Debbie Melfe in the Union Office at 527-2100 ext. 297 and 298.

Student Organization Leaders

There will be a meeting at 12:45 p.m. on Tuesday, February 5 in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall to discuss student organization budgets for the 1980-81 academic year. All organization presidents, treasurers and moderators are requested to attend. The Dean of Student Activities will explain the entire student organization budget process at that time. Contact Student Activities, 214 Dougherty, for more information.

Volunteers Needed

Volunteer Readers needed for visually handicapped. Please call Social Action Office, Ext. 378.

Accounting Scholarships

The Penna. Institute of Certified Public Accountants is sponsoring its annual accounting scholarship program. Twenty 3600 scholarships will be awarded to the most qualified individuals from those nominated from approximately 67 colleges and universities in Penna.

The nominee must be a full-time student, in the junior class, who will have completed at least 12 semester credits in accounting as part of his/her undergraduate degree. The nominee must be selected by the faculty on the basis of intellectual capacity and qualities of leadership.

Each participating school may nominate one student. Schools with more than 200 accounting majors in its junior class may nominate two students to compete for the scholarship award.

For more information, contact the Accounting Department Chairman. All applications must be returned by February 1, 1980.

Drivers Needed

Do you own a van or station wagon? Earn some spring break money driving students to and from JFK airport in New York City. Depart March 1 evening. Return March 9 afternoon. Contact Dr. J. Murphy, English Dept., 201 Vasey, Extension 262.

Orientation Chairperson Selected

The Student Activities Office is pleased to announce the selection of ELLEN M. TRACY as the 1980 Student Chairperson for Villanova University's orientation program.

Civil Engineers

Tutors are now available, free of charge, for all Civil Engineering Students. Courses include:

Plane Surveying, Statics, Dynamics, Fluid Mechanics, Strength of Materials, Structural Mechanics, Sanitary Engineering I, Transportation Engineering I, Soil Mechanics.

Apply in the Department Chairman's Office. Sponsored by C.-E. Honor Society.

Penn DOT Approves Crosswalk

By MARIANNE LAVELLE

A pedestrian crosswalk on Rte. 320 between the Law School and St. Mary's Hall has been approved by the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation. PennDOT, however, denied two other requests for safety installations on Lancaster Ave.

No measures have yet been taken by Villanova to add a walkway to the Rte. 320 bridge over the Paoli Local railroad tracks. A spokesman for the Public Utility Commission in Harrisburg this week said the PUC had received "no formal or informal complaint of petition from the University" concerning the bridge.

Safer conditions at Villanova Station are still being sought.

This action was first proposed three months ago at a meeting of Villanova, Amtrak, PennDOT, and Radnor officials, which was prompted by the death of freshman Dorothy Zimmerman as she crossed the railroad tracks in October.

According to Fr. John Deegan, vice-president for Student Life, the delay in filing a petition is due to a conflict of interest with the University Lay Lawyers. Morgan, Lewis and Bockius of Philadelphia, the law firm which normally represents the University, also represents the bankrupt Penn Central Railroad Corporation, said Deegan. He said that Penn Central protested their attorney's handling Villanova's petition in this case.

Morgan, Lewis, and Bockius recommended another lawyer, James W. Patterson, to handle the case. Deegan said that Patterson guaranteed that the petition to the PUC would be completed this week.

P.J. Winterhalter said that the walkway over the bridge would be "a second option" for students to cross the tracks if the tunnel under the tracks is flooded. He said, however, that "if the tunnel works and does not flood again, as Amtrak contends, a walkway on the bridge would be a waste of money."

The pedestrian crosswalk, approved by PennDOT for Rte. 320, would include a painted walkway on the highway, along with flashing traffic signals and warning signs.

PennDOT denied the request for permission to install a WALK phase light at the intersection of Lancaster and Ithan avenues. Although PennDOT concluded that there are "more than enough pedestrians crossing to warrant an exclusive WALK phase, this change would probably create more problems than it would solve since it would severely congest traffic in the peak hours and would probably be ignored by most pedestrains anyway."

PennDOT also recommended against lowering the speed limit on Lancaster Ave. from 35mph to 25mph in front of the school. Concluding that 83 percent of the vehicles monitored in this area travel in excess of the 35mph speed limit, PennDOT suggested for "frequent and strict enforcement" of the 35mph limit, rather than a lowering of the limit.

PennDOT made its recommendations in a letter to Radnor township engineer B. Duncan Hubley this month. Radnor township has referred the PennDOT letter to its staff traffic committee which is expected to bring the recommendations to the Radnor Board of Commissioners.

Winterhalter said that although only one of the three requests to PennDOT was approved, "they don't hold equal weight. The crosswalk was the most important of the requests, so it was a major victory on the whole."

Study Grant Awarded

The National Endowment for the Humanities has given Villanova University a grant to evaluate its humanities courses for engineering students.

The grant will cover the costs of conducting an evaluation of the present program by an expert in the humanities-engineering area. It is estimated that the study will take six months.

Dr. Robert Mark, a professor in the department of civil engineering and co-director of humanistic studies in engineering at Princeton University, will conduct the study.

Educators are increasingly concerned about the quality of instruction which supports and enlarges upon professional education, says Dr. John Fielder, associate professor of philosophy and faculty coordinator of the grant. The trend has been to include in such instruction discussion of professional ethics, he says.

Villanova has been a national leader in devising courses that address ethical issues in professional practice. Three years ago, the college of engineering, under Dean Robert Lynch, in cooperation with the philosophy department offered a course on ethics specifically for engineering students. Villanova was one of only six schools nationwide to do so at the time. Since then, Dr. Fielder has helped devise similar courses for health care and business curricula.

To keep standards high, a review committee in the college of engineering recommended that the services of a consultant be sought. Subsequently, Dr. Fielder applied for a N.E.H. grant and in November was notified that Villanova would receive $4,082.

The National Endowment for the Humanities is an independent Federal Agency established in 1965 to support humanistic study in the United States. It operates in five areas: fellowships, research grants, education programs, public programs, and state programs.

Urge Increase in Minorities

By BILL ROCK

The Social Action Committee of the University Senate is approaching the Administration with recommendations on how to increase minority enrollment at Villanova. In its meeting on November 30, the Senate passed the Committee's motion that the University make an increased effort to recruit and retain minority students.

In its report, the Social Action Committee cites a declining percentage of minority students at Villanova. In 1973, 3% of the student body came from minority groups, while in 1978 that number had slipped to 2.5%. In absolute numbers, the decline was from 355 to 243.

To combat this trend, the Committee recommends that the Administration set a definite goal, perhaps to double the minority student population within the next five years.

In addition, it asks the Administration to hire more minority members in key campus positions, in particular faculty positions. It suggests that a black or other minority member as an admissions officer who will concentrate on recruiting in Philadelphia and other areas with large minority populations.

The report further suggests that the Development Office give more attention to finding funds for supporting minority students and that the Registrar compile detailed statistics concerning minority students, especially their drop-out rate.

Lefties Unite —

Demand Your Desks Today!

By BRIAN BUINEWICZ

About three years ago, I wrote a story in the Villanovan on the need for desks for left-handed people in the classrooms. Since that time, a new guard house has been built, work on the multimillion dollar student center continues, and large sums of money are lost through concerts, etc., on campus. But no left-handed desks have been added to the classrooms. Does the University believe all of its students are right-handed? Why must we be stigmatized for being different?

Some very famous people were left-handed. Bach, Leonardo de Vince, Michaelangelo, Babe Ruth, Jack the Ripper and Harry Truman were all left-handed, to name a few. By forcing left-handers to write in uncomfortable contortions in right-handed desks, Villanova could be stifling a future president, artist, or mass murderer. Should we hold back a few dollars for the sake of economy when we could be providing mental stimulation for a future president?

I have found there are four basic positions one can take when trying to write in a right-handed desk, all of which are uncomfortable. One can rotate their body around so they are facing the desk top, but usually one cannot see the board. Crossing your left leg and using your thigh as a rest for your notebook is an easy way to take notes. Of course when your leg falls asleep, everyone wonders why you walk spastically. Pulling another desk to your side and writing on its top works well except in a crowded class. Another person usually wants a place to write also. My favorite and the most comfortable position is placing my right leg under the top of the desk on the right side and straddling the center post supporting the desk top. It is the easiest way to write, but is very hard to get in and out of, and would probably be a poor way for a girl to sit.

Who knows? Who cares.

Welcome back to Villanova . . . the only thing that's changed is the weather . . . the skiers on campus are hoping for a blizzard so they can ski down Mt. OBLIQUITIES

Bibliotherapy Offers Solutions

An adjunct or alternative to psychological counseling, a relatively new therapeutic science which may be traced back to ancient Greece, is being taught at Villanova University.

The library science department is offering a course in bibliotherapy, a method of helping people by "prescribing" reading and audiovisual materials. The course is believed to be unique in the Philadelphia area.

"Books can influence the intellect, will and emotions," says course instructor Rev. Louis A. Rongione, O.S.A. He is the director of Villanova's Falvey Library and world-renowned expert in the field. "For this reason, bibliotherapy may be called the pharmacy of the soul."

By numerous requests, the course will be open to undergraduate students for the first time on Mondays at 5:15 during the spring semester.

"In the past, finding the right book for the right person has been a hit-or-miss attempt," says Mrs. Elizabeth Walsh, library science department chairman. Throughout her career, she remembers receiving a number of calls from parents asking her to recommend books for children who were physically handicapped or emotionally troubled by the death of a friend or a family member.

To assist individuals with very serious medical or psychological problems, a true bibliotherapist will work closely with the patient's physician, psychiatrist, or therapist.

Just as the right book can be helpful, the wrong one can be damaging, warns Fr. Rongione. Therefore, librarians must be well aware of the person's mental state as well as the contents of the material prescribed.

"There are two approaches we can take with each individual," he explains. With the direct approach, librarians select material which tells outright what to expect from a certain affliction. Or, for people who are very sensitive about their problem, they take the indirect approach by choosing a fictional story about a person in a similar situation. In each case, the person is able to relate to the material.

Aside from the general public, people likely to benefit from bibliotherapy are confined prisoners, those addicted to alcohol and drugs, and those with other physical and emotional problems.

Gonzo Journalism Lives

By STEVEN COMBS

Like any school of creative thought, Gonzo journalism evolved through the imitation by many, of a master in the craft. Hunter Thompson is probably most well known through the Doonesbury character modeled after him. Trudeau's 'Uncle Duke' and Thompson are both ex-Rolling Stone correspondents and drug aficionados. Duke's lifestyle is not completely dissimilar to Thompson's, whose favorite pastime is lying nude on his sundeck in Aspen drinking gin and grapefruit juice and blasting "Electric Ladyland" into the clear Colorado sky while he pumps shots from his .44 into the hillside.

Thompson's writing style is an emotional, intellectual journal which reflects his physical and psychological contortions as the inspired madness of a brilliant mind viewing a society gone mad through an acid haze.

The Great Shark Hunt is a collection of Hunter's articles on Watergate, the Superbowl, South America, and Las Vegas. It also covers his political baptism as a candidate for sheriff of Aspen.

He ran on the Freak Power ticket and almost polled enough head voters to win. His platform included building stockades for dishonest, dope-dealers and changing the town's name to Fat City (to ward off land-raping developers). His account follows the political process with a uniquely personal and disarmingly honest flair. Although his political/moral bias is evident in every word, he is so earnestly candid that an emotional version of the truth comes through.

When the going gets weird, the weird turn pro.

He writes viciously about Richard Nixon. Thompson was stung by his absence from Nixon's enemies list, especially after being the first national journalist to compare Nixon with Hitler.

Thompson spends a great deal of time researching his subjects. Whether he's covering the '72 McGovern campaign or the Oakland Raiders' Superbowl bid, he spends weeks getting to know people and looking for clues about their true character. This also accounts for his believability. You cannot dismiss Hunter's remarks as simply drug-crazed rambling when you realize the amount of time he has spent behind-the-scenes in Washington, Oakland, and every whistle stop in between. The story that emerges is not the glossy hype of the national media but a feverish journal of the dealing and drinking that makes this country tick.

Gonzo journalism, then, may be best described as the ability to approach the emotional edge of a story, past all the fronts, and deceptions, to peer out over that edge into the day-to-day workings of a dying society and send off a fast note on what you see before the drugs wear off or the heat catches up with you.

Hunter Thompson doesn't cover a story, he experiences it. The Great Shark Hunt logs these experiences in a way that will leave you refreshed knowing that at least one writer in this country is willing to go out on an emotional and professional limb for the sake of telling the story.

A Turkey for Trekkies

By SHARON WINTERS

Star Trek the movie, is merely a disappointing confection comprised of special effects and character reunions; it could have been more. The lengthy film stretches the thin story well past any believability. No acting could save the inane climax.

The story concerns a mysterious, gigantic, purple cloud which is destroying all in its path to its ultimate destination: Earth. The Federation mobilizes the Enterprise, updated and redesigned, to eliminate the awesome threat to the planet.

Admiral Kirk using the power of his position regains the helm of his beloved ship. He and Scotty approach the vessel in its hanger via shuttle and view the Enterprise from every conceivable angle.

Kirk is a cardboard version of what he once was. He is handicapped by the limits of his role. The new title of admiral and the threat of the purple cloud allows him to display varying degrees of authoritarian concern. In Star Trek the movie, Kirk is in the highly unusual position of not getting the girl! The only "she" that he is allowed is the Enterprise,

An amusing segment of the film involves the reluctance of someone to use the transporter to come aboard the ship. Kirk utilizes his power to command the crew member to come aboard. As the molecules reconverge into human form, Dr. McCoy appears. He begins a tirade about being drafted against his will. McCoy is finally consoled by Kirk on that issue. The doctor soon finds another gripe; his old sick bay has been redesigned.

Mr. Spock boards the ship after the mission is underway. He approaches the Enterprise with a long range shuttle and embarks just in time to fix the warp drives. The Vulcan has not been called for but has come because he senses a being of perfect order that can aid him in his quest to totally eliminate human emotion from his psyche.

After all the main characters are introduced to the film, the plot finally comes into the fore. Kirk orders the Enterprise to approach and then enter the mystery cloud. The visual effects of the foreign object are interesting and the unusual probe placed on the ship by the alien adds "the plot complication." Kirk surmises that the probe can be used to prevent the alien cloud from destroying Earth. As the sparse story continues, the intended climax of the movie can be guessed in advance

Star Trek received so much press that fans as well as those caught by the hype cannot help but be disappointed by the film. It does not deliver enough substance to be the major motion picture that it might have been.

COLLEGE BOWL

The Villanova Union soon brings you a way to challenge your mind in fun and fast-paced competition. During the week of January 28 thru February 1, the Recreation Committee will sponsor a campus College Bowl Tournament. The popular game show of the past is experiencing a fantastic revival and colleges and universities across the nation are getting in on the fun and excitement. If you would like to be part of the competition, get together a five person team (four players and an alternate) and sign up next week outside the Union office. If you'd like to participate but can't quite round up a team, leave your name and phone number in the Union Office and we'll try to help. All students, including graduate students and graduate assistants are eligible. Matches will be played from 11:30-1:30 Monday, Jan. 28 thru Friday, Feb. 1. Best of all, winners in this campus tournament will go on regional competition Feb. 22-23. With any luck, a national trophy might be in our future!! So sign up now outside the Union Office. You can get further information there or by contacting Debbie Melfe, Cathy Lombardozzi, or Jack O'Brien in the Union Office (ext. 297, 298.)
Moderators and judges are also needed the entire week. Moderators will be responsible for enforcing all the rules of the game in a fair and judicious manner. Judges must assist the moderators in ruling on any game procedures. They will also be responsible for ruling on the acceptability of an answer. If you are interested in being a moderator of judge any day during the week, please get in contact with the people listed above as to your availability.

Boycott The Summer Olympics?

By JERRY VENTRESCA

While the Iranian militants continue to hold the 50 Americans hostage in Tehran and Afghanistan is falling to the U.S.S.R. after Russia proclaimed they were invited into that country, an Olympic year has approached. Amid the boycotts and protests in America in retaliation of Russia's "bully-boy" act, there are cries from the American people and threats in the government that the United States will remove itself from the 1980 Summer Olympics, which will be held in Moscow.

Walter Byers, executive director of the NCAA, favors boycotting the Olympic Games. "I think the interest of the United States and its leadership position in the world far surpasses the interests of amateur athletics, even the Olympic Games," said Byers. Meanwhile, Masaji Kiyokawa, vice-president of the International Olympic Committee (IOC), said the Olympics should be held in Russia as scheduled.

Following the raising of the question of a boycott at an emergency meeting of NATO, IOC President Lord Killanin said, "athletes come first and in no way should be prevented from competing by . . . political, racial, or religious discrimination."

Although the NCAA has no power to prevent a boycott of the Games, Byers said he was "speaking only as a citizen" when declaring the act would "send a message to the world that we are not going to keep turning the other cheek to Russia's misbehavior." However the organizers of the U.S. Olympics seem convinced that the boycott talk will end, although they are planning a counterattack against President Carter's suggestion of a boycott or removal of the Games from Moscow. The U.S. Olympics officials interviewed added that an American boycott of the '80 Summer Olympics might lead to a Soviet boycott of the 1984 Olympics, which are to be held in Los Angeles.

The Moscow Games are almost wholly a project of the Soviet government, with high government officials occupying key posts on the organizing committee, and, at the Lake Placid Games, nearly two-thirds of the financing is governmental. Therefore the U.S. officials would feel constrained to boycott the Moscow Games if Carter asks the U.S. Olympic Committee to do so. Also, the President could impose travel restrictions on athletes that would prevent them from journeying to Moscow. Recently, Saudi Arabia became the first country to withdraw from the Games because of Russia's aggression against friendly Afghanistan.

Twenty-eight feet away and off-balance, Tracy Jackson, the Irish's "Miracle Worker," sank the game-winning basket, edging Notre Dame over Villanova 70-69.

"I just let it fire," replied a modest Jackson after the game.

Jackson continues, "Villanova is a strong, tough team. They took advantage of our mistakes, especially our poor shooting on the foul line in the second half."

For the Irish, it took the combined talent and depth of the Notre Dame players, together with Digger Phelps' multiple offenses, alternating defenses (often including a full-court press) and continuous substitution from the bench to take the victory.

Kelly Tripucka, who scored a then career-high 26 points versus Villanova last January in the Palestra, tallied 16 in Tuesday's game at South Bend, while Tracy "Miracle Worker" Jackson contributed 15 more. Center Orlando Woolridge and senior guards Rich Branning and Bill Hanzlik gathered in eight points each.

Also on the side of the Irish was the crowd of the Athletic and Convocation Center. The ACC, renowned for its superior facilities and glorious upsets, was ignited with the Notre Dame students. Although comparatively quiet through the first half, the fans rallied behind their team as the score began to tighten and the clock wound down.

The clock became the center of considerable controversy and dispute. According to some, the clock was not started as soon as the ball was in play on the court, thus leaving more time on the clock.

Referee Hal Grossman feels that this may have been the case, although he emphasizes that this would not have been due to the negligence of the timer. He feels that the margin of error, however slight and possibly only hundredths of a second long, could be eliminated by the use of pressure whistles in the Eastern Eight.

The officials refereeing the game would use special electronic devices which control the clock by remote controls held by the refs. Grossman plans to lodge a recommendation with Dr. Byrd, the director of the league, and the Rules Committee, suggesting the use of pressure whistles. These whistles are currently used in such leagues as the Atlantic Coast Conference.

"This way, the refs are taking the responsibility," explains Grossman. "No game should be taken away from the kids or the coaches by a piece of electrical equipment."

Political Scientist to Run for Senate

By SHARON WINTERS

Dr. John J. Logue, a professor of political science at Villanova, formally announced his candidacy for United States Senate from ...sylvania at a press conference held at the City Line Marriot Hotel on January 21.

John Logue, U.S. Senate candidate.

The Democratic hopeful's platform included views on Afghanistan, the United Nations, Third World countries, Iran and gasoline rationing.

President Carter's embargo of the Moscow Olympics in response to the Soviet Union's occupation of Afghanistan is justified, according to Logue. He feels that, "A community of nations which bars South African athletes from the Olympics because of South Africa's racism should not hesitate to tell the Soviet Union that it cannot host the Olympics until it withdraws its troops from its neighbor's soil."

Logue supports a reformed and restructured United Nations; he considers the current organization too weak to handle situations such as Afghanistan. A stronger and better United Nations which is more in tune to developing nations is required according to Dr. Logue. He added that he was proud that Villanova sponsored the first conference concerning the reforming and restructuring of the international body.

The use of a Marshall-type plan was suggested by the Villanova professor as a method of aiding Third World countries. Monies for this could be obtained from OPEC profits and undersea resources. Poor countries were compared to the poor American farmer; they would like to have "a piece of the action."

Logue did not see economic sanctions as a viable method for dealing with the Iran situation, "they are guaranteed to make us mad at our Allies and mad at the United Nations." Logue feels that with the cooperation of other OPEC nations, a UN-authorized blockade of oil from Iran would be successful.

On the subject of gasoline "rationing by price," Logue said that he felt it was "preposterous and immoral." Since rationing was

...The next step is to inform the ...lty of the basics of the ...UP," stated Dr. James M. ...quist, president of the local chapter. "This will be done primarily through letters to University staff and campus promotional programs."

Collective bargaining would involve most academic faculty members, including department chairpersons and librarians. Garey School of Law faculty would not be represented.

Union supporters say the primary reason for collective bargaining at Villanova is to make it easier to resolve issues in a positive and immediate manner. A contract between faculty members and their representatives would insure that their concerns be heard and acted upon, they contend.

Dr. Berquist emphasizes that it is not the University that runs the election. Rather, the campaign is directed by the National Labor Relations Board, a government agency.

One of the specific contentions of the AAUP is that it will guarantee financial security for Villanova professors through its efforts. Salaries, however, would not be affected until the 1981-82 academic year, as next year's budget is already being determined.

Communications Major Approved

By IRENE SMITH

...Villanova University has re...tly added a communications ...n major to the College of Arts ...d Sciences.

...The major, previously a con...tration in communications ..., was approved by the Board of ...stees at their last meeting in ...cember.

...The change, initiated by ...rren Richardson, chairman of ... new communications arts ...artment, is designed to equip ... student with the necessary ...ills required in the various ...lds of communication.

...The initial proposal for the ...ge was made a year and a half ... in response to student in...est. Since the beginning of the ...entration, instituted two ... ago, the program has grown ... an initial enrollment of ...w students to over eighty at ...sent.

...ames Rinne, director of public ...rs, is pleased with the change. Long associated with public relations and former moderator of the Villanovan, his personal view is one that "the better the background students have in communications, no matter what field they are in, the greater their chances of success are."

The emphasis of the program is one of a liberal arts approach to communications skills. With the new major, students are required to take thirty hours of study in such areas as communications arts, journalism, English, film/theatre, radio and television and speech communication. Those wishing to minor in communications are required to carry fifteen hours of study.

"The new major will have no major effect on the department," stated Richardson. "Additional faculty are not required at this time."

Richardson noted that one objective of the major will be to a typing room for journalists to use.

Richardson remarked that students who have completed thirty hours of work this semester are eligible for a major this May and will receive a degree in communications arts. Many students are also electing to double major having previously minored in communications.

The communications arts major also offers various internships that are available to students in the areas of radio, television, and journalism. Internships range from nine to ten hours of work off campus where the student in addition to practical work will also be required to keep a diary or write a paper to one semester internships that can carry up to fifteen credits at places such as Channel 12 (Philadelphia), American College of Insurance, and WCAU-TV, with consumer advocate Herb Denenberg.

The placement for students who have concentrated in communications range from an alumnus who is working for the Wall Street Journal in Chicago to an anchorman in a Port Arthur, Texas NBC affiliate, to a coordinator for a radio station in a nearby high school.

Mr. Richardson feels that the new major will also attract students to Villanova. He has received a very favorable reaction from graduate schools who approve of the liberal arts approach to a communications major.

People having any questions concerning a communications arts major or minor should see Warren Richardson in St. Mary's hall.

Board Chairman Sees Progress

By MARIANNE LAVELLE

"Every year has been another year of progress for Villanova," said Rev. Francis X. McGuire, new chairman of the University Board of Trustees. "Even during the war, I've never seen a year where the school regressed," he said.

...in the immediate future, I don't see there being a student member of the board itself...

Rev. Francis X. McGuire, O.S.A.

The Board's first priority for progress this year, said McGuire, will be "development of the physical education equipment and facilities." We're planning vast improvements in the facilities for intercollegiate, intramural, club, and women's athletics. In recent years past, the University has done little to improve these facilities.

McGuire also sees the Connelly Center as a sign of the progress of the University. "When I was president of the University (from 1944 to 1954), one of the things I was pushing for was a student center. Finally, here it is. This building is necessary, and will be beneficial for student life."

Though happy with what he sees as the progress made in the recent years, McGuire noted that "Every task we assign ourselves to do is done with difficulty, because of inflation. We are trying to hold down expenses which mount almost daily, while doing our best to keep costs down to a minimum."

When asked how he felt about the faculty vote on collective bargaining, McGuire said "I believe the University is capable of establishing a bargaining procedure apart from forming a union. But I believe they've had these elections before. And it being a free society, they will choose what is best for them."

McGuire said he hopes to meet with student caucus members "within the next month. We hope to meet with them, talk with them, and get their viewpoint."

McGuire does not see however, a chance of bringing a non-voting student member to the Board of Trustees. "We have had success with students on the standing committee of the board, but in the immediate future, I don't see there being a student member of the board itself, although we talk about it occasionally.

Optimistic about the new year, McGuire said that "Villanova's attraction as a worthwhile educational institution is stronger than ever. For 1980, we look forward to an excellent enrollment. I believe we are in the top quarter of education institutions of the United States academically."

"What is especially encouraging is that there are over 100 sons and daughters of alumni. A lot of the fathers and mothers are people whom I dealt with directly as a teacher and administrator. The parents are looking back, and they think so much of the education they received here, that they are encouraging their children to do the same."

Ceremony to Open New Student Center

By TERRY O'TOOLE

Opening ceremonies for the Connelly Center, the University's newest building, will be held on four consecutive days beginning March 18, Rev. John E. Deegan, O.S.A., vice president for student life, announced last week.

Before the public opening a private ceremony will be held for John F. Connelly, a member of Villanova's Board of Trustees and a principal donor to the Connelly Foundation, which contributed $4.8 million to underwrite construction of the new university center.

"We're planning a series of events which would introduce the building to the University and the community," Deegan said, "and show off the building in terms of its uses."

Activities for the opening ceremonies are now being planned by several committees, Deegan said, and although arrangements are not yet firm, the opening will probably include an art exhibit in the building's new gallery, concerts, a special film series, lectures, receptions and other presentations.

"There will be activities at night for various parts of the University community, such as the alumni, the students, the staff and faculty and a night for major contributors and the Augustinians, who were one of the biggest donors," Deegan said.

Deegan and Warren O. Richardson, chairman of the communications department, are co-chairmen of the Program Planning Committee for the opening.

"Overall, the committee is made up of a number of representatives from various parts of the Villanova community," Deegan said. "The idea is to get a lot of people involved, giving us some diversity." (Continued on page 5)

effective during World War II, this method would be more suitable.

The City Line conference was the first in a series of three that Logue had planned for January 21. Logue also had scheduled press conferences in the Rotunda of the State Capitol in Harrisburg at 2:00 p.m. and in the Ramada Inn in Philadelphia at 8:00 p.m.

Dr. Logue commented on the subject of campaign funds by saying that they were "modest at this point." He feels that he will need "$100,000 at least" and acknowledged that his competitors probably have funds in excess of $1,000,000 each. A cocktail party or a dinner may be a future source of funds for the Senatorial hopeful.

Honors Holds Seminar Series

By STEVE HAGGERTY

The first of a series of ten weekly seminars related to Honors Junior Week was held Wednesday evening, January 16 in Mendel Hall's physics lecture hall.

Dr. John A. Doody, director of the Honors program and an associate professor in the philosophy department, conducted the seminar, entitled "Ourselves: The Best Place to Start."

Doody's seminar lecture was well received by a crowded lecture hall.

In his talk, Dr. Doody discussed the idea of the narcissistic person of the seventies and how this narcissism signals a loss of self to social forces.

This past Wednesday the second seminar, entitled "The End of Peasant Society" and directed by Dr. Bernard Reilly of the history department, took place.

This seminar series, sponsored by the Junior class of the Honors program, leads up to Honors Junior Week, to be held March 10-14. The theme for this year's Week is "The Me Culture: The Nature of Changing American Values and Its Implications for the Future."

The Week will consist of lectures and panel discussions on the part of speakers invited to the campus by the Juniors.

Eight more seminars dealing with various aspects of the "Me Culture" will be held on Mondays and Wednesdays in the following weeks. Notice of the dates and times of the upcoming seminars will be posted throughout the campus. All seminars are to be held in the physics lecture hall.

Refreshments will be served after the seminars, and all students and faculty members, as well as the general public are invited to attend.

Russian Relations Examined

By BILL CLARK

In the wake of the Russian invasion into Afghanistan, many Americans have been questioning our response to this new Soviet threat, in particular, our embargo on grain and the proposed boycott of the 1980 Olympic Games in Moscow. Dr. Jeffrey Hahn of the Political Science Department, who studied at the University of Leningrad and received his Ph.D. in Soviet Studies at Duke University, offered his thoughts on the whole Russian situation.

When asked to evaluate our response to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, Dr. Hahn expressed approval of President Carter's actions. "President Carter has shown restraint, without being ineffective, and has gotten most of the world on our side." He did not feel, however, that our actions would have a direct affect on the Soviet presence in Afghanistan.

Dr. Hahn said that a grain embargo and Olympic boycott would only have an "incremental effect" on Soviet actions.

The Russians would be hurt by the loss of American dollars from tourists and television coverage an American boycott would cause, and would probably have a difficult time explaining to the Russian people why so many nations were not present at the Olympics. But, Dr. Hahn said, "The security risks of Afghanistan to the Soviet Union will override any propaganda risks the incident may have."

Dr. Hahn feels that the Soviets consider Afghanistan as a threat to their security. He said that "most people have overlooked the Soviets own Moslem population. There are over 30 million Moslems in Central Asia, and they are the least integrated into Soviet society." The Soviet Union sees the events in such countries as Iran and Pakistan as a "pan-Islamic movement" which could possibly stir up its own Moselm population.

In Afghanistan, Dr. Hahn said, the pro-Soviet Marxist government in power was unable to cope with the rising pro-Moslem groups in that country. Therefore, it installed a new government "as a response to the security needs on its Southern border."

This was not the only explanation of the Soviet invasion given by Dr. Hahn. He stated that the Soviets have always wanted a warm-water port. He pointed out that the only thing that separates Afghanistan from the Indian Ocean is the old province of Baluchistan, which encompasses part of Pakistan and Iran. The Baluchi people have been calling for an autonomous nation for years, and if the U.S.S.R. "can be seen as supporting this separate nation, it is possible that they could gain access to the Indian Ocean."

"If this happened," Dr. Hahn warned, "the Soviets could control the flow of oil to the industrialized countries of the West, including the United States."

To combat this Russian expansion, Dr. Hahn said that it may be necessary to make our military presence felt in such countries as Pakistan, Egypt, and Iran.

To facilitate the strengthening of Iran, Dr. Hahn said "we should do our best to resolve the hostage crisis in Iran by setting up an international tribunal to investigate U.S.-Iranian relations over the last twenty years and possibly give back some of the Shah's money invested in the United States." Dr. Hahn pointed out that even though Ayatollah Khomeini is anti-American, he is also very anti-Communist.

Dr. Hahn regrets, however, that the SALT treaty is being "held hostage" in this crises. "It is a serious mistake to link the SALT treaty with the events in Afghanistan or anywhere else." The United States and the Soviet Union have a common interest in avoiding a nuclear war.

Dr. Jeff Hahn analyzes Russian aggression.

Winterhalter: Union Would Harm Students

By JERRY DOUGHERTY

If Villanova's professors vote for union representation, Student Government President P.J. Winterhalter said he believes they will be shoosing a course that will harm students, the University, and eventually themselves.

The crux of Winterhalter's objections to a unionized faculty lies in the economic effect such an occurrence would have on students.

Last year the faculty received a 7 percent pay raise, but the current inflation rate is averaging 13 percent annually. Winterhalter sees a collective bargaining contract narrowing this gap with a salary increase keeping close pace with inflation. Such a pay raise would necessitate a considerable increase in the University budget, Winterhalter predicts.

"A union contract likely would contain some sort of cost of living clause that would lead to an automatic salary increase. This inevitably would harm the students since tuition and fees account for 96.7 percent of the University budget," Winterhalter said.

Beyond tuition hikes, Winterhalter foresees other undesirable effects of a faculty vote for collective bargaining.

Once a contract was signed, all funds would be restricted; cutbacks in activities would likely occur. Students would find themselves paying more and getting less for their money," he said.

Winterhalter went on to speak of the possibility of grave consequences facing the University should a faculty union be formed.

"With a union contract and the likelihood of anti-inflation clauses, there is the possibility of tuition costs spiraling upward. You may have student strikes, and Villanova might eventually price itself out of existence," he warned.

Faculty members themselves might experience some bad effects from union representation, Winterhalter contends. He expects a layoff clause to be included in any contract, therefore the University could conceivably eliminate some faculty positions if financial circumstances dictated. He also said that the ramifications of a faculty union could threaten the jobs of other University employees.

From a student standpoint, Winterhalter cannot find anything positive emerging from a possible faculty vote in favor of unionization.

"There are not too many bright spots for students in this situation," he commented, adding, "I'm a little disappointed with some faculty members who seem only concerned with their salaries. They should have a broader base of opinion."

Businesses To Get Aid

VILLANOVA, PA., December 3, 1979 — Villanova University has received a government contract to provide free help to ailing businesses in the local area.

The award agreement, as the contract is called, came from the Small Business Institute, an arm of the Small Business Administration. Villanova has been assigned to handle 15 cases during the current academic year.

This new activity complements another permanent service Villanova has offered traditionally, the Small Business Consultants. This is a group of students majoring in business at Villanova who give help and advice to small businesses free of charge. The government contract will allow the university to supplement this service.

Each case assigned to Villanova will be handled by its own committee of students supervised by experienced business faculty, who serve or have served professionally as consultants to business and industry.

"The problems we try to solve for our clients are varied," says Dr. Manuel Avila, coordinator of the program at Villanova. "Advertising, accounting, record keeping, marketing, and legal are just some of the areas we deal with. In some cases, it can even involve changing the nature of the firm."

As the federal government's cases are issued to Villanova, Dr. Avila matches it with a faculty member whose expertise is in the problem area. Then students are assigned on a similar basis to do some of the professor's leg work, including conducting interviews and researching information.

"From the start, we try to get a clear understanding of the firm's problems and its goals and objectives, and what it expects of us. As part of our agreement with the firm, it must provide us with all the information we need. I strongly recommend each team to visit the Small Business Administration offices, and study the information they have on the firm, too," says Dr. Avila.

"Whatever advice we give the firm, we make sure that it is well thought out, thoroughly researched, and greatly substantiated."

Villanova is also part of a consortium of schools across the state, the Pennsylvania Association of Small Business Development centers. This is a new program sponsored by the federal government that also provides assistance to small business.

Grant to Assist High Schoolers

Recently, Villanova University awarded over half a million dollars to assist in developing a career education program which would discourage high school students from waiting until senior year to make career decisions.

Financed by a U.S. Department of Education grant and sponsored by Villanova University and Interboro School District, the program is designed to serve a dual purpose.

The university will train four student interns to develop expertise in career education methods, so they can eventually work with teachers and students to introduce career education in the district's six schools, says Dr. Henry O. Nichols, chairman of Villanova's education department. When the program is completed, its effectiveness will be reviewed, and eventually could become the basis for future programs throughout the country.

The interns, who yet must be selected, will enter the university in July as graduate students of education. During the summer, they will receive training in preparation for their duties at Interboro. Beginning in September, the interns will work in the schools during the day, and attend graduate classes at the university in the evening. The internship degree program will take two years to complete, Dr. Nichols says.

Interboro teachers also will participate in special career education training workshops and in-service programs conducted by Villanova's education department. The workshops, according to program director Thomas D. Treacy of the school district, are designed to supply teachers with additional skills to incorporate career education within regular classroom lessons.

Community-related instruction can be accommodated to all the district's schools, which include approximately 4,000 students. Kindergarten and early primary school children can participate in career awareness activities, such as community walks, which would expose them to the various businesses and services in their neighborhood.

Juniors and seniors eventually could substitute book work with on-the-job experiences, to obtain an overall view of specific careers they are considering. The senior high program was established several years ago under a previous grant, which is being expanded to include all grade levels.

Photographer Honored

Villanovan Photography Editor Dave Coskey received a medallion for excellence in the Kodak International Snapshot Awards contest (KINSA).

The junior communication arts major received a $100 special merit award for his entry. His black-and-white photo of a snow-covered alley in center city, Philadelphia was included in the 1979 KINSA display at the Equitable Gallery in New York City from Jan. 8 through 25.

This exhibit included the winners of local summer contests conducted by 138 newspapers in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, with more than 350,000 entries.

Coskey has been doing photography for six years. He does not wish to become a professional photographer, but hopes to enter the field of public relations.

He has been Photography Editor of the Villanovan for the past year.

Coskey is from Westmont, N.J., and currently resides in Devon.

The Kodak Centennial Medallions for excellence in amateur photography are given this year as part of the company's celebration of its 100th anniversary. Coskey was a winner in the Camden Courier-Post summer snapshot contest, and his entry was submitted to the international competition.

Irish Course Features Trip

The Irish oral tradition will be the topic of a new course being taught this semester at Villanova University, "Irish Literary Heritage," beginning Sunday, January 27, from 7 to 9 p.m.

Capping off the course is a one-week trip to Ireland to visit the sites discussed in the course, and become familiar with the fascinating island that has produced some of the most famous writers in the English language.

"Basically, the materials which Ireland's modern writers have drawn upon in their works was derived from the country's oral tradition," says Dr. James J. Murphy, instructor of the course and an expert in Irish literature.

"These works are not as widely read as the more modern ones, but they are more meaningful in an historical context."

Departure for Ireland is scheduled for Saturday, March 1, from Kennedy Airport, New York, to Shannon Airport, Ireland. While there, participants will visit Counties Clare, Galway, and Mayo. In Dublin, the group will visit places associated with James Joyce and Ireland's most famous theatre, the Abbey. Return trip is March 9.

The course and trip, sponsored by the Honors Program at Villanova, are open to the public. For more information, call Dr. John Doody, director of the Honors Program.

More than 20 colleges and universities from throughout the eastern United States will be represented at Villanova University's 17th Annual Invitational Debate Tournament January 25, 26, and 27.

George Washington University, Temple University, University of Pittsburgh, University of Pennsylvania, the U.S. Military Academy and the U.S. Naval Academy are among those sending up to four teams of students to participate in the tournament. Last year's winner, George Mason University, Va., will be there to defend the championship.

The tournament is sponsored by the Villanova Debate Society and the speech communication department. It is open to the public.

This year's topic is "Resolved: That the federal government should significantly strengthen the regulation of mass media communication in the United States." Eight preliminary rounds of debate will be held, followed by quarter final eliminations to determine the champion.

The tournament will be held in Mendel Hall, on the Villanova campus.

The area in the center which has been referred to as the "rathskellar" has been named the Belle Aire Terrace, Deegan said, and should be open for lunch during the ceremonies. Construction on the 70,000-square-foot building is on schedule with the 18-month contractor's estimate.

"The good weather has been a major factor," Deegan said, "and I think the students have been good as far as treating the project with respect. Like any new building, there will be a few kinks we'll have to get out once it's open. There are some things you never know about until you move in."

The policies and procedures for the operation of the building will be developed by a board of directors, which will be made up of representatives from all sectors of the University community and will report directly to the president. Information on the board and applications for prospective members should be available in February, Deegan said.

"This is a university center," Deegan explained. "It's not just for the students, it's not just for the faculty; all different elements of the community will be able to use the building."

Board Chairman Sees Progress

By MARIANNE LAVELLE

"Every year has been another year of progress for Villanova," said Rev.. Francis X. McGuire, new chairman of the University Board of Trustees. "Even during the war, I've never seen a year where the school regressed," he said.

...In the immediate future, I don't see there being a student member of the board itself...

Rev. Francis X. McGuire, O.S.A.

The Board's first priority for progress this year, said McGuire, will be "development of the physical education equipment and facilities," We're planning vast improvements in the facilities for intercollegiate, intramural, club, and women's athletics. In recent years past, the University has done little to improve these facilities.

McGuire also sees the Connelly Center as a sign of the progress of the University. "When I was president of the University (from 1944 to 1954), one of the things I was pushing for was a student center. Finally, here it is. This building is necessary, and will be beneficial for student life."

Though happy with what he sees as the progress made in the recent years, McGuire noted that "Every task we assign ourselves to do is done with difficulty, because of inflation. We are trying to hold down expenses which mount almost daily, while doing our best to keep costs down to a minimum."

When asked how he felt about the faculty vote on collective bargaining, McGuire said "I believe the University is capable of establishing a bargaining procedure apart from forming a union. But I believe they've had these elections before. And it being a free society, they will choose what is best for them."

McGuire said he hopes to meet with student caucus members "within the next month. We hope to meet with them, talk with them, and get their viewpoint."

McGuire does not see however, a chance of bringing a non-voting student member to the Board of Trustees. "We have had success with students on the standing committee of the board, but in the immediate future, I don't see there being a student member of the board itself, although we talk about it occasionally.

Optimistic about the new year, McGuire said that "Villanova's attraction as a worthwhile educational institution is stronger than ever. For 1980, we look forward to an excellent enrollment. I believe we are in the top quarter of education institutions of the United States academically."

"What is especially encouraging is that there are over 100 sons and daughters of alumni. A lot of the fathers and mothers are people whom I dealt with directly as a teacher and administrator. The parents are looking back, and they think so much of the education they received here, that they are encouraging their children to do the same."

Ceremony to Open New Student Center

By TERRY O'TOOLE

Opening ceremonies for the Connelly Center, the University's newest building, will be held on four consecutive days beginning March 16, Rev. John E. Deegan, O.S.A., vice president for student life, announced last week.

Before the public opening a private ceremony will be held for John F. Connelly, a member of Villanova's Board of Trustees and a principal donor to the Connelly Foundation, which contributed $4.8 million to underwrite construction of the new university center.

"We're planning a series of events which would introduce the building to the University and the community," Deegan said, "and show off the building in terms of its uses."

Activities for the opening ceremonies are now being planned by several committees, Deegan said, and although arrangements are not yet firm, the opening will probably include an art exhibit in the building's new gallery, concerts, a special film series, lectures, receptions and other presentations.

"There will be activities at night for various parts of the University community, such as the alumni, the students, the staff and faculty and a night for major contributors and the Augustinians, who were one of the biggest donors," Deegan said.

Deegan and Warren O. Richardson, chairman of the communications department, are co-chairmen of the Program Planning Committee for the opening.

"Overall, the committee is made up of a number of representatives from various parts of the Villanova community," Deegan said. "The idea is to get a lot of people involved, giving us some diversity." (Continued on page 5)

effective during World War II, this method would be more suitable.

The City Line conference was the first in a series of three that Logue had planned for January 21. Logue also had scheduled press conferences in the Rotunda of the State Capitol in Harrisburg at 2:00 p.m. and in the Ramada Inn in Philadelphia at 8:00 p.m.

Dr. Logue commented on the subject of campaign funds by saying that they were "modest at this point." He feels that he will need "$100,000 at least" and acknowledged that his competitors probably have funds in excess of $1,000,000 each. A cocktail party or a dinner may be a future source of funds for the Senatorial hopeful.

Honors Holds Seminar Series

By STEVE HAGGERTY

The first of a series of ten weekly seminars related to Honors Junior Week was held Wednesday evening, January 16 in Mendel Hall's physics lecture hall.

Dr. John A. Doody, director of the Honors program and an associate professor in the philosophy department, conducted the seminar, entitled "Ourselves: The Best Place to Start."

Doody's seminar lecture was well received by a crowded lecture hall.

In his talk, Dr. Doody discussed the idea of the narcissistic person of the seventies and how this narcissism signals a loss of self to social forces.

This past Wednesday the second seminar, entitled "The End of Peasant Society" and directed by Dr. Bernard Reilly of the history department, took place.

This seminar series, sponsored by the Junior class of the Honors program, leads up to Honors Junior Week, to be held March 10-14. The theme for this year's Week is "The Me Culture: The Nature of Changing American Values and Its Implications for the Future."

The Week will consist of lectures and panel discussions on the part of speakers invited to the campus by the Juniors.

Eight more seminars dealing with various aspects of the "Me Culture" will be held on Mondays and Wednesdays in the following weeks. Notice of the dates and times of the upcoming seminars will be posted throughout the campus. All seminars are to be held in the physics lecture hall.

Refreshments will be served after the seminars, and all students and faculty members, as well as the general public are invited to attend.

Russian Relations Examined

By BILL CLARK

In the wake of the Russian invasion into Afghanistan, many Americans have been questioning our response to this new Soviet threat, in particular, our embargo on grain and the proposed boycott of the 1980 Olympic Games in Moscow. Dr. Jeffrey Hahn of the Political Science Department, who studied at the University of Leningrad and received his Ph.D. in Soviet Studies at Duke University, offered his thoughts on the whole Russian situation.

When asked to evaluate our response to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, Dr. Hahn expressed approval of President Carter's actions. "President Carter has shown restraint, without being ineffective, and has gotton most of the world on our side." He did not feel, however, that our actions would have a direct affect on the Soviet presence in Afghanistan.

Dr. Hahn said that a grain embargo and Olympic boycott would only have an "incremental effect" on Soviet actions.

The Russians would be hurt by the loss of American dollars from tourists and television coverage an American boycott would cause, and would probably have a difficult time explaining to the Russian people why so many nations were not present at the Olympics. But, Dr. Hahn said, "The security risks of Afghanistan to the Soviet Union will override any propaganda risks the incident may have."

Dr. Hahn feels that the Soviets consider Afghanistan as a threat to their security. He said that "most people have overlooked the Soviets own Moslem population. There are over 30 million Moslems in Central Asia, and they are the least integrated into Soviet society." The Soviet Union sees the events in such countries as Iran and Pakistan as a "pan-Islamic movement" which could possibly stir up its own Moselm population.

In Afghanistan, Dr. Hahn said, the pro-Soviet Marxist government in power was unable to cope with the rising pro-Moslem groups in that country. Therefore, it installed a new government "as a response to the security needs on its Southern border."

This was not the only explanation of the Soviet invasion given by Dr. Hahn. He stated that the Soviets have always wanted a warm-water port. He pointed out that the only thing that separates Afghanistan from the Indian Ocean is the old province of Baluchistan, which encompasses part of Pakistan and Iran. The Baluchi people have been calling for an autonomous nation for years, and if the U.S.S.R. "can be seen as supporting this separate nation, it is possible that they could gain access to the Indian Ocean."

"If this happened," Dr. Hahn warned, "the Soviets could control the flow of oil to the industrialized countries of the West, including the United States."

To combat this Russian expansion, Dr. Hahn said that it may be necessary to make our military presence felt in such countries as Pakistan, Egypt, and Iran.

To facilitate the strengthening of Iran, Dr. Hahn said "we should do our best to resolve the hostage crisis in Iran by setting up an international tribunal to investigate U.S.-Iranian relations over the last twenty years and possibly give back some of the Shah's money invested in the United States." Dr. Hahn pointed out that even though Ayatollah Khomeini is anti-American, he is also very anti-Communist.

Dr. Hahn regrets, however, that the SALT treaty is being "held hostage" in this crises. "It is a serious mistake to link the SALT treaty with the events in Afghanistan or anywhere else." The United States and the Soviet Union have a common interest in avoiding a nuclear war.

Dr. Jeff Hahn analyzes Russian aggression.

Winterhalter: Union Would Harm Students

By JERRY DOUGHERTY

If Villanova's professors vote for union representation, Student Government President P.J. Winterhalter said he believes they will be choosing a course that will harm students, the University, and eventually themselves.

The crux of Winterhalter's objections to a unionized faculty lies in the economic effect such an occurrence would have on students.

Last year the faculty received a 7 percent pay raise, but the current inflation rate is averaging 13 percent annually. Winterhalter sees a collective bargaining contract narrowing this gap with a salary increase keeping close pace with inflation. Such a pay raise would necessitate a considerable increase in the University budget, Winterhalter predicts.

"A union contract likely would contain some sort of cost of living clause that would lead to an automatic salary increase. This inevitably would harm the students since tuition and fees account for 96.7 percent of the University budget," Winterhalter said.

Beyond tuition hikes, Winterhalter foresees other undesirable effects of a faculty vote for collective bargaining.

Once a contract was signed, all funds would be restricted; cutbacks in activities would likely occur. Students would find themselves paying more and getting less for their money," he said.

Winterhalter went on to speak of the possibility of grave consequences facing the University should a faculty union be formed.

"With a union contract and the likelihood of anti-inflation clauses, there is the possibility of tuition costs spiraling upward. You may have student strikes, and Villanova might eventually price itself out of existence," he warned.

Faculty members themselves might experience some bad effects from union representation, Winterhalter contends. He expects a layoff clause to be included in any contract, therefore the University could conceivably eliminate some faculty positions if financial circumstances dictated. He also said that the ramifications of a faculty union could threaten the jobs of other University employees.

From a student standpoint, Winterhalter cannot find anything positive emerging from a possible faculty vote in favor of unionization.

"There are not too many bright spots for students in this situation," he commented, adding, "I'm a little disappointed with some faculty members who seem only concerned with their salaries. They should have a broader base of opinion."

Businesses To Get Aid

VILLANOVA, PA., December 3, 1979 — Villanova University has received a government contract to provide free help to ailing businesses in the local area.

The award agreement, as the contract is called, came from the Small Business Institute, an arm of the Small Business Administration. Villanova has been assigned to handle 15 cases during the current academic year.

This new activity complements another permanent service Villanova has offered traditionally, the Small Business Consultants. This is a group of students majoring in business at Villanova who give help and advice to small businesses free of charge. The government contract will allow the university to supplement this service.

Each case assigned to Villanova will be handled by its own committee of students supervised by experienced business faculty, who serve or have served professionally as consultants to business and industry.

"The problems we try to solve for our clients are varied," says Dr. Manuel Avila, coordinator of the program at Villanova. "Advertising, accounting, record keeping, marketing, and legal are just some of the areas we deal with. In some cases, it can even involve changing the nature of the firm."

As the federal government's cases are issued to Villanova, Dr. Avila matches it with a faculty member whose expertise is in the problem area. Then students are assigned on a similar basis to do some of the professor's leg work, including conducting interviews and researching information.

"From the start, we try to get a clear understanding of the firm's problems and its goals and objectives, and what it expects of us. As part of our agreement with the firm, it must provide us with all the information we need. I strongly recommend each team to visit the Small Business Administration offices, and study the information they have on the firm, too," says Dr. Avila.

"Whatever advice we give the firm, we make sure that it is well thought out, thoroughly researched, and greatly substantiated."

Villanova is also part of a consortium of schools across the state, the Pennsylvania Association of Small Business Development centers. This is a new program sponsored by the federal government that also provides assistance to small business.

CENTER FOR CONCERN

Christian Life Community, Campus Ministry, Mendel Basement, Villanova University, Villanova, Pa. 19085

Center for Concern is a student-run, student-directed, student-oriented center to educate the community, especially the Villanova community, about the many groups and organizations working in the field of peace and justice. Grant to Assist High Schoolers

Recently, Villanova University was awarded over half a million dollars to assist in developing a career education program which would discourage high school students from waiting until senior year to make career decisions.

Financed by a U.S. Department of Education grant and sponsored by Villanova University and Interboro School District, the program is designed to serve a dual purpose.

The university will train four student interns to develop expertise in career education methods, so they can eventually work with teachers and students to introduce career education in the district's six schools, says Dr. Mary O. Nichols, chairman of Villanova's education department.

When the program is completed, its effectiveness will be reviewed, and eventually could become the basis for future programs throughout the country. The interns, who yet must be selected, will enter the university in July as graduate students of education. During the summer, they will receive training in preparation for their duties at Interboro. Beginning in September, the interns will work in the schools during the day, and attend graduate classes at the university in the evening. The internship degree program will take two years to complete, Dr. Nichols says.

Interboro teachers also will participate in special career education training workshops and in-service programs conducted by Villanova's education department. The workshops, according to program director Thomas D. Treacy of the school district, are designed to supply teachers with additional skills to incorporate career education within regular classroom lessons.

Community-related instruction can be accommodated to all the district's schools, which include approximately 4,000 students. Kindergarten and early primary school children can participate in career awareness activities, such as community walks, which would expose them to the various businesses and services in their neighborhood.

Juniors and seniors eventually could substitute book work with on-the-job experiences, to obtain an overall view of specific careers they are considering. The senior high program was established several years ago under a previous grant, which is being expanded to include all grade levels.

Photographer Honored

Villanovan Photography Editor Dave Coskey received a medallion for excellence in the Kodak International Snapshot Awards contest (KINSA).

The junior communication arts major received a $100 special merit award for his entry. His black-and-white photo of a snow-covered alley in center city, Philadelphia was included in the 1979 KINSA display at the Equitable Gallery in New York City from Jan. 8 through 25.

This exhibit included the winners of local summer contests conducted by 138 newspapers in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, with more than 350,000 entries.

Coskey has been doing photography for six years. He does not wish to become a professional photographer, but hopes to enter the field of public relations.

He has been Photography Editor of the Villanovan for the past year.

Coskey is from Westmont, N.J., and currently resides in Devon.

The Kodak Centennial Medallions for excellence in amateur photography are given this year as part of the company's celebration of its 100th anniversary. Coskey was a winner in the Camden Courier-Post summer snapshot contest, and his entry was submitted to the international competition.

Irish Course Features Trip

The Irish oral tradition will be the topic of a new course being taught this semester at Villanova University, "Irish Literary Heritage," beginning Sunday, January 27, from 7 to 9 p.m.

Capping off the course is a one-week trip to Ireland to visit the sites discussed in the course, and become familiar with the fascinating island that has produced some of the most famous writers in the English language.

"Basically, the materials which Ireland's modern writers have drawn upon in their works was derived from the country's oral tradition," says Dr. James J. Murphy, instructor of the course and an expert in Irish literature.

"These works are not as widely read as the more modern ones, but they are more meaningful in an historical context."

Departure for Ireland is scheduled for Saturday, March 1, from Kennedy Airport, New York, to Shannon Airport, Ireland. While there, participants will visit Counties Clare, Galway, and Mayo. In Dublin, the group will visit places associated with James Joyce and Ireland's most famous theatre, the Abbey. Return trip is March 9.

The course and trip, sponsored by the Honors Program at Villanova, are open to the public. For more information, call Dr. John Doody, director of the Honors Program.

More than 20 colleges and universities from throughout the eastern United States will be represented at Villanova University's 17th Annual Invitational Debate Tournament January 25, 26, and 27.

George Washington University, Temple University, University of Pennsylvania, the U.S. Military Academy and the U.S. Naval Academy are among those sending up to four teams of students to participate in the tournament. Last year's winner, George Mason University, Va., will be there to defend the championship.

The tournament is sponsored by the Villanova Debate Society and the speech communication department. It is open to the public.

This year's topic is "Resolved: That the federal government should significantly strengthen the regulation of mass media communication in the United States." Eight preliminary rounds of debate will be held, followed by quarter final eliminations to determine the champion.

The tournament will be held in Mendel Hall, on the Villanova campus.

Center

The area in the center which has been referred to as the "rathskellar" has been named the Belle Aire Terrace, Deegan said, and should be open for lunch during the ceremonies. Construction on the 70,000-square-foot building is on schedule with the 18-month contractor's estimate.

"The good weather has been a major factor," Deegan said, "and I think the students have been good as far as treating the project with respect. Like any new building, there will be a few kinks we'll have to get out once it's open. There are some things you never know about until you move in."

The policies and procedures for the operation of the building will be developed by a board of directors, which will be made up of representatives from all sectors of the University community and will report directly to the president. Information on the board and applications for prospective members should be available in February, Deegan said.

"This is a university center," Deegan explained. "It's not just for the students, it's not just for the faculty; all different elements of the community will be able to use the building."

Wildcats Victorious At Spectrum

By BETH WHITE

The Villanova-Penn game is more than a traditional Big 5 rivalry. Every year, one member of the Wildcat squad has had a standout performance versus the Penn Quakers.

Last year, it was then-sophomore Tom Sienkiewicz, scoring 39 points and breaking five scoring records. The outside jump shot, which has become the trademark of the 6'2" guard, made its debut in the match against the Quakers (last) February 13.

Bob Weinhauer, head coach of the Quakers, admitted, "We just overlooked him (Sienkiewicz) last year. Also, we couldn't guard him from the free throw line, where he scored 21 of his 39 points."

Last Saturday, one of the starting five in last year's contest had his glory game. Junior forward Alex Bradley flashed the same ol' style that made him an All-Eastern Eight pick last year.

Bradley has the knack of using his 6' 6" frame to power his way around equally sizeable forwards and centers. This year especially, he has improved his ball-handling ability, enabling him to drive incredibly smooth layups and score inside the key.

Bradley tallied a game-high 16 points, converting on four of 11 from the floor and shooting 100% on the stripe. Bradley eagerly assumed his role as leader of the aggressive Wildcat offensive attack. Freshman center John Pinone scored 12 points overall and nabbed 12 rebounds also to lead the Villanova defense. A first-half explosion by senior Marty Caron netted him nine points and four rebounds and marked him on the record books as the third leading scorer. Usually strong guards Sienkiewicz and Rory Sparrow were kept to a minimum by Quaker sensation Jame s Salters.

Freshman center George Noon turned in his best performance so far this season, netting 14 points and a handful of rebounds. Another freshman, forward Paul Little, canned 10 points and three off the boards.

Quaker coach Weinhauer commended Salters as, "the best guard in the Big Five, barring none."

Coach Rollie Massimino, ever competent at the Wildcat helm, commended Bradley's performance by saying, "Alex is always there, playing well, when we need him." Massimino adds that, "Alex is a true forward and a terrific person as well."

but if concentration is broken during the sampling procedure, a second or third taste may be required before moving on to the next glass. "Generally speaking, one taste per sample is enough," says Steinhubl.

Most days, Steinhubl and his associates taste beer which is ready to go into cans and bottles on an assembly line. After tasting this "filtered" beer, the testers will gather to smell, swirl, drink and swallow "bulk" or fermenting beer; the unfinished product.

Following an average half-hour tasting session, Steinhubl gathers his notes and joins his colleagues at the conference table to discuss the beers until a consensus is reached. "For samples to not meet our standards is very rare," says Steinhubl proudly.

On those days when he is tasting, Steinhubl's daily agenda is altered accordingly. "We wear no aftershave or cologne which might interfere with our ability to smell the beer," he says. "We also must watch what we eat on testing days for obvious reasons; eat onions at noon and you'll have a real problem tasting beer at four o'clock." And, of course, Steinhubl and his co-workers are non-smokers, "except for an occasional cigar," a long-standing custom following a tasting session.

Touring the Connelly Center

By SHARON WINTERS

The Connelly Center, which will soon house a multitude of student diversions, will open its doors, as scheduled, on March 18, according to the Director of the Center, Marc Tuchman.

The upper level of Connelly Center will have a directory in the entrance hall. To the left of the directory, a lounge with a fireplace will be used for reception activities. On the right, a "commons" or less formal lounge area will double as a mobile shopping center. Carts with various items for sale will circulate in the area including one which will be set aside for use by campus organizations. This level will also have an exhibition room, which can be divided into two art galleries, making it possible to show student artwork and outside exhibits simultaneously. Another feature of the upper level will be a room equipped with special chairs and earphones for the discerning audiophile; a selection of music, including the campus radio station broadcasts, will be supplied.

One of many food service areas in the Rathskeller

An atrium, with a skylight above and a planter below, opens the way to the Belle Aire Terrace on the lower level. Scattered booths will provide food and beverages and, if a license is obtained, beer could be sold in this area. This section will have movable chairs and tables around a small stage. The Terrace also has a fireplace.

Two game rooms, divided by sound-proof glass partitions, will be in the Center. One will have seven billiard tables and the other will house 25 electronic games.

A series of ticket booths will be opened after basketball season to alleviate confusion and consolidate sales. This one area will serve to provide a centralized location for all campus activities to sell tickets.

Another major feature in the lower level is a movie theater which can also be utilized for small stage productions or concerts. Seating capacity is 106, including areas for the handicapped, specially designed to accommodate wheelchairs.

The Center will also contain a snack shop, a multipurpose room which has the capabilities of being separated into four smaller rooms and an area near the Belle Aire Terrace that may be rented to an outside travel agency.

The grounds surrounding the building have potential for concert or stage use in favorable weather, in addition to the internal facilities.

Villanovan Bears Olympic Torch

By VINCENT HAUSMANN

Amid doubt, speculation and discussion as to whether the Olympic Games in Moscow will go on, be moved or postponed the 1980 Winter Games will be held at Lake Placid, New York, barring any unforseen problems (snow shortage included).

Part of those plans will include Villanova sophomore Maureen Sullivan. Sullivan, a member of the Villanova women's cross country and track teams, was chosen to represent Pennsylvania in the 1000- mile Olympic torch journey from Virginia (the torch will be delivered from Greece) to Lake Placid.

Along with 51 other representatives, Maureen will take part in the relay run beginning on January 31 at 9:30 and concluding February 9. She will run from Langley Air Force Base in Virginia to Washington, D.C., where she will take part in a ceremony to be attended by President Carter. Along with other runners, she'll make her run through Baltimore, Wilmington and from there will arrive in Philadelphia for a ceremony to be held at Independence Hall on February 3 at 12:00 noon.

Sullivan, who was born in Philadelphia and now lives in Morris Plains, New Jersey, will also climb the steps of the Philadelphia Art Museum in typical "Rocky" style. The torch will be passed in Philadelphia and be picked up again by Sullivan at Washington's Crossing. The run will then continue through New York and other stops before finally culminating at Lake Placid on February 9.

Opening ceremonies for the Olympics will begin on February 13. The 52 runners will meet outside the Olympic Stadium before the ceremony and draw to see who will light the torch at the opening of the games. Sullivan, naturally hopes to be the lucky name drawn out of the hat but wouldn't be too depressed if she were not chosen.

"If someone else were to light the torch I would not be that disappointed," stated Sullivan. The Olympic Committee organized orientation programs this past summer and we have grown very close. We're like a family."

In addition to her usual preparations and her running for the track and cross country teams, Sullivan has begun lifting weights to enable her to carry the three pound torch the approximately eighty miles she will run.

Three people will be running at all times with one member carrying a torch, one runner carrying an Olympic flag and another carrying an American flag.

Sullivan was one of 6,000 applicants to submit three essays to the Olympic Committee last year expressing interest in the run. On the basis of her application she was chosen as one of five finalists. She eventually won the competion which also included a four-mile run in Washington, D.C.

Senioritis Strikes Campus

By CAROL BARRALE

Ah, second semester senior year! Yes that time when all May graduates get this uncontrollable urge for a sabbatical of "no more pencils, no more books . . ." The Infirmary reports that the infectious period for this senior sabbatical, known in medical circles as "senioritis," extends from January to May. Its symptoms are temporary, but its effects can be fatal.

This disease can strike unsuspecting seniors anytime, anywhere. In its early stages "senioritis" takes the form of mild laziness and a tendency toward physical inertia — taking courses like "Introduction to Basket Weaving I", "I Love Music II", pass/fail, and "Advanced Breathing" with lab.

The second stage is earmarked by extreme laziness and mild indifference — starting classes at the end rather that the beginning of the drop/add period. At stage three, a more advanced stage, sentimentalism sets in. The victim now begins to make note of everything he does for "the last time"; the last time for drop/add, the last first day of classes, the last time he ate a Pie Shoppe hoagie with his left hand, etc.

In the final stages, the victim is known to skip classes entirely, to walk around dazed with permanent circles around his eyes from partying too hard, to hyperventilate at the mere mention of a paper or test and to become hysterical at the mention of "life after graduation." Some extreme cases have been reported where job hysteria has reached fanatical stages. The victim beseiged by a lack of employment after May 18, begins applying for all sorts of strange jobs.

One case documents a coed, so distraught by the prospect of no job prospects, that she applied for the position of bag lady at Philadelphia's Suburban Station, where benefits included a 4-ply shopping bag, a reserved spot on the largest bench after 12 a.m., and first choice at raiding trash bins. Another case tells of a senior male who made preparations to devote his life to making the world right for the lefties.

One of the most famous cases of "senioritis," is that of a woman named Sue. She was your average 21-year-old, but not for long. She was a second semester senior with a diagnosed case of chronic "senioritis." Infirmary officials gave her five months, but Sue gave herself five days. Hence, she became known to unconcerned friends as Suicidal Sue.

Sue quickly progressed through the four stages. By May, Sue's condition was critical. Job hysteria became extreme in Sue as she withdrew from reality into a semi-comitose state. Her self-worth hit an all time low as Sue was offered the honor of poster child for the Autistic Child Federation. On the fifth day Sue gave herself, Sue was saved. For at graduation ceremonies, Sue accidentally bumped into her mother who informed her that she had gotten the job she applied for in December — when normal. Sue went on to a successful career as a representative for the nationwide Suicide Hotline.

Another sad case is the one of Chem E. Kowalski. Chem was inflicted with overwhelming proportions of listlessness and apathy. His three programmable calculators remained unused and dusty. No one had ever seen him in the computer room for weeks. Even the thought of separating gases by electrolysis or going for an interview in Florida for a $23,000 a year job could not excite him. All he did was stay in bed and read his issue of "Graduating Engineer," mumbling "Will I really go bald and become dull?"

These cases are sad, but these victims survived. Research shows the only cure for "senioritis" is to satisfy the uncontrollable urges, until which time graduation ensues. At that time, most major symptoms will cease. Recuperation will take at least a month, and the victim may be permanently hung over . . . but, he had a great time getting that way.

More Contact With Board?

The election of Father Francis McGuire as chairman of the Villanova Board of Trustees calls attention to Villanova's governing body, its past relationships with the Villanova community, and its future relationships with student, faculty, and administration.

The Board of Trustees is responsible for all decision-making policies. All motions, both student and faculty, that pass the University Senate must be approved by the Board. The Senate has only the power to make recommendations.

According to the University Senate Constitution the Executive Committees of the Senate and the Board are to meet during the school year.

The meetings are of an informal nature and ideally provide an open channel of communication between student and university government. One of these meetings was to have been held in November of 1979. However, according to S.G.A. President P.J. Winterhalter, the meeting was cancelled "because of the Board's hectic time schedule."

Winterhalter hopes to have a closer relationship with the Board and its new chairman. "We hope to start out on a good footing with the new Board," he said.

Although Winterhalter's intentions and plans are good, the fact of the matter is that there exists a limited channel of communication between the University population and the Board.

What is a more grave concern is the general student feeling that this situation is to be expected from those who handle University governance.

The University of Pennsylvania has placed a non-voting student on its board within the past two years. Thomas Devine, outgoing board chairman was on the record as opposed to this idea. New Trustee chairman McGuire does not see the possibility of a student member of the board in the near future.

He did, however, state that he was hopeful that successful communication and relations with student representatives would be achieved via the present standing committees of the Board.

The Villanovan shares that hope but realistically must be mindful that it is dangerously simple to accept the appearance of communication, accessibility, and consideration of student feeling when there is still no direct contact with the Board.

Closed meetings, cancelled meetings, and undisclosed agendas cannot be satisfactory to the major source of funds the University has: its students.

Danger Still Exists

At first, the phrases "talk is cheap" and "life is precious" appear to have nothing in common. But perhaps it is the best way to explain the situation which now confronts Villanova. We all cheered and had high hopes when students, administrators and government officials pulled together in an effort to resolve the traffic problems around the school. Meeting after a tragic event, they sought to make it safer for students to move in and around the campus. We have seen progress.

Amtrak has renovated the underpass which was an earlier center of controversy by improving drainage and installing better lighting. In a letter to Radnor Township this month, the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation (PennDOT), outlined its recommendations. They have already installed a crosswalk across route 320 and are presently arranging to have a pedestrian activated "walk" signal placed there. One key issue remains; the overpass which students continue to use despite these improvements.

In a recent issue of The Suburban and Wayne Times, it is stated that the school still has not filed any kind of formal petition for the addition of a pedestrian walkway alongside the bridge. The reason cited was that there is a conflict of interest involved with the school's lawyers since they represent both the school and the old Penn Central Railroad, necessitating the appointment of a new lawyer.

Father Deegan has said that processing of the petition has begun. But this does not erase the fact that more than three months have passed without a petition being drafted. It is encouraging to see the results that can be realized when the school works with the town and state officials. Area representatives are more aware of the seriousness of the problems which beset us here. Let us hope that the remedy of this problem will not occur only after tragedy takes another life.

Proud Alumnus

To the Editor:

As a 1967 graduate of Villanova and a present administrator at Notre Dame, I had the opportunity to attend the Villanova-Notre Dame basketball game in South Bend on January 15. Never have I been more proud to be a Villanova alumnus.

Rollie Massimino's coaching — especially his tactical use of substitutions in the last five minutes of the game — was nothing less than brilliant. The contagious enthusiasm displayed by the pep band and cheerleaders throughout the contest was overwhelming and clearly outshone that of their counterparts at Notre Dame.

And the true spirit of Villanova surfaced at the conclusion of the heartbreaking defeat when the band immediately stood and played "V for Villanova." It is at times such as these that the "class" of Villanova and its student body rises to the top. Villanova University truly is Number 1.

In closing I am already anxiously awaiting Notre Dame's trip to the friendly confines of the Palestra next January. Let's go Wildcats!

Sincerely,
Paul J. Reynolds
Placement Specialist

Connelly Center

To the Editor:

In response to Ellen Hartley's letter in the previous edition, I will submit my views.

"Our" Connelly Center still belongs to "us." It will fill a void on this campus in a very positive way, by allowing students to congregate there. This will cause the library to become quite empty of talkers, thus allowing you, (and others), to study, and if you can't work there, try Tolentine.

The fireplace will come in handy on a raw day, or just to sit in front of and relax with someone special. It will also be a marvelous place to toast marshmallows! As for the "chiefs," they went beyond the call of duty in the esthetic beauty department. An "architectual monstrosity" does not have an indoor, three leveled, twelve hundred square foot atrium and outdoor planters, benches, and patios. For entertainment we finally have electronic games outside of the pizza palaces, a music lounge complete with headsets, a cinema with two hundred seats, and a rathskeller. And since not everyone Following Russia's military aggression in Afghanistan, many retaliatory actions by the United States have been suggested. President Carter has stated that unless the Soviet Union removes its troops from Afghanistan within a month, the U.S. will pull out of the Olympics. We approached some Villanova students to see how they felt. We asked: Should the United States boycott the 1980 Olympics in Moscow?

Jack Pyrah, assistant track coach
For the kids, it would be a shame if they cannot run. I do not think a boycott will influence the Russians.

Carol Gilsinger, sophomore
Yes, I think so. It would hurt the Russians by taking away their money. I feel sorry for the runners, but they are running for their country.

Willie Sydnor, junior
I think it would only be good if a bunch of other nations joined us.

Keith Brown, senior
You cannot divorce politics and athletics. As an athlete I would say no, but if the people in charge say yes, we'll have to do it.

Joan Marano, freshman
Yes, we should. If President Carter says so, we should go along. I know the athletes have spent time training, but this is more important.

Chris Flanagan, sophomore

lives nearby, a travel agency is essential. I'll keep my opinion on the mall open until I see the prices, (they can't be as high as Kennedy).

In the past two decades Villanova University has built: Mendel Hall, and the Chemical Engineering Building, as well as St. Mary's, Stanford and Good Counsel. For a school that needs to concentrate on class and dorm space, I'd say they have done quite well. As for parking space, which is an "architectual monstrosity," we already have two lots that would make even Gimbels blink in amazement.

Very poor planning? Waste of money? Hah! I can hardly wait for March!

Last Shot

We've been comin' here for four years and for four years Villanova has been stickin' it to us. We wanna' know how come? First you leave us out of "Who's Who," then you refuse to nominate us for any fellowships and now you won't even announce our names at graduation! We the merely average, unknown and apathetic have been passed over as trifles one too many times.

Just because our talents lie in other areas like social work is no reason to exclude our names for graduation. After all, we've gone through much more hell than the Honorables ever have. Do you know how hard it is to study an entire semester's work the night before an exam, to face teachers with lame excuses, to invent exotic diseases for cutting class, and last but not least, to face our parents when the grades come out? We could take the easy way out and study every night, too. But no, we sacrifice our dignity to keep Villanova "interesting."

In all seriousness, the students with honors should be congratulated for their fine work. We're all proud of them. But we're just as much a part of Villanova as anybody else. Can't we hear our names announced just this once? Please. It's our last shot. Besides, the parental units are counting on it.

Sincerely,
The Majority of the Senior Class

Intramurals

To the Editor:

Again we find that the Intramural Department is not doing its job. They seem to forget that commuters comprise a majority of the student population, but through lack of publicity and coordination within the intramural department, commuters are left out. If we do not hear about an upcoming event by word of mouth or by accident, we are not allowed to participate.

I am specifically referring to the women's volleyball entry from the A.C.S. Through a lack of coordination within the intramural office, we were not allowed to field a team. A team was formed in time but a mix-up on the starting date kept them out of the league.

In the future, we hope that the intramural department makes some effort to get the commuters involved. Better publicity and a more efficiently run organization would be a good start. Maybe then the commuters will become a part of the program, rather than outsiders looking in.

New Semester Underway

Another semester now is under way. With it comes many new problems, many more circumstances that are sure to bring controversy to our university. "Our University" — there is a funny phrase. Just whose university is this? The people who rule this land are called the Board of Trustees. Most people who know anything about Villanova University know about our infamous Board. They're the people who come up with all the new and exciting ideas while continually pondering on many of the old ones. The Administration also lay some claim to "their university."

They are the people who must make the day by day decisions for the problems which come up and the issues which must be faced. In many respects they have valid claims to the notion that this is "their university." Moving down the ladder emerges the faculty of Villanova. They too consider Villanova "their university." They are the people who do the most important and basic work: they teach.

Well, you must admit they do put forth a gallant effort. Okay, I will settle for the idea that they try hard! One must definitely agree that the faculty does have a valid claim that this is "their university."

The staff also claims this to be "their university." After all they spend practically one third of their life devoted to servicing in some respect their home. Truly to them this is "their university."

That leaves us with the Alumni and the students. Can they really claim that this is "their university?" After all, they only pay for it. They pay for the Board, the Administration, the faculty, the staff. When it comes right down to it, who really is servicing who? Are members of the Board, administration, faculty and staff servicing the student? Or are the students servicing the others? The facts of the matter are that each should communicate with each other rationally and maturely. No one singularly can call the University "their own."

This is Villanova University. I hope that the Board of Trustees, the Administration, the faculty, the staff, alumni and students all will realize this. No one can get along without the other. I hope the faculty will remember this when it comes time to vote on unionization. I hope the administration will remember when they vote on the budget. When the Board can't wait for Senate to issue its priorities of this university, but immediately begin to investigate building and improving athletic facilities while tuition continues to spiral and endowment depletes, they apparently can't remember.

To the Villanova University community remember this is "our university," but it also is the university of the other guy. Let's stop trying to kid each other.

P. J. Winterhalter
Student Body President

Social Action

The Social Action Committee of the University Senate is charged with "responsibility for recommending to the Senate changes in University policy in areas of social concern and sensitivity." The committee is composed of administrators, faculty and students. These people are chosen to represent the interest and express the opinion of their constituency. The most recent accomplishment of the committee has been the introduction of a motion concerning recruitment and retention of minority students.

This motion was voted on by the Senate at the November 30, 1979 meeting and passed. Presently the committee has various areas of concern. Most importantly the concern lies with the Villanova community itself. If you have any issues which you would like to see acted upon which would benefit Villanova in the area of social concern, feel free to bring them to the committee.

A letter or note can be sent through the University Senate office or the S.G.A. The committee is genuinely interested in hearing your views, remember we're here for you.

Activities and Services

Welcome back. Everyone in the Activities and Services Committee hopes everyone had a merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. Well, we are back, and it is time to get to work. The first project for the New Year is planning and organizing an S.G.A. picnic to be held sometime in April. It should prove to be a great party-time, a good way to unwind before finals. The Student Government Association is now, as always at the beginning of each semester, running a membership drive.

Would you like to become part of the strongest student voice in university policy making? Would you like to meet all kinds of people? Would you like to join an organization that is going places and actually getting things done, as is illustrated by the very positive results of the Traffic Safety demonstration? So everyone come out and join the Student Government Association.

We have several committees for one to get involved with. Stop by Room 204 Dougherty Hall and give us a shot.

The ACS Welcome Back

First of all, the A.C.S. would like to welcome you all back from the holidays. All of the members hope that the vacation met your expectations.

One of the criticisms echoed throughout campus has been that the A.C.S. has not been active enough. With the lineup of events planned for this semester, we hope to change that image. Look for ski trips, lectures, and an upcoming party early in February. We will also be holding a Bingo Night on March 20.

There will be three parties this semester, the first of which will be an ice skating party at Radnor Rink, which should be a lot of fun. Tickets will be available at meetings or A.C.S. members. Tickets will also be available at the A.C.S. office located in 213 Dougherty. The other parties will be spread out during the semester. More information will be available at all A.C.S. meetings. General meetings will be held every other Tuesday at 12:45 in the North Lounge. Look for posters announcing meetings and upcoming events.

The ski trips will be basically a day trip to Spring Mountain. They will be scheduled as demand for them and weather dictates. For about ten dollars you will receive lift tickets and all rentals. The trip last year was highly successful, and hopefully will be so this year. Transportation will be by carpool. You must pickup information at the A.C.S. office and have your money in at the specified time.

Special events, including lectures and bingo games will also be held during this semester. Lectures will be directed to commuting problems, in which, we hope will aid the Villanova commuter. The Bingo Game, another successful holdover from last year, is a fund-raising event. There are many prizes and a good time for all. We hope to see you there.

It is obvious that to bring this all about, we are going to need your support. We ask that you attend at least one meeting to see what the A.C.S. is about. There are several committees; social, communications, athletic, and ad-hoc. All need your input.

The Social Committee is responsible for planning parties, lectures, and special activities. The Communications Committee writes the supplement, letters, and uses other general methods of communicating the A.C.S. goals and purposes to the commuter. The Athletic Committee gets the commuter involved in intramural athletics and organizes trips to sporting events. The Ad-Hoc Committee takes care of the other odds and ends, including locker distribution.

This new responsibility was given to the ACS, in conjunction with Dean Clay, in hopes to rectify what was previously an inadequate system. Work in the committees takes a minimal amount of time. It is a good thing to look into if you want to become involved. The first meeting is January 29, 12:45 in the North Lounge. Hope to see you there.

A.C.S. NOTES

— First meeting — Jan. 29, 12:45 in the North Lounge.
— Lockers are being distributed in Bartley Hall through Dean Clay's office. It is located in Bartley 102.
— Emergency Car Care Kit is still available in the Student Activities Office on the second floor of Dougherty Hall.
— Surprise! We didn't change our name over the holidays.

Karate on Campus

By ROBERT COUREY

A little known club on campus is the Karate Club. It is actually a class consisting of approximately 65 people; some of the more serious students of the class compete in the tournaments. The class fee is $25 per semester and the club meets on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m.

The Karate class is coed. Meg McGee is the president, and Mr. Don Kennedy, a renowned martial artist, is the head instructor.

Many of the female participants are attracted by the prospect of learning self-defense. Weapons are also used on occasion during the class.

The style practiced by the club is a type of Japanese Karate, Seibu-Kan, which means "House of Holy Arts." It originated on the island of Okinawa in the 1800's.

The club was organized in the early 1970's. Before that time, the club was just a group of people who got together to practice martial arts; with the person holding the senior belt instructing the class.

The club, for the most part, is financially self-sufficient. In addition to the entrance fees, the club also receives money from the two tournaments which the members compete in annually. The club purchased its own mats and equipment, and it also pays for the entry fees of the people who compete.

Besides its regular competitions, the club plans to challenge other colleges in the area in the near future.

In the past, the club made a drive to attract spectators for the competitions by putting on an exhibition in addition to the tournament. But student response was very low. Now, with more interest growing for the sport, the club hopes for more spectators to come out and show their support.

Mr. Edward Collymore is a member of the club and the director of social action programs. He stated, "We have a great group of people in the class. Many of our members are here just to exercise and learn Karate and aren't really interested in competition. We have many alumni still with us. New students are always welcome to join."

Italy Trip Planned

For the ninth consecutive summer, Villanova University and Rosemont College are jointly sponsoring a month long travel and study program in Italy. For the month of June, students will live in the town of Siena, near Florence, and take courses in history, art history, Italian history, language and literature, and studio arts. They will visit Florence frequently, as well as Verona and Pisa, and will spend one enchanting night in Venice and two days in Rome, where there will be additional lectures, gallery tours and sight-seeing. Also planned is a trip to the medieval hilltop cities of Tuscany, where urban civilization first emerged out of the somber gloom of the Dark Ages.

"Tuscany has been the focal point of civilization since prehistoric times," says Dr. George Radan, director of the program. "The larger cities, such as Florence and Siena, together with the hill towns of Tuscany, have an uninterrupted artistic tradition which continues to our day. "It is probably the best part of the world," Radan continues, "for understanding the important role which the arts have played in the development of civilization."

The program is open to college, pre-college and non-matriculating students and adults for college credit or just the sheer fun of it. Up to six credits are offered for the month of study.

An exhibit of the art work produced by last year's participants in Italy is scheduled for the Villanova Library gallery area from January 16 through February 1, with a reception and a slide presentation to be given on Friday, February 1 at 3:00 p.m.

The Renaissance is a natural focal point for the course work, but living and studying in Italy provides a total kind of experience; a special opportunity to learn, absorb and enjoy Italy's many facets, the warmth and beauty of its people, its history and its culture.

Courses are taught in English by members of the Villanova and Rosemont faculties. The 1980 price will be $1048.00 plus low group-rate air fare which allow participants to spend some time in Italy or anywhere else in Europe after the program is finished. The cost includes three meals a day in Siena, which is the headquarters for the program, all transportation and transfers in Italy, all hotels in Venice, Rome and Siena and tuition for six credits. In Florence, Venice and Rome, continental breakfasts are provided while other meals in these cities are at participants expense.

Inquiries may be directed to Dr. Radan, Department of Art and Art History, in St. Mary's or call 527-2100 (ex. 238).

Workshop Teaches Goal Achievement

If your list of New Year's resolutions includes plans to change your career, personal life, or entire lifestyle, a workshop at Villanova will help you define and eventually achieve your goals.

"The 'Life Work Planning' workshop is geared toward helping people find out what is most important in their lives," says instructor Dr. Lewis Morgan, professor of counseling education. The initial phase of the workshop includes exercises which will guide students to clarify their own values and attitudes toward life and work, he says.

Participants will collectively discuss these values along with their individual abilities and limitations in relation to specific goal. Group sessions, designed to provide feedback, will challenge and guide each individual in his decision making.

"With almost every major decision, sacrifices and risks usually are involved," says Dr. Morgan. Therefore, the workshop will provide insight into the "prices" people must pay to achieve their dreams. Participants then can determine whether their values will enable them to cope with possible isolation, guilt, or financial loss associated with certain changes.

The various constraints which hold people back from their dream, usually can be overcome or compensated, Dr. Morgan emphasizes. "If somebody really wants to fulfill a goal, then it is possible," he insists.

The workshop sessions are scheduled for Friday, March 7, 5 to 9 p.m., and Saturday, March 8, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m., and will meet on the Villanova campus.

Registration deadline is February 8.

Christy Directs TPC

By NANCY ROONEY

The Philadelphia Company's newest, The Insanity of Mary Girard, is an interesting combination of the old and the new. The late 18th century setting belies the modernity of its message while sophisticated stage techniques authentically recreate the atmosphere of an antiquated lunatic asylum.

Under the direction of Dr. James J. Christy, chairman of Villanova's theater department, the work dramatizes the true story of the institutionalization of Mary Girard, wife of Stephen Girard, one of Philadelphia's most prominent citizens. As punishment for unfaithfulness to her playboy husband, Mrs. Girard, pregnant with the child of her illicit lover, is condemned to spend the rest of her life in a lunatic asylum. Her struggles to negate and then her final acceptance to this cruel fate are chronicled.

The setting necessitates an exploration of the themes of insanity and mental institutions. This play revolves, however, around economic motives, the power of money and position. The wealth of Stephen Girard allows him to buy the "insanity" of his wife while the power of social institutions support this type of inhumanity.

This theme is captured in the warden's reply to Mrs. Girard's claims of sanity at the beginning of the play: "I don't get paid to decide what is right or wrong — I only do my job." Ultimately, Mary Girard learns that her error was not infidelity but the failure to keep her end of a "deal" — her failure as Girard's wife to produce Girard's child. Speaking of her marriage, Mary inquires, "Must it be like a business transaction?" She receives the disturbing reply: "Relationships always are."

In addition, the play introduces questions of the roles of women, God, and morality. The overabundance of themes prohibits the full development of any of the topics. Therefore, the play fails to capitalize on its unique potentialities to deliver a powerful message. The experience of the play provokes relatively minor emotional reactions but no deep thought. At the end of the play, Mary Girard finds resolution in retreat to a point on her mind, "a point of stillness." For the audience, there is no resolution — only a buzzing confusion of vague points.

Whatever the shortcomings of the play itself, this production of the work is admirable. Those familiar with Dr. Christy's recent Vasey productions, particularly Dr. Faustus and As You Like It, would recognize the direction as vintage Christy. The use of a sparse stage, dramatic lighting effects, and disconcerting audial sensations were especially effective in spotlighting the essential nuances of the unusual setting.

Suzanne Barabas, a Villanova graduate and veteran Vasey actress, played a convincing Mary Girard. She injected a hint of self-righteousness into her portrayal of the very pathetic figure, adding intriguing dimensions to her character. The part of Stephen Girard, performed by Jude Ciccolella, was played a bit too stiffly, lacking the sense of inner turmoil needed to balance Ms. Barabas' portrayal. The two principals were backed by a fine supporting cast.

"The Insanity of Mary Girard" is playing Wednesday through Sunday evenings at 8 p.m. until February 3 at the Harold Prince Theatre of the Annenberg Center on the University of Pennsylvania campus.

Glass Menagerie Premiers

Vasey Theatre of Villanova University will open its spring season with a production of Tennessee Williams' modern classic, The Glass Menagerie. The show will run from February 6 thru 9, and 13 thru 16. Show times are at 8 p.m. with a special matinee for student groups on February 15, beginning at 10:30 a.m.

Struggling with the emotional bonds in his own life, Williams draws the character of Amanda, a faded Southern belle who desperately attempts to hold what's left of her family together, and in so doing creates a trap for her disillusioned son and crippled daughter. Williams captures an intense understanding of the human spirit in the dingy slum apartment in St. Louis. The subtle interweavings of beauty, tenderness, and razor sharp emotional energy, combine to make this one of the best loved and most respected plays of the American stage.

Susan Trimble, frequently seen on the Vasey stage, has been chosen to direct the production. Trimble, a graduate of the Villanova theatre program, has long been working on the stage and has a particular interest in the work of Tennessee Williams, our greatest living playwright.

Vasey Theatre offers special rates for groups, with an opportunity to discuss the play with the director and actors. Subscription plans are also available which can save the theatre-goer up to 33%.

A Day In The Life of a Beer Taster

BEER TALK

Although quaffing beer long has been associated with good times and good company, Andy Steinhubl doesn't view it that way.

It's not that Steinhubl doesn't enjoy a frosty mug or two. But as professional brewmaster and beer taster, Steinhubl must be quite serious about the beer he drinks.

Steinhubl regularly raises his beer glass to quality. He also bends his seasoned elbow to continuity, smoothness and purity. Steinhubl does his drinking in an environment that is hardly conducive to merriment: an antiseptically off-white climate-controlled room, where talking is discouraged.

"Quite seriously," says Steinhubl, vice president of brewing for Anheuser-Busch, Inc., "it's a big responsibility.

"The very idea of being a professional beer taster no doubt conjures some vivid images in people's minds," says Steinhubl, a graduate of the University of British Columbia and the Siebel Institute of Technology in Chicago. "Yet we limit our tasting to about three glasses per session; and our gatherings are hardly occasions for conviviality.

"Our job as tasters is important because it is the final test of the beer before it leaves the brewery," explains Steinhubl. "It is only a small part of our routine, but it can't be replaced by chemical analysis."

Steinhubl and a panel of colleagues stand facing the wall at their respective stations, eyeing an array of "beer clean" glasses. The only sound during the tasting is the scratch of pens on a note pad.

MOVIES

Kramer vs. Kramer

By EILEEN McCAFFREY

Among the myriad of films released recently, Kramer vs. Kramer stands alone as the only one distinguished by a well-focused plot, purposeful choice of subject, believable character development, and a conscience.

Kramer vs. Kramer derives much of its power from its optimistic realism. The subject of divorce has been treated many times, but rarely with such fidelity to life. The characters and their problems are familiar, but here they are raised to a human level. There is little simplification or idealization; neither parent is completely right or wrong. Dustin Hoffman as Ted Kramer is obviously guilty of many of his wife's charges against him. He is a rising advertising manager who is totally absorbed in his career and blindly expects his wife to be merely a support for him rather than a person of her own. However, this does not justify her leaving him. His errors were ones of omission rather than intention.

One can sympathize with Meryl Streep's role as Joanna Kramer since she is a lost, troubled person trying to do the right thing, but not knowing what that is. However, her actions cannot be justified. She leaves Hoffman with no explanation, even when he begs her to talk and is obviously receptive. She gives up without ever really attempting to communicate with him — something she never should have done. In the custody trial, she said that her husband had forbidden her to work after their marriage as part of her case against him. However, if working was so important to her, one feels that she should have made that clear before they married and not meekly allowed herself to be prevented from doing something she really wanted to do. She fails to demonstrate any real loyalty to her family, her career, or to maintaining an open relationship with her husband. In fact, Joanna is too weak, fragmented, frustrated to commit herself to others. Locked inside herself and divided against herself, she is unable to maintain substantive, permanent relationships. Thus, she is held responsible for the dissolution of their marriage. One feels that if only she had really communicated with her husband, they never would have divorced.

Most of the film focuses on the growing relationship between Ted Kramer and his son — their adjustment to living without Joanna and with each other. In this painful, human, and heartwarming struggle, neither Hoffman or his son become supermen, but both rise to the occasion. Hoffman undergoes significant changes. He reorders his life to place his son before his career and consequently loses his high-powered job. Still, he is not bitter toward Joanna. During the custody trial, as his lawyer attempts to make her admit that she failed in their marriage, he looks at her and shakes his head "no."

One weakness in the film is the ambiguity of Meryl Streep's role. We are encouraged to see her as a fragmented, self-centered woman unable to master her life. However, her character is not sufficiently developed to make this a certainty in one's mind. One does not know what kind of a person she was before or during their marriage. Hoffman himself tells his son that mommy left because she was undergoing changes in her life and she would try to talk to Hoffman about them, but he never heard her. However, this angle of their relationship is never developed. It is merely inferred that she did not try hard enough to save the marriage. If time had been devoted to showing that Joanna had done her best to communicate with Ted before leaving him, then one's sympathy for her could have more effectively counterbalanced one's feelings for Dustin Hoffman. Feminist groups have criticized the film as anti-woman. However, Meryl Streep is never meant to be a prototype of all women who leave their husbands. There is no intentional bias in this film; it merely recounts the story of one family. Kramer vs. Kramer does not attempt to teach such a simple, clear-cut lesion. To a remarkable degree, it presents an experience and lets you draw your own conclusions.

BOOKS

Saying It Like You Mean It

By STEVEN COMBS

Poetry is dead. At least it has been for awhile. Novelists, Reporters, Essayists, can all find work. But few people would call themselves a poet unless they were obviously something else, like a rock star. Song lyrics have been the popular poetry for some time now. Which is fine but we have lost an art. Not all good books are better as movies, most aren't as good. Likewise, not all poetry can be best experienced as a song. Yet the demand for new poets is minimal.

Ntozake Shange is breathing new life into mankind's oldest literary tradition. She feels that the dominance of music is due to the willingness of both artist and audience to let the song be a personal experience. Poetry, she contends, has been expected to be understood, equally applicable to anyone. However, musicians have very different personas and backgrounds which they incorporate heavily into their songs.

"I know you know the difference between Elvin Jones and Tony Williams. If you take (poets) as seriously as you take a set of traps/ a saxophone/ maybe we'll have decades of poems you'll never forget."

Nappy Edges is a collection of poems by a black woman born in St. Louis and raised on rhythm and blues. This is reflected on every page. Ntozake's poems are pieces of her life. Nappy Edges is an insightful, personal statement. And perhaps signals a rebirth of modern poetry.

Ms. Shange's work is not for everyone, just as Jethro Tull is not. But her voice is of a timbre not often heard. When I saw her play for colored girls . . . the women in the audience could obviously appreciate her view better than a man and blacks better than whites but everyone was touched by her talent as a writer. The same is true for Nappy Edges." "The roots of your hair/what turns back when we sweat, run, make love, dance, get afraid, get happy: the tell-tale sign of living!

THE WALL

Pink Floyd

by AMY MACLACHLAN

Throughout the seventies we welcomed the birth of new wave and the death of disco. The popular trend lately seems to be the avid participation in the race toward blatant originality. If this is, in fact, the case, the band Pink Floyd and the album, The Wall, are presently the leaders of the pack.

Pink Floyd has a history of undenied greatness, probably due to the many different levels the music appeals to. The album, The Wall is not an unfortunate release with one decent song and ten fillers. It is a story, a lesson, and a warning. One cannot aptly do it justice by listening to selective cuts. The album must be played through from start to finish and given one's full attention. After listening to it a few times, it reaches a second plateau, and begins to take on different meanings. The symbols become apparent with a shocking unreality; it begins to teach a lesson.

what's behind these cold eyes

Lyrically the songs are varied. They use many different approaches, but all of the songs seem to come out with the central theme. The vocabulary is base at times but is the only real way to express the commonness and the appeal to the masses. The recurrent theme of The Wall seems to symbolize the fortress that man is building around himself. To quote the song "Empty Spaces," "What shall we use to fill the empty/spaces where we used to talk/ How shall I fill the final places/ How shall I complete the wall?" This dilemma occurs on side two and by the end the answer seems clear. The wall is completed by the production of men who are no longer men. They are living shells. They lack emotion, substance, and any type of feeling. This is where the warning comes in. Is this the way man will become in the future? It provokes a reexaming of oneself, a moment of reflection. The Worms, mentioned throughout, are invaders who are slowly taking over modern society. They symbolize the rot and decay of our morals and our existence. They ultimately take over and, in the final court scene, sentence expulsion to a man because he "was caught red handed showing feelings — showing feelings of an almost human nature."

your way through the disguise.

The album's greatest plus seems to be its music. The harmonies and tunes are, like the lyrics, varied. They come off loud and insistent, while sometimes sweet and soothing, probably representing the worm's methods of take over, sneaking up quietly and suddenly attacking. The band uses synthesizers freely but also shows talent with guitar solos and vocals. As a reinforcer to their creative nature an entire English boys' choir participates in "Another Brick in the Wall, Part 2." They are remarkably in unison despite their obvious large number.

The album as a whole is unique and intelligent, while sometimes a trifle cynical. It is filled with symbols upon symbols, only a few were mentioned in this article. The beauty of this album is in the almost obsession the listener acquires in trying to understand it.

Before Steinhubl can address factors of aroma, taste, smoothness and continuity, he must attend to things within his control. "For instance," says Steinhubl, "beer must be kept cool, served at the correct temperature (40-42 degrees), with the proper collar (foamy head), and in a CLEAN glass. A beer-clean glass must be cleaner than clean, with no lint or sizing starch from a laundered towel."

The best test of a beer-clean glass (BCG) — rinsed with clear water, power-brushed with an odor-free, non-sudsing cleaning compound, rinsed again in warm then cold water, and stored bottom-up on a corrugated shelf and allowed to air dry — is to pour a glass of beer.

With a beer-clean glass, the head will be composed of tiny bubbles and will remain compact and firm. As the beer is consumed, rings of foam will adhere to the sides of the glass. With a non-clean glass, the collar consists of large bubbles which dissipate rapidly; foam adherence to the glass will be spotty or nonexistent.

Beer poured correctly into a beer-clean glass brings a smile to Steinhubl's jovial countenance. "No matter what you may have heard, beer should not be poured down the side of a glass." Steinhubl explains beer poured down the center of an upright glass lets the beer "breathe," allowing some of the carbonation to escape.

Steinhubl proceeds with his play-by-play account of beer tasting. "The first thing we do is look at the beer," he says. "Hence the off-white walls in the room permeated with natural light. This assures that there is no distortion of color in the samples."

Steinhubl then checks the aroma of the brew, swirls the beer in the glass, and sniffs again.

"If the beer smells skunky, you'll know immediately," says Steinhubl. "Direct exposure to sunlight or fluorescent light can produce a skunky odor in beers; we call it lightstruck." That's why Anheuser-Busch beer bottles have traditionally been brown.

Finally, Steinhubl gets to the task at hand. He drinks the beer — not with a delicate swig or polite sip of a wine taster. With head tossed back — to gain the best of the foam's aroma and the beer's flavor — he takes a hearty swallow.

"If you don't take a good swallow, the beer won't reach the taste buds in the back of your mouth. You won't get the full character of the beer."

A beer taster rarely takes more than 1-1/2 ounces from each glass,

★★★★Local Jazz★★★★

Bryn Mawr and Haverford Colleges are pleased to usher in the '80's with two evenings of music by four of jazz's most innovative and creative artists.

On Friday, January 25th, the man Melody Maker magazine called "the most creative vibist in the world today," Walt Dickerson, will team up with Jimmy Merritt, the bassist with Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers, for an evening of duets. There will be two sets; the concert starts at 8 p.m. in Roberts Hall on the campus of Haverford College.

On Saturday, January 26th, two of the new music's greatest innovators will perform solo. Anthony Braxton will perform alto saxophone improvisations, and Leroy Jenkins, who has been called "contemporary music's finest violinist," will play unaccompanied on the violin. Showtimes are 8 and 10:30 p.m., once again in Roberts Hall; both Braxton and Jenkins will appear at both times.

Haverford College, located at Lancaster Avenue and College Lane in suburban Haverford, is easily accessible by Paoli Local and Norristown High-Speed. All tickets are $5 and are available by telephone reservation; for reservations, information, and directions, call the Haverford Ticket Hotline: 642-2526.

Cats Fight Off Colonials

Sparrow Tops 1,000 Points

By BOB CONWAY

The Villanova Wildcats keep rolling along. Tuesday night the Cats trounced George Washington University 95-78 in a very physical contest which featured Rory Sparrow's 1,000 career point before a standing room only crowd of 3,200 in the friendly confines of the Villanova Fieldhouse.

Rory Sparrow led the way to the team's twelfth victory in sixteen outings. Sparrow shot a remarkable 10 for 13 from the field and finished with 24 points.

At 5:24 of the first half after Rory Sparrow canned a short jumper, play was halted to present Sparrow a ball signifying his 1,000 career point. The entire team applauded Rory on his achievement, and the crowd displayed its approval by giving Sparrow a well deserved standing ovation.

The Wildcats, as is usually the case when they have the opportunity to play in the Fieldhouse, roared out to a 10-0 lead by employing a devestating full-court zone press. The lead hovered around ten points throughout the first half. By halftime though, the lead was cut to 46-40. This was largely due to Brian Magid's long range jumpers.

Then in the second half Villanova came out blazing much like they did at the start of the game. Sparrow and Tom Sienkiewicz led a terrific scoring tandem as they provided all the points in a Villanova run which put the score at 56-43.

George Washington didn't give up. With ten minutes left to play they cut the lead to 69-59 but Sienkiewicz who finished with 22 points hit two quick buckets for a 73-59 lead. That gave the Cats new life.

Then the fireworks started. With four minutes left to go John Pinone put his head down and went to the basket. Dave Thorton, who was frustrated, was hanging all over the Villanova center. Pinone was fouled as he shot and then was quickly punched by Thorton who was ejected from the game. Pinone was cooled down by a host of teammates and coaches. After the fireworks the score was out of reach at 82-65. There was no tomorrow for George Washington. Luckily for Thorton, Pinone was cooled down or there would not have been a tomorrow for him either.

Olympics Come To Villanova

By JERRY VENTRESCA

The Dean of Men's Office, under the direction of Assistant Dean of Men Tony Martin, is currently organizing the upcoming Residence Halls Olympics. The Residence Olympics, with cooperation from a large number of students, will hopefully get off on the right foot this year and continue in the future.

The Residence Halls Olympics will consist of backgammon, foulshooting, pool, volleyball, pingpong and arm-wrestling tournaments. The St. Mary's pool may reopen this semester after roof repairs are completed and a swimming tournament will take place. In the spring the Residence Olympics will conclude with tennis, softball, track and tug-of-war tournaments, since these are outdoor sports.

A prime example of what Martin wishes all of these tournaments and the overall Olympic program will follow is the current Residence Halls Basketball Tournament. The Olympics, Martin explains, "are an attempt to organize participation and competition among residents in a greater variety of activities." Martin optimistically hopes that the Olympics will "help foster a greater sense of unity in resident areas and enable groups of residents to support, encourage and be proud of the involvement of individuals who participate."

Temporarily restricted to male residents, if the program is successful it could include female residents and eventually all undergraduates in the near future.

Brochures will be distributed to all male residents this weekend and once organized, each area can be represented in the Olympics.

According to Martin, a particular activity will start each week but not necessarily end in the same week. A detailed scoring system isn't complete yet but points will probably be given to teams for entering and those avoiding forfeits.

Trophies, shirts, and possibly a victory dinner sponsored by the Dean of Men's Office will encourage participation, emphasized Martin. He also stated that Villanova students are very sports-minded and participation is the key word to a successful Residence Halls Olympics.

You can't get anything out of Villanova unless you put something into it!

WOMEN STREAK BY HAWKS

By KATHLEEN STICKEL

The Wildcat women's basketball team became nationally ranked in the top 20 this past week with an undefeated record with 15 victories as of this writing. Decisive wins of over 20 points toppled teams such as Harvard, Loyola, Salisbury, Bloomsburg and West Chester.

Extend Perfect Record to 15 Wins

The Wildcats downed Farleigh-Dickinson 63-52, West Chester 83-62 and St. Joseph's 53-52.

Against FDU, Rosemarie Burke, a freshman from Media, Pa., led the team with 16 points and was followed by Karen Hiznay and co-captain Mary Beth Gibson, both with 15.

Lisa Ortlip had a slow day at the net with seven. Kathie Beisel, another freshman, plays both guard and forward and sank six points from the floor. Stephanie Vanderslice finished the Villanova scoring with four.

Hiznay and Vanderslice played consistently aggressive ball forcing jump balls with their opponents.

The Wildcats played their toughest game against the St. Joseph's Hawks. Karen Hiznay was there when it counted. She scored the breakaway layup that put Villanova ahead in the second half for the first time since the beginning of the game with seconds left in the game. Karen also scored two foul shots putting Nova ahead by three. St. Joe's scored and Villanova gained possession to end the game. Hiznay led the team with 17 points. According to Coach Harry Perretta, "Karen just played super!"

Vanderslice followed with 12 points. Beisel and Ortlip each tallied 11. Gibson added two. Perretta expressed his emotions over the game saying, "It was my pleasure to coach that game." Ortlip leads the team with 228 points, 166 rebounds and 23 blocked shots. Vanderslice follows with 179 points and 143 rebounds. Hiznay runs a close third with 176 points and pulling down 48 from the boards. "Magic" Gibson, as some of her fans call her, has put in 134 points and assisted for 42 others.

Beisel, a recruit from St. Hubert's in Philadelphia, presents her talent all over the court with 97 rebounds, 62 assists and 54 turnovers. Senior Lisa Bouder is the other co-captain.

Lu-Ann Krothe, Rosemarie Burke, Bess McGinn, Courtney Vanderslice, Taryn Beveridge, Mary Anczarski and Kathleen O'Mally finish off a solid unit led by a strong coaching staff.

Coach Perretta leads the team for the second year after establishing a 17-8 tally last year, best ever at V.U. He also was a finalist as small college "Coach of the Year" for the '78-'79 season. Debbie McKee and Dan Cassidy are the assistant coaches, also in their second year here.

Debby Martino and Steve Cholewick manage this champion team, completing the unit.

The Wildcats will travel to Cheyney State on Tuesday and will host Immaculata on February 7.

Swimmers Strive For Perfection

By PETER J. RYAN

According to third-year coach Jane Ackerman, the aims of the women's varsity swim team are two-fold: ". . . we would like to go undefeated (in the regular season) and qualify as many swimmers and divers as we can for the Easterns and the Nationals."

The women currently sport a perfect 4-0 mark after an 86-50 victory at home over the University of Pennsylvania Monday night. Triumphs over Bryn Mawr, Trenton State and a forfeit victory over Kutztown State College round out the aquakitten record thus far. Today the women face a strong U.S. Naval Academy squad which Coach Ackerman feels will provide good competition for the team, and more importantly another victory. "We train all the strokes so that we can arrange our lineup against a particular opponent and attack them in their strongest events."

Having lost no swimmers to graduation and gaining 10 freshmen this year, the team has "twice the quality and now depth . . ." according to Coach Ackerman. The reason for such an increase in team membership (now at nineteen) seems to be consistent improvement in Villanova's competitiveness on a national level. Last year's twelfth place finish (out of 120 teams) in the Division II AIAW National Championships might account for this new talent.

While Tara Baroody, Rita Edge, Jenni Franks, Eileen Kuchma, Alice Maben, Mary Maier, Bernadette McCann and Audrey St. Germain have already qualified for the Nationals (to be held at Clarion State College from March 12-15), the coach expects more of her swimmers to join this group.

"Divers can make or break a team and are very instrumental in dual meets," says Coach Ackerman of her divers Mary Jarett and Ann Levenite. The pair have been performing consistently throughout the campaign as was evidenced by their 1-2 showing over Penn. Much of the credit goes to Diving Coach Ted Klinges for their success. The team's strongest events appear to be the breast stroke, individual medley (IM), butterfly and freestyle.

The squad currently has six women on partial scholarships and one on a full scholarship. "Word is getting around that we are one of the best in the northeast," commented Coach Ackerman, "and the swimmers flock to the better teams."

Pinone Honored

By TERRY O'TOOLE

"I don't say much; I just play basketball."

Not the most encouraging words a sportswriter seeking an interview could hear.

But to a basketball coach, now that's a different story, especially when you add several other key statistics: a 28 point-18 rebound-per-game average during his senior year in high school, a point per game average to lead his team in his first year of college basketball, a recipient of more than 250 college offers.

And these words must seem especially encouraging to Rollie Massimino, because out of all those offers, John Pinone chose Villanova.

"One of the main reasons I came to Villanova was the coaching staff," said Pinone, Monday night before being named Budweiser Athlete of the Semester. "Coach Mass takes care of his players both on and off the court. They've helped me learn a lot about college basketball."

The 6' 8" forward came to Villanova from South Catholic High School in Wethersfield, Connecticut, where he amassed 2174 career points and 1699 rebounds. The red jacket he wore had the words "State Champs" emblasoned across the back, and one sensed that those words meant a lot to Pinone. The words "National Champs" would probably mean more.

"This year we're capable of getting to the final four of the NCAA's," he said. "We'll win the Big Five outright, and we just want to finish in one of the top four spots in the Eastern Eight to get a home-court advantage for the tournament."

Although the Wildcats are 4-2 in the Eastern Eight, losing to Duquesne and West Virginia, they can capture the league's NCAA playoff berth by winning the group's post-season tournament.

"After the first game of the season, I knew that we had a good team," he said. "But we proved that we can play with anyone in the country against Notre Dame."

"College is pretty much what I expected. The transition was easy," he said. "I had a very good high school coach. My job is to take the ball in low and take it to the hoop and score, and I rebound."

His job may sound simple, but when the action under the basket is complicated by people like Michael Brooks of LaSalle or Roosevelt Bouie of Syracuse, taking the ball to the hoop can prove difficult. But Pinone said he doesn't prepare for any one player in particular, and the method must work: in Villanova's loss to Syracuse, he both outscored and outrebounded Bouie.

"All of us on the team have our roles to play, and when we play our roles right, we win," Pinone explained.

Pinone gained a reputation early in the season as a physical, aggressive player who refused to be intimidated. He agrees with that assessment, but emphasizes that strength is not his only asset.

"A lot of people think I just get underneath and bump people around," he said, "but I'm shooting about 60 percent from the floor. I'm hitting the jumpers from 16 feet, and I have a lot of good passes and assists.

"I worked hard on my shooting game in high school, and as I get older in college, I'll be popping outside for more shots."

Pinone's aggressive play was instrumental in Villanova's 95-78 romp over George Washington last Tuesday night, but the intensity of the game took its toll.

With just under four minutes left in the contest, Colonials' forward Dave Thornton took a punch at Pinone, earning a flagrant technical foul and ejection from the game.

"I've never seen John as angry," Coach Massimino said after the game. "It was a cheap shot and that doesn't belong in basketball."

The plane rides, the hotels stays, the bus trips, the games in front of thousands of hostile fans in opponent's arenas don't bother Pinone.

"I like to travel, to see other places. It's not really that bad, as long as I'm on the move.

"The people you see every day at Villanova are nice," he continued. "They make you feel comfortable."

Whatever the final outcome of this season may be, Villanova basketball fans can relish the fact that only one member of the Wildcats' starting five will graduate, and Pinone will be back for three more years.

"We'll be just as strong next year. Everybody will have matured a year."

Ah, the most encouraging words a basketball coach can hear.

Geisz Anticipates 200 Wins

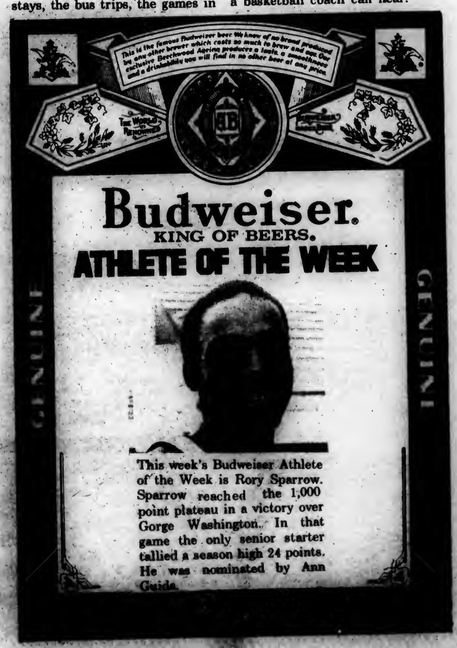
By ROBERT L.P. WALSH

Coach Ed Geisz needs but two more wins to join the 200 win club and expects to accomplish this feat before the week ends. The Watercats host St. John's Friday at 4:00 and travel to Syracuse Jan. 23 and Penn Jan. 26. These meets are crucial in the Watercats effort to gain a winning season after last year's 4-10 disappointment. Coach Geisz feels that each of these teams is evenly matched with Villanova and that the more determined team should capture each meet.

After winning their first three, the swim team has dropped two successive meets to swimming powers Penn State and La Salle by the scores 83-30 and 76-34 respectively for a 3-2 record. The team has been swimming well, however, as indicated by their times. The 400 yd. medley relay team of Quindlen, Ertlmeier, Ahern, and Russell clocked 3:40 for their best time this year. Captain Steve Quindlen posted his personal bests in the 100 yard butterfly (62.8) and 200 yard butterfly (1:59) and is confident of improving those marks. Bob Baltera (freestyle) and Clayton Ertlmeier have also been outstanding of late.

Coach Geisz feels that one measure of his team's improvement will be the number of swimmers who qualify for the Eastern Championships. Thus far, Captain Steve Quindlen, Dan Ahern, Bob Baltera, Bruce Baltera, Clayton Ertlmeier, Bob Kownurko, and Tom Popdan have all qualified in either individual events or relays.

Also making waves for the Watercats is Pitt transfer Paul Clark. Clark is a talented diver who recently placed first in the one meter event and has also qualified for the Easterns.



This week's Budweiser Athlete of the Week is Rory Sparrow. Sparrow reached the 1,000 point plateau in a victory over Gorge Washington. In that game the only senior starter tallied a season high 24 points. He was nominated by Ann Guida.

Harvey

Q: What is a Harvey's Warehouse?

A: Harvey's Warehouse is the place to buy stereo in Philadelphia! The only store in town where you get a free 5-year guarantee on all home audio; an incredibly wide selection of the very best name brand components, car stereo, and accessories; and the lowest prices anywhere!

Harvey's Warehouse started back in 1974 in a metal quonset hut in Richmond, Virginia, previously used to store tires! Talk about "bare bones"! Anyone who came in just knew we had the lowest prices on stereo in Richmond. Our philosophy has never changed from those days. Each of our 43 stores embodies that same "no-frills, low overhead" credo that enables us to keep our prices low. On top of that, we felt giving a free five-year guarantee on all home stereo was just the kind of "insurance" the stereo buyer really wants. Especially if it's free.

And now you can take advantage of our unique approach to stereo retailing! Visit the newest Harvey's Warehouse today—at 128 W. Lancaster Avenue in Wayne!

Q. How often should I replace the cartridge stylus on my turntable?

A. Certainly this depends on individual usage. However, we recommend changing stylii every 1,000 hours of record play. The cost of packaging the total cartridge is almost totally based on the stylus. It's usually as economical to purchase an entire cartridge. Picking a better cartridge can give you exceptional fidelity and incredible channel separation.

Runner Wins Award

By JERRY DOUGHERTY

Villanova men's track star Don Paige was honored as the area's Outstanding Amateur Athlete of 1979 by the Philadelphia Sports Writers Association at an awards dinner held at the Cherry Hill Hyatt this past Monday.

Paige, a senior, was honored for his superior track feats during the past year, highlighted by his accomplishing the "Delaney Double," which represents victory in both the 800 and 1500 meter races at the NCAA Outdoor Championships. The last runner to achieve such a double was Villanova's Ron Delaney, after whom it was named. Delaney accomplished the feat in 1958.

Presenting the award to Paige was Bob Kenny, sports editor of the Camden Courier-Post. In his introduction, Kenny said that 1979 "was a year of decision" for Paige "to be a leader at Villanova." He added that "many doubted Don, but he proved he could do it."

In accepting the award before a thousand or so dinner guests, Paige thanked the coaches, Jumbo Elliott and Jack Pyrah, "for making me what I am today."

"A person is great only if people know he is great," Paige said. "Here in Philadelphia people know just how good we are."

"I plan on staying in Philadelphia," Paige revealed, terming it, "a great area."

The sports writers' amateur athlete award has a prestigeous history. Past winners include such notables as Michael Brooks, Archie Griffin, Randy White, John Cappalletti, and Villanova's Marty Liquori.

Another Villanova athlete spotlighted at the banquet was Bridgid Leddy, a member of the women's track team. Leddy was honored as an outstanding woman athlete.

Besides Paige and Leddy, Villanova was represented at the ceremony by men's track coach Jumbo Elliot. No other local college or university boasted as many representatives.

Olympic Boycott Debated

Philadelphia Suggested as Alternative Site

By JANE COYLE
and JERRY VENTRESCA

"If the Russians don't change their policies and the International Olympic Committee (IOC) doesn't change the site, it is most unlikely that the United States will be represented in the 1980 Moscow Summer Olympics," stated Jack Kelly, the first vice-president of the United States Olympic Committee (USOC).

The issue of an American boycott of the 1980 Summer Olympic Games in Moscow was at hand and the resolution introduced was, "this house opposes U.S. participation in the Moscow Games unless the Soviet Union changes its current policy." The Political Union debate, under the direction of the president of the Political Union, Bruce Keogh, presented Jack Kelly as the guest speaker. Kelly is a former Philadelphia councilman and member of four Olympic teams, spanning 16 years.

Approximately 85 outspoken people were in attendance, including Sydnee Maree, Amos Korir and Paul Denis, Villanova's Olympic hopefuls; Dr. John J. Logue, political scientist and current runner in the Pennsylvania United States Senate race; and George Breen, the manager for the U.S. Olympic swimming team.

Recently having returned from the Colorado Springs meeting of the National Olympic Committee (NOC), Kelly stated, "We have complied with President Carter's request to propose to the IOC to transfer to another site(s), postpone, or cancel the Summer Games." As an alternative, the former Olympic oarsman proposed the U.S. should hold a "bigger and better than ever" event. As a matter of fact, Kelly himself suggested to Philadelphia Mayor Bill Green that Philadelphia should include itself in the bidding of American cities for a huge sports festival in 1982 — Philadelphia's 300th birthday.

In and around this general area, Kelly felt that equestrian events could be held at the Devon Horse Grounds and John F. Kennedy Stadium; yachting off the coast of New Jersey; swimming and diving in the city's John B. Kelly pool, named after Jack's father; and housing quarters in the University of Pennsylvania and Villanova dormitories.

Following Kelly's 15-minute lecture was a question-and-answer period. Pat O'Neill, chairman of the moderate party cited a comment made previously by Kelly. Carter "directed" the USOC to decide to postpone or cancel the Games, said the guest speaker. In actuality President Carter requested the USOC to propose such measures. Kelly stressed in his response that the "USOC wants to get off the hook" and "put the monkey on the

Township Approves New Traffic Safety Measures

By MARGUERITE ESMONDE

Radnor Township's Board of Commissioners approved several pedestrian safety measures for Spring Mill Road and Lancaster Avenue at a meeting on Monday, January 28.

Measures include a pedestrian traffic signal between St. Mary's and the Law School, and stricter enforcement of the speed limit on Lancaster Avenue in front of the University.

The Township's Staff Traffic Committee recommended that Villanova take three steps before installation of the crosswalk on Route 320, Spring Mill Road. The committee suggests destruction of a sidewalk from the Conrail parking lot to the crosswalk. They also recommended that Villanova close off the gate entrance to St. Mary's at the foot of the overpass on Route 320, and build a new entrance at the crosswalk site.

Although the township will pay for installation of the pedestrian signal, the cost of the sidewalk and new gate will fall on the University. "The township is not responsible for this construction," stated Fr. John Deegan, vice president for Student Life. "It's on our property."

"We suggested to the township that these steps be taken. The proposal is now with the Maintenance department. We're waiting for the exact location of the crosswalk," Deegan said. "It's a good solution to our problem if the students use it."

After investigations of conditions on Lancaster Avenue in front of Villanova by the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation, township commissioners agreed to ensure "more frequent and strict enforcement of the 35 m.p.h. speed zone from Lowry's Lane to Spring Mill Road."

The commissioners also approved rigid mounting of the traffic signals at the intersection of Lancaster and Ithan Avenues, the installation of backplates to provide better target values for motorists, and the painting of cross hatching on the pedestrian walk at the intersection.

Villanova's request for a footbridge on the overpass on route 320 will, "definitely be filed some time this week" with the Pennsylvania Public Utilities Commission, said James W. Patterson, Villanova's lawyer for the proposal. Action on the footbridge began in November '79, but has met with delays.

"The PUC will now investigate and determine the solution to the problem, and then assign the cost," stated Fr. Deegan. "The University is least likely to bear the cost because we don't own any part of the overpass," he said. Deegan was unable to estimate how long it will take the PUC to act on the bridge proposal.

Law School Applicants

PRINCETON, N.J. — Applicants to law schools are advised that delays in delivery of a new computer system have resulted in a backlog of Law School Data Assembly Service (LSDAS) reports to law schools. Law schools have been made aware of the problem through frequent updating on the status of the processing schedule.

Although law school admission offices may be somewhat slowed in making their decisions, students can be assured that fairness will be paramount, and no individuals will be penalized for late reporting delays incurred by the LSDAS.

Because of the backlog, it is estimated that, at the current processing rate, there will be delays for about the next eight weeks. Staff have been greatly expanded and are working long hours to meet these problems. Educational Testing Service (ETS), which administers the LSDAS, regrest any personal inconvenience to candidates.

The LSDAS was begun in 1970 at the request of the law schools. Its purpose is to summarize information from college transcripts, test scores from the Law School Admission Test and other biographical information used for evaluation by the law school admission offices.

If there are specific problems that cannot wait, please write to Law Programs, Newtown, Pa. 18940. Please do not telephone.

Photography Classes

The Villanovan Photography Dept. will sponsor a series of Photography classes on Tuesday evenings starting February 12, 1980. Various lectures will be given by area photographers. To register, stop in the Villanovan office.

Campus Reacts to Registration

Officer Favors Decision

By STEVE HAGGERTY

Lieutenant Commander Kenneth Mero, U.S.N., Sophomore Instructor for the ROTC program, believes it is necessary to reinstate registration for the draft as President Carter has recommended.

"Having eligible people registered provides a ready pool of names with which to conduct a draft. Registration cuts down on the time element involved in the drafting process," Mero stated.

Mero believes that registration for all eligible males should have been continued after the Selective Service Act ran out. At this time, however, he sees no need for initiating a draft.

"I would like to see the idea of an all-volunteer military force continued with greater incentives for encouraging the volunteers," Mero explained. "These incentives help due to the sacrifices someone in the military must make."

The draft itself would not be reinstated unless situations in the world deteriorated, as Mero sees it.

"The United States has standing military forces that could be used to deal with a crisis. It would take something like a limited outbreak of war to bring about a draft," remarked Mero.

Villanova's ROTC candidates would not, in most cases, be affected by the draft. They would be permitted to complete their schooling.

"Again, depending on the nature of the crisis, members of the ROTC program would be allowed to stay in school if a draft was initiated. Their status would be maintained," Mero said.

Asked about the general concern many students have about the idea of registering for the draft, Mero stated that this concern was unwarranted.

"As I stated before, the purpose of having people register for the draft is largely a clerical step done to facilitate the actual drafting process if and when there is a need. Any fear people have of being packed up and shipped off to war is unnecessary at this time," Mero commented.

"With regards to who would be eligible for the draft and who wouldn't as far as college students are concerned, this would depend on the law. There is no longer any Selective Service law on the books. So who would be affected would be hard to say," Mero commented.

Professor Opposes Move

By FRANK J. DOHERTY

"Reinstatement of the draft is the first step toward the ultimate sacrilege," according to Dr. Bernard F. Reilly of the Villanova University history department.

In a recent interview, Dr. Reilly expressed his opinions on the possibility of a draft reinstatement. He feels that the draft would lead the public to believe that a war would be a conventional one.

"Neither the United States nor the Soviet Union will accept conventional defeat," said Dr. Reilly. "The loser will resort to nuclear warfare."

Dr. Reilly claims that if troops were drafted, they would not be used. He said that since a war would be nuclear in its nature, there is no need for the United States to build up conventional forces.

Reilly hopes for widespread resistance to draft registration. He said that there are very real alternatives to war.

He said that the current world situation, "has the potential to recreate the antiwar movement of Vietnam."

Dr. Reilly feels that college is

Senate Candidate Views Chances

By BILL ROCK

Dr. John Logue of the political science department, recently announced candidate for the United States Senate (Pennsylvania), believes that his campaign can succeed if the public responds to the issues he raises.

Dr. John Logue, Senate hopeful.

"I believe that I stress questions important to the public," Logue stated in a recent interview. "I have always been deeply involved with conservation, for example. We have to be able to breathe if we are to go on living.

"I am also a firm believer in mass transportation. There is a tremendous need for improvement in that area, just in Philadelphia alone. If a better mass transit system existed, people would not have to take taxis. All that does is further pollute the air."

Logue has also been deeply involved with a program to restructure the United Nations. He brought the first debate on President Carter's "Report on the Reform and Restructuring of the United Nations" to Villanova in November of 1978.

"I find it absurd that a country with a population smaller than Delaware County has the same vote as the United States," commented Logue. "Smaller developing nations must realize that a little less equality could make the United Nations a much more effective force."

Logue, founder and director of the Common Heritage Institute at Villanova, was one of the first American political scientists to concentrate on the law of the seas. He feels that a "wise solution to the ocean problem can make a major contribution to building peace, economic development, and ecological sanity." His research has taken him to 16 nations and he has organized four large conferences on the subject.

'By properly harnessing the resources of the ocean, many economic problems can be dealt with," continued Logue. "This could be especially important for developing countries. I think we could greatly strengthen international relations, if we can deal properly with the wealth of the sea."

Logue has published many articles and one book, The Fate of the Oceans. The book has been used as a textbook in many institutions, including Brandeis University, Yale University, and the Naval War College. The book, published by the Villanova University Press, has contributions from scientists, scholars and diplomats from 12 countries.

Logue emphasizes that his campaign is going well. "I have students out taking petitions and I am scheduled to speak numerous times across the state in the next few months. I think an important factor in my favor is that none of the candidates are particularly well-known. It is possible that the former mayor of Pittsburgh, Peter Flaherty, may enter the race, but he has not yet.

"In addition, the incumbent senator is retiring. That opens up the entire situation. It gives me a realistic chance of winning."

"If my candidacy catches on, and I think it will, raising money will be a much easier thing to do. I picture myself like the turtle in the sense that I might start slow, but come along in the last inning. I know this race will be an uphill battle, but as long as I am raising issues that need to be raised, I am satisfied that I am making a contribution."

I picture myself like the turtle... I might start slow, but come along in the last inning.

Documentary To Be Aired

By SHARON WINTERS

Dr. George T. Radan, professor of fine arts, authored a historical work which will serve as a base for an educational documentary slated for release in October.

Radan said that the film version of his book, "The Sons of Zebulon," was "totally unexpected." The director of the film, Arthur Feldman, is a former student of Radan's and a Villanova graduate. Feldman read a review of "The Sons of Zebulon" and sought Radan.

In the second week of January, Radan was flown to Chicago to meet with the film makers at Spertus College. The contract was made at this time. The crew is scheduled to leave for filming in Cyprus, Egypt, Greece and Smyrna on April 15.

Spertus received a $150,000 grant to translate Radan's account of Jewish maritime history to film. The documentary will possibly air on Chicago's educational channel and perhaps even our local Channel 12 before it is distributed to various schools for rental.

"The Sons of Zebulon" unearthed the importance of the Jewish tribe of Zebulon in naval history. The renegade tribe thwarted early Roman shipping efforts. Zebulon mariners were not unlike pirates, commandeering alien cargoes from various nations. "The Sons" traces of Jewish naval expertise from its beginnings to its current status. The Israeli navy today is thus unsurprisingly skilled.

Dr. Radan has been teaching at Villanova since 1960. He is an archaeologist by profession. One of his most recent efforts was a book on the excavations in Italy near Florence. Prior to his employment at Villanova he was Assistant Director of the National Israeli Maritime Museum.

Board Athletic Committee Forms

By JERRY DOUGHERTY

The University Board of Trustees has voted to establish a pecial Committee on Athletics, it has been learned.

Formation of this committee was approved by the Board last December, at a meeting held to consider proposals recommended by an ad hoc committee of athletics and evaluated by the University Senate.

Among the members slated to sit on this newly-formed committee are Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president; Rev. Edward J. McCarthy, O.S.A., who will serve as committee chairman; and Thomas Burke, a recently-named board member.

No non-board members will serve on the committee. "The Special Board Committee will be made up of board members only — it will be along the lines of the ad hoc committee," Driscoll stated.

Driscoll went on to say that one of the committee's primary functions will be to pay special attention to determining the cost of the various athletic proposals under the board's consideration.

The committee's first major task will be to conduct a feasibility study for the proposed indoor athletic facility.

University Serves as Site of Forensics Competition

By MELISSA ARAYA

George Mason University and the University of Massachusetts debate teams captured the overall awards in a tournament held by the Villanova Debate Society this weekend. Twelve schools attended, and eight received awards, among them being Clarion, Temple, Columbia and Cornell.

The theme, or resolution, for the three day debate was this year's national resolution, "Resolved: that the federal government should strengthen the regulation of mass media communication in the United States."

Four of the seven Villanova teams participated. The varsity team of Larry Maggitti and Cathy Olanich was the sole team to complete the entire tournament. The junior varsity team of John Stanley and Art Figueirdo went 4-2 out of 6 rounds.

The tournament consisted of eight rounds. For half the debate, a team argues the positive side of a resolution, and for the remainder, they argue the negative. On Sunday the last elimination round and the quarterfinals were completed. "Often two teams from the same school compete, and if the two teams have to face each other, the coach decides who is in a better position to argue," according to Cathy Olanich.

Debate requires a large amount of preparation. "I spend more time on debate than I do on school," stated Larry Maggitti.

Olanich explained, "For a really good year, preparation basically starts in the beginning of the summer. The topic is released early in July. You go through periodicals, and sources such as the Congressional Record, and pick out paragraphs and quotes concerning issues that might be applicable to this year's topic . . . Canned arguments, or briefs are put on long sheets and prepared for mass duplication for the rest of the debating team."

Moderator Dr. R. Church guides the students, aided by Mr. E. Rowley and Dave Pennington, a Villanova law student and former debater for West Virginia Wesleyan.

So far this year, the team of Maggitti and Olanich has won the October finals at Johns Hopkins and the quarterfinals at Towson State and Pace.

The varsity team of Laura Prosky and Bob Bannon copped the finals at Towson and the semi-finals at Pace. On February 1 the debaters travel to the University of Massachusetts.

President's back." In other words the USOC does not want to be blamed for telling the athletes to stay home. Kelly also mentioned a fact which is becoming more evident to everyone, that President Carter has the final say in preventing the U.S. athletes from going to the Moscow Games — revoking their visas. Kelly concluded his response saying, "some miracle must occur to justify changing the President's stand."

Kelly stated the most serious problem facing the U.S. involving boycott is the quadrenial meeting of the international federation in Moscow to elect new IOC officials. "The meeting affects Olympic policy changes and if the U.S. is not represented in these meetings, the Communists will dominate the Games for the years to come, which could be devastating to the Olympic movement."

Kelly further noted, "the U.S. would lose status if we sent delegates and no athletes to the Games."

Responding to suggestions of postponement, Kelly cited that it would violate IOC rules if the 22nd Olympiad wasn't held in the designated year.

Kelly concluded a response at one time saying although NBC has invested $85 million in Moscow, which most of it has been "sent over," the insurance firm, Lloyd's of London, will refund 90% of their investment.

Moderate party chairman Pat O'Neill led off the second hour of the debate saying, "At a time like this you don't want to cut relations totally; I feel the Olympics should go on." O'Neill's speech could be best summarized in his quotation of the Olympic Creed: "The most important thing in the Olympic Games is not to win but to take part, just as the most important thing in life is not the triumph but the struggle. The essential thing is not to have conquered but to have fought well."

Conservative party chairman Bob Montserrat countered with a realistic statement, "The Russians are willing to use everything and anything to have their athletes compete faster and stronger." Montserrat continued, "The Moscow Games . . . . is a propaganda opportunity to present a picture of Russia which in actuality is a fraud."

Liberal party chairman Jeff Markowitz reacted strongly when he said, "boycotting the Olympics won't settle foreign policy."

Probably the most influential speaker of the night other than Mr. Kelly was Sydnee Maree. Maree, the Wildcat runner from South Africa who cannot participate in international meets because the IOC has banned South Africa's apartheid government, said, "the U.S. will need a lot of friends for Russia to change their frame of mind; it's a fight between the United States and Russia to gain African states."

In an impromptu speech, the two-time bronze medal winner, George Breen, stated, "the press is unfair in describing the athletes as selfish for wanting to compete. Although the medals are important, participating in the Olympics is a thrill of a lifetime for an athlete. They can look back later in their life and say I did something really exciting."

Members of the audience tossed the Olympic "political football" between politics and athletics. Bruce Keogh adequately summarized the meeting with a quote from Franklin Jacobs, a 22-year old high jumper from Fairleigh-Dickinson University, N.J., "I have always dreamed of being a superstar." He still does and adds, "I have faith in my government and if they believe it would be best to boycott the Olympics, then I'm all for it."

In Kelly's concluding speech, he gave the result of a poll among 1,000 Olympic hopefuls training at Colorado Springs. The Majority of the athletes believed that the most effective sanction against Russia would be a "total economic boycott by us (U.S.) and our allies."

no longer a shelter from the draft. He said that those to be drafted would have to be selected by a lottery since another war fought by those unable to pay college tuition would not be tolerated.

He also believes that women will definitely be drafted should the reinstatement take place. He said that, on paper, there will be no distinction. He doubts, however, that any women will see combat.

During the past four months, Dr. Reilly has become more and more disturbed over the direction that United States policy was taking.

He said that the Soviets would take the reinstatement as a warning. The Chinese, however, "would be delighted."

Reilly feels that the hostage situation in Iran has created a wartime mood in the United States, the likes of which has not been seen since the Cuban Missile Crisis of the early 1960s. "It can be resolved," he said.

He foresees a non-aligned Iran. "There will be no Muslim Soviet satellites," Reilly said.

"The Soviets don't have to conquer Iran to get oil. Right now, they are in a better position to buy it than we are."

With regard to the possibility of war in the near future, Dr Reilly said, "Once the toboggan is started, it cannot be stopped."

Does America Want War?

American does not want to go to war.

America's indignation grows as hostages continue to be held captive in Iran. The Soviet invasion of Afghanistan rekindles the distrust and outright fear most Americans feel when confronted with Russian activity and the communist ideology that underlies it. The threat of losing access to the oil fields of the Persian Gulf has aroused America's basic instincts of self-preservation.

America is outraged, fearful and feel threatened. But does America want to go to war? One might be led to believe so, if one listens to those who formulate U.S. foreign policy.

Case in point — the Senate's endless debating proved to be an insurmountable obstacle to the passage of the SALT II treaty, a document which would have at least provided the basis for the discussion of arms limitation with the Soviets.

Another example — President Carter, who if he failed to incite the "moral equivalent of war" in his energy program, succeeded in his State of the Union address. He called for an increase in defense spending: "It's imperative that Congress approve this strong defense budget for 1981, encompassing a five percent real growth in authorizations, without any reduction." He also called for revitalization of the Selective Service System "so that we can begin registration and then meet future mobilization needs rapidly if they arise."

Detente is dead, say some politicians. Others maintain that it never existed in the first place. The United Nations is powerless. Diplomacy is ineffectual. Our alternatives to war diminish, they say.

Still, does America want to go to war? Perhaps the people whose opinions should be sought on this question are those who would have to fight.

One gets the impression from students on this campus that most are not ready to take up arms, to travel from home, to engage in combat . . . to die. Local television news broadcasts have already featured organizations formed on Drexel, Penn, and Temple's campuses to protest the reinstatement of selective Service registration.

There are many reasons why American does not want to go to war. Perhaps it is because Afghanistan has never proved itself to be a friendly and cooperative ally. Perhaps it is because the average American feels the Persian Gulf is so distant from his experience. Perhaps it is because we have been told that our military power is inferior to that of the Soviets, although both have the power to destroy the earth again and again.

But perhaps the most important reason that America does not want to go to war is because we have come to despise war. America suffers what psychologists have called the delayed stress syndrome from the Vietnam War. The atrocities of that war are portrayed in current literature and film, and still are a cause for shame for the American people.

If we back down from our cris is now, say some, if we refuse to take up the spirit of war, we will be showing our weakness.

Those who would be expected to fight in the next war, however, are those who identified with the strength of the Vietnam veteran in the film, Coming Home, when he said, "I'm having a lot of trouble living with myself for what I did over there." How can this generation be expected to fight another war?

More Housing

To the Editor:

In response to Brad Goodwin's letter in the Villanovan last week, I have to comment. Although Mr. Goodwin had some valid points, he obviously is not aware of the Off Campus Residents (O.C.R.). Poor planning? yes.

There are 6100 full-time undergraduate students at Villanova. There are 2650 resident students and approximately 1700 commuters. This leaves approximately 1750 O.C.R.s. That is 29 percent of the full-time student!

Approximately 400 students move off campus every year by their own preference. This means that approximately 950 students were forced to move off campus — or never got a chance to live on campus.

Let me reemphasize that point. Approximately 950 students would like to be on campus (15-1/2 percent.) Why not build a new dorm? In the beginning of this year, Villanova said that student enrollment is supposed to decline in the next 10-20 years. Even if student enrollment decreased 10 percent, that would still leave approximately 350 students off campus (that wish they were not.) Surely that is enough to build a new dorm! I know that Stanford houses over 500 students — but St. Mary's only houses 300 students. Fedigan, Corr, Delury, Galberry and Austin all house between 77 and 122 students. If enrollment goes down in future years, there will still be a need for a new dorm.

Villanova is going to start a new process for acceptance starting this spring. If it works, there will be not a problem with freshman getting on campus (as in previous years), but this will not take care of the juniors and seniors who are forced to move off campus. Another point I would like to mention is: Why turn away qualified applicants as a cure for this problem?

I have sent a copy of this letter to Father President Driscoll, and would appreciate an answer to the letter via the Villanovan. I also would appreciate an answer which is more valid than "Student enrollment is supposed to drop," or "The new system of enrollment will take care of the problem," or "There is not enough room to build one." The first two statements I have already disproven, and the third is not true (one example: the field between Sullivan and the railroad tracks, and there are many more.) Remember, it doesn't have to be the size of Stanford.

In closing, please do not get me wrong. I am an active member of several organizations on campus. I will enjoy the Connelly Center as much as anyone else — probably more. I too will be toasting marshmallows by the fire (?), but afterwards it would be nick to go back to my dorm, instead of walking to the train, waiting for the train, paying for my ride on the train, and walking from the train to my "off campus dorm" (??).

Sincerely,
Jeff Page

P.S. All the statistics I have used in this letter were validated by the Office of the Dean of Men.

Red Tape

To the Editor:

For four years now we have silently observed the bureaucratic red tape that exists at Villanova University, as well as its shoddy treatment of students.

Since we are running out of time, we are seeking answers to the questions that have been raised during the past four years:

1. How can a senior be consistently closed out of classes?
2. Why must we pay a fee for a misplaced meal card lost between semesters, when in fact we pay complete room and board at the beginning of the semester?
3. Does anyone know what the "general fee" is that has appeared on our tuition bill for four years?
4. Has anyone ever been informed that the cost of medications other than tetracycline and cough syrup find themselves on your tuition bill? The infirmary fails to mention this.
5. Is living in Good Counsel, Stanford, or St. Mary's worth $100 extra? Does Good Counsel use that much extra water? Does St. Mary's feel cooler in the summertime? Does Stanford have to pay for rat food?
6. What actually does an R.A. do, other than being a military aide?
7. We are well aware that college food everywhere lacks the appeal of home cooking, but we fail to see why we must make daily treks to fast food restaurants because the food here is so bad.
8. Why do Rosemont students get the privilege of van service while Villanova students must seek alternative transportation during evening hours? Do they pay extra tuition or is this included in their "general fee?"

Any answers to these questions will be greatly appreciated. We do not want to leave Villanova uneducated and we are sure the administration will want alumni donations in the future. Would it not?

Respectfully,
Four perplexed seniors,
E.T., B.B., M.D., L.T.

On February 9, President Carter will send his report on the Selective Service System to Congress, which will include his decision as to whether women will be included in draft registration. Carter, in his State of the Union address on Wednesday night said he does not expect to call for reimposition of the draft itself, but felt "Registration would be prudent in the face of the crisis in the Middle East.

The penalty for failure to register is five years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

We approached some Villanova students to see how they felt about the situation. We asked: How do you feel about the draft? Do you feel that women should be drafted? If you were drafted, what would you do?

Anthony Bongiovanni, senior: "I think that women being drafted is wonderful. I would love to have a woman next to me in the trench when it gets cold."

Gina Falbo, sophomore: "If the draft was passed, I'd go. It's only fair. If the ERA goes through, women will have to go; it's part of the bargain. I think there should be limitations on age and family responsibilities, however."

Laura Proske, junior: "I would not fight in combat, but I would do a non-combat job. I don't think I would be personally able to kill someone."

Ted Burke, senior: "I feel that the draft should include both men and women. I don't feel that I would want to go unless it involved national security."

Juanita Schrems, sophomore: "I don't like the idea of women being drafted. I'm for women's lib, but when it comes to being drafted, they're going to the extreme. If I was drafted, I would probably try to beat the system and join the Navy first. I think I would enjoy that more."

Chris Whalen, junior: "There's nothing wrong with the draft. I think it would be wrong to run. But I really don't think that women are either culturally or physically suited for combat."

A Question of Confidence

. . . This community serves society by developing and sustaining an academic environment in which the potentialities of its members may be realized . . .

. . . Given its character and resources, Villanova is committed to offering such undergraduate programs as will best serve the needs of its constituencies . . .

. . . Furthermore, it seeks to involve students, faculty and administrators in the development of University policy through appropriate structures of governance . . .

Board of Trustees, 1979
Villanova University Mission Statement

The ideological thrust of this document has already been eroded by the Board of Trustees themselves as a result of their own apathy and failure to assume their inherent responsibility to the Villanova community. As a result, the threat of faculty unionization is impeding the administration's planning for future academic years, renovations of aging facilities and replacement of obsolete academic equipment has been postponed, and finally, the cost of education at Villanova is dangerously close to exceeding the acceptable level of the market.

The University Budget for the fiscal 1980-1981 year is nearing completion, and the expected rise in tuition and room and board looks dismal at best for the majority of Villanova students. The students can expect a 10% rise in tuition costs, or $350. In addition, resident students will pay $250 more next year to live on campus. Furthermore, for the first time, there will be a cost differential between colleges. Engineering and Nursing students can expect to pay more for their education than other students.

For years, the University Senate has made recommendations to the Board of Trustees concerning the financial policies of the university which have been ultimately rejected and ignored.

These recommendations have included the employment of current endowment income, fund-raising drives, allocation of budget surpluses to the current fund, exploration of additional sources of income and perhaps more importantly, a reassessment of the Board of Trustees fund-raising posture. In most universities, the Board of Trustees is responsible for generating funds.

The Board is supposed to have individuals within its membership who have the personal capability and personal and professional contacts for substantially increasing the University's coffers. However, the fund-raising results of the Board of Trustees have (with the exception of John Connelly) been inadequate and disappointing. A long term result of their past inactivity is manifesting itself in the upcoming budget. Last year, student tuition and related fees accounted for 95-97% of the total operating budget of this University. This year, the trend is apparently continuing with students not only receiving this undue financial burden; but also, in education, which in some areas is becoming less and less competitive with comparable schools.

Students studying engineering of the sciences will get an education taught by experienced and qualified professors. However, he will not receive the practical training necessary in lab work because of obsolete equipment. The technology of today is so rapidly changing that the equipment used in research evolves continuously. In order to provide the most dynamic programs, money must be expended in order to acquire these sophisticated instruments for the use of both faculty and students. However, it has become impossible for Villanova University to compete with other educational institutions who can provide these necessary tools to their students. If this trend is not reversed, Villanova will see in the near future that matriculating students will not attend here; but rather, will go to other schools because of the opportunities they provide.

In addition, other badly needed student-oriented programs have been cut or postponed as a result of Villanova's budgetary problems. The Master's degrees in Taxation and Business Administration, originally considered for implementation in 1979-80, has been suspended indefinitely because the funds to make these programs self-sustaining are unavailable. Renovations of older dormitories, classroom buildings and other buildings have been either cut or postponed until funding becomes available. Financial stability, one of Villanova's higher priorities, is plainly an idea whose implementation is so extremely rigorous and difficult that the Board does not want to assume responsibility for it. After all, it takes an enormous amount of time and energy to raise funds and ensure successful financial planning and stability. The Board has never exhibited any penchant for this type of activity.

Hard times for higher education are drawing near. The boom years of the 1960's and 1970's when higher education grew dramatically have gone bust. Private schools are trapped between mounting inflation and sliding enrollments. Some 34% of America's private colleges are losing ground financially and eating up their reserves. Inflation has caused a yawning tuition gap between public and private schools, forcing private schools to price themselves out of the market. In addition, inflation makes potential contributors to college endowments more stingy and makes their contributions worth less.

In response to these problems we advocate the following:

1. Freeze upon all athletic programs with exception to conformance to Title IX, and intramurals,

2. immediate expansion of the Office of Public Relations. This is the administrative office in charge of fund-raising at Villanova,

3, a hiring freeze must be implemented on certain administrative and faculty positions,

4. the university must cut administrative costs across the board,

5. conversion of low level staff to work study through attrition,

6. the derivation of formula shifting student enrollment from the colleges that are over crowded to colleges that are under-enrolled, and, 7. combine the offices of the Dean of Men and Women (and budget the combined office for not more than 2/3 of their combined budgets for the fiscal year 1979-80).

In addition, the University must take immediate action with regard to increasing the amount of endowment. The endowment funds are monies donated to the university in order to provide stability. The annual income from the fund can be used to offset current expense. If the amount of endowment is increased, the amount of income returned annually increases, thus reducing the university's reliance upon student tuition.

When asked if an endowment of $7 million was adequate for a university such as Villanova, Mr. Thomas G. LaBrecque, a member of the Board of Trustees, replied, "No, of course not." From this admission, we have proposed the following resolution to be debated in the February Senate meeting:

"Resolved: That the University Senate recommend to Father President Driscoll that any construction on new facilities be postponed until the fund-raising efforts stated in the first Covenant Campaign with regard to endowment are realized."

Villanova's approach to the 80's must be radically different from that implemented in the past. The Board of Trustees has an obligation to ensure continued academic excellence while reducing the reliance placed upon student related sources of income. Villanova's Board of Trustees must overcome their apparently natural tendency to be passive spectators rather than active participants. The simple fact is that if the Board is to be active and competent, the process must be managed. Therefore, we ask the Board members themselves to evaluate their function and eliminate any dead weight. If Villanova is to prosper in the future, the Board of Trustees is responsible for not only policy-making, but, more importantly, for fund-raising. If they fail in this mission, they are ultimately responsible for Villanova's demise.

That day is upon us once again. It's a time of romance and love. It's a special day for just you and your special person. Valentine's Day! It's a traditional day which gives us the opportunity to say I like you, or I love you. And what better way to say it than with flowers. To help you do it right, the University Services Committee will be sponsoring "Roses for Your Sweetheart." Orders for Roses will be taken February 6-13 from 11:00-2:00 in front of the North Lounge. You can pick them up February 14 (Valentine's Day) in the same location. So save your nickels and dimes (it doesn't cost that much) and say it right this year. You'll be glad you did!

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission "What It Is And What It Does."

What would have happened if Three Mile Island had turned into a major nuclear accident? How safe is nuclear energy? What are the benefits, shortcomings? These questions and more can be answered by members of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, Wednesday February 6 at 7:30 P.M. in the Day Hop. The Villanova Union will be sponsoring a twenty-thirty minute lecture entitled "What it is and What it does." The lecture will be followed by a question and answer period in which you can have your questions answered. Is nuclear energy the answer to our problems? You can find out!

Wanted: Cultural Arts Coordinator Applications Due Mon., Feb. 4

Applications for Cultural Arts Coordinator are due by Monday, February 4, 1980 to the secretary in Dougherty Room 208. Signup for an interview at the time you hand in an application. Applications are available in the Union Office. Interviews will be held later during the week of February 4.

Cultural Arts is one of the most versatile of all the Union Committees. In addition to such events as the Nutcracker Suite, they also plan coffeehouses, lectures and anything else that they can think of to try and put a little culture in our lives here at V.U.

Facts About Parking

In enduring four years of attempting to park at Villanova, I have been repeatedly angered by what I thought was security's lack of enforcement of parking regulations. Last Tuesday, I went to find out Securities side of the issue. I spoke with Captain Cunnane, the head of Villanova security. These are the facts.

FACT 1 There are 2400 available spaces of campus parking. There are 2000 stickers given out. That means that there should be at least 400 extra parking spaces around campus. The only problem is that you may have to walk a distance to class. Many people also forget that there is parking in front of the stadium. The problem is obvious. There are a lot of illegally parked cars.

FACT 2 Security can only tow as many cars as Radnor garage can hold. This number is limited. Also, most towing is done on campus, because parking on campus is more limited. Security does try to tow the more flagrant offenders, but they need your help. When you spot a flagrant offender, and have a legitimate complaint, report it to security. This is the only way we can clean up the problem.

FACT 3 Security is not out to persecute anybody. They are especially worried about commuters. They don't want to tow cars that a commuter may need to get to a job with. This is security's dilemma. When they try to do their job, they are the bad guys. When they don't again they are the bad guys.

FACT 4 There is no reason not to buy a sticker. Parking at Villanova is extremely cheap compared to other area schools. The problem comes when people try to beat the system, at others expenses. We can't look only at residents. Many commuters are part of the problem. Basically, we are going to have to try to police ourselves. This article was not meant to justify security's actions. I am merely trying to present the other side. I think that security could concentrate more effort into at least the main lot. They do need our help. You must report cars without stickers. If you have a proposal to improve the system, tell the A.C.S. and we'll submit the proposal for you. Captain Cunnane is willing to listen to us, but not a lone voice or an angry mob. That is why proposals should be through us.

Leo Koletas

Hey, You

Well, the first semester of the 80's is in its second week. Had any trouble finding a parking space? If you think its bad now, wait until it snows. Or if you were lucky enough to find a space, have you had any trouble starting your car after it sat idle in the parking lot all day? What do you do when you are not in class — sit around in the Pie Shop and complain that there is nothing for a commuter to do on the Villanova campus?

Did you know that there is an organization on this very campus that just might be able to help you with these problems? I am referring to the A.C.S. Now you're thinking, "Well, they don't do anything." However, it is exactly that attitude which is keeping the A.C.S. from achieving its full potential. This is YOUR organization and yes off-campus residents, this is for you too. So it's called the Association of Commuter Students; what's in a name? Besides, you do commute. It is important for all of you to realize that the A.C.S. could be the largest organization on campus. Do you know the influence this organization could have at Villanova. We are a majority here and have a right to be heard.

Complaining in the Pie Shop does $&'+%• complaining at an A.C.S. meeting could probably lead to action and more importantly could bring results. Get involved! If you want to complain, you might as well complain where it will do some good. Who knows, you might improve your social life by taking part in the trips, parties, and lectures sponsored by the A.C.S. More importantly, you'll find a great group of people who are interested and want to help. See you soon.

RSA

RSA Reevaluation Committee

In order to reevaluate the present structure as contained in the constitution, to develop new and innovative programming ideas and to update the organization to meet the changing needs of residents, the RSA has formed a reevaluation committee composed of seven resident students and moderator Matt Christenson.

Each of these seven members: Karen Dunn, Diane Genovese, Mike Imperiale, Paul Andrews, John Couzens, Shawn Sullivan and Helen Haney represent a different facet of the RSA including executive board, hall councils, judicial board and resident constituency, giving the board a diversified and well rounded nature. If effective this semester, the committee could become an integral part of the RSA.

Administrators and residents at V.U. will be interviewed as to their opinions about the RSA and their suggestions for improvement. With all of this information in mind the committee will then critically look at our system.

The committee will also compile a list of all new programming ideas they have found for use by next year's hall councils. The recommendations will be forwarded to the executive committee of the RSA for further action.

The RSA has often been criticized for not doing much for residents. It is hoped that through this committee the RSA will be criticized but at the same time, suggestions will be made for improvement. It is easy to criticize, but not quite as easy to improve. We need an effective and functioning RSA and we are the only ones who can make it so. When approached for your opinions and suggestions please give them honestly. Good luck to the committee and next year may we all see the fruits of their labor exemplified in a strong and effective Resident Student Association.

Partying At Villanova

A Lost Cause?

By MICHAEL MULROONEY

While it may seem to current freshmen and sophomores that Villanova's social life is unduly restricted, upperclassmen can still remember a time when Villanova had a reputation as one of the best partying schools on the East Coast. This was a time when one could go home at Christmas, visit old high school friends at a local party, and tell them with pride that you attended Villanova. It seemed there was never a weekend without a number of parties on campus with which to choose from.

When I look back on my college years, I can recall many memorable party moments. What upperclassman could ever forget those Friday afternoon T.G.'s, or those Monday night Cat's Eyes. Another regular hang out was the "Quad," in between Sheehan and Sullivan, where one could always find a couple of kegs, music being played out the windows, and a group of people having a great time.

This was also a time when Fedigan reached its peak as a partying dorm. Fedigan was filled with rugby players. Anyone who has ever been to a rugby party will understand what I mean when I say rugby players can party! Perhaps the biggest partying day of the year was St. Patrick's Day. Early in the morning, the basement of Bartley Hall was filled with about fifty kegs of beer. This was an unofficial school holiday, since few people went to classes, and those that did were in no condition to take notes.

"What upperclassman could ever forget those Friday afternoon T.G.'s, or those Monday nite Cat's Eyes. Last year was a disaster for parties on campus."

Last year was a disaster for parties on campus. The L.C.B. used various threats and scare tactics, which greatly diminished the social life at Villanova. The only dormitory which successfully threw large scale parties was O'Dwyer Hall. Before its conversion into a girls dormitory, O'Dwyer Hall threw a party entitled "The O'Dwyer Final Fest." This was a party which enabled members of the O'Dwyer Country Club (as it was sometimes called) to leave the dorm in the spring, in the same style they entered it in the fall, in the form of a party.

Looking back at my favorite party moments, I feel it is no coincidence that most all of them were at 'on campus parties.' It is a shame that most all parties today have to be held off campus. Many freshmen and sophomores miss out on one of colleges most memorable experiences: The Party! Since freshmen and sophomores are not allowed to have a car on campus, they have no way to get to these parties. Now people will tell you, "You don't have to drink to have a good time." That is fine and true, however other forms of mind altering substances are not only more expensive and harder to obtain, but many of them are also illegal. For this reason I am calling for a revival of the 'on campus party.' I think if we all work together, we can get this school back its respectibility.

The following are a few suggestions to throwing a successful party. The first and most important is the clientele to be invited. This should consist of as close as possible equal numbers of both sexes. (If your party consists of more than two different sexes be sure everyone invited is well aware of this fact.) The next question you probably have is how many people should I invite, and how can I let them know about my party? The number of people depends on the size of the room the party is to be held in. I recommend inviting 10-20% fewer people than you expect or would like to have. Whenever there is a party on campus, people will hear about it and bring friends. A party is best advertised by word of mouth. This way everyone is somebody's friend, and you will encounter less fights and rival groups showing up. It is also a good idea to have one or two large sober people to act as bouncers in case anyone does get out of hand. The mere presence of a large

IFC Elects Woman President

Leslie Palmer started her term as the first female president of the Interfraternity Council (I.F.C.) on January 1. "I find it super challenging because I'm a female leader in a typically male role," said Palmer.

Palmer started in the I.F.C. when she was pledging as a first semester sophomore. Second semester she became the president of her sorority, Phi Beta Delta. As president she served on the Board of Presidents of the I.F.C. She had been involved in the I.F.C. for three semesters before she was elected president.

Palmer is also in charge of the Board of Presidents and the General Assembly of the I.F.C. "We're rewriting the I.F.C. constitution now and there's a lot of reorganizing to do in the Council," said Palmer. "I'd like to get the Council working along the lines it should be. It's pretty inactive right now."

"In the last few years the leaders have been bringing it back and I'd like to continue along those lines. We need better public relations for all the Greek organizations to get to the student body. I'd like to see the Greeks respected and thought of as something to join or pledge," stated Palmer.

"My major goal is to get the I.F.C. working the way it should be and to promote the Greek organizations. We're handling most of the publicity for the eleven Greek organizations and we hope to sponsor some fund raisers, something like a Casino night, for the whole campus and not solely for Greeks. The money the I.F.C. makes will go back into the Greek organizations," continued Palmer.

She concluded, "It'd also like to bring all the fraternities and sororities together. They're all doing well separately but they should work towards common goals and get a lot more done."

CAMPUS COMEDY

My Teacher Is A. . .

By BARBARA ANNE HIGGINS

An often repeated scene in the beginning of any semester is when one student approached another and says, "Did you ever have Dr. Whathisname for Psychology? What's he like?" The response is usually vague and casual; like, "He's all right as a teacher I guess, but I flunked his course," or "Funny guy, he's really cool." What does that tell you? Either your friend slept through the entire semester, or he wants you to go through the same misery as he did in the class.

In order to correct this problem, we have compiled a small breakdown of teacher's qualifications. Now you can accurately label a professor's method of teaching by letter by referring to this list. Some deviations are of course expected, but most teachers can be assigned to one of the following groups.

A. The frustrated actor. This teacher believes wholeheartedly in the old adage, "The world is a stage," and demonstrates it remarkably well in the classroom. His whole lecture sounds like a stand-up comedy act, with a few gems of knowledge sandwiched between an array of self-indulgent monologues. Gives a very laid-back appearance, but usually demolishes you in the final.

B. The Egghead. Although this type of professor possesses incredible intellectual talents he lacks the final ingredient which would enable him to teach well; the ability to convey knowledge. His students experience acute writer's cramp from taking down every proverbial syllable that flows from his lips, but when rereading their notes, they find a mass of obscure abstractions. Tests are usually equally abstract.

C. The Self-Appointed Master. These teachers are always authorities on some obscure subject, and look upon all students as "Philistines." They constantly remind the class of their endless accomplishments, demanding their utmost reverence and respect. They enjoy teaching only because it allows them to assert their unmitigating superiority in the realms of knowledge. They often hand back tests and papers with long, condescending comments scrawled across the page in red ink. Because they recognize the obvious density of their "charlatan" students, exams are simple and usually objective (They hate to read essays that may pose alternate views from their own).

D. The Radical. Intelligent person with basic teaching abilities, this teacher feels an uncontrollable need to shock his students. Whether he feels he has to keep the class awake by spicing up the lecture, or he lacks the confidence in his normal personality, is unknown. A normal display of the Radical's methods: discussing his sex life, giving the finger to someone in class, claiming that Shakespeare was an ignoramus, or informing the students that President Lincoln was really gay. He caters to the males in the class by telling dirty jokes, and wholly enjoys seeing the females blush at his brashness. He is an unrelinquishing name-dropper, and tries to assure everyone that "he was in our seats only a few years ago." Tests are cake, and he gives out A's like gumdrops. Don't expect to learn much more than the latest dirt in Bryn Mawr.

E. Everyone's Dream Teacher. Almost an extinct breed, you can still find a few of these professors wandering around. They are intelligent, well-educated, personable scholars who take a genuine interest in the student's academic career. They are advocates of an old method of teaching which turns even the most ridiculously boring subject into an enjoyable and comprehensive lecture. Office hours are always open, and they welcome questions and comments both in and outside of class. They do not believe in assigning term papers, and understand that a personal matter can sometimes be more important than school work. An absolute blessing when you find yourself with four other teachers from groups A, B, C, and D in one semester.

N.B. I am happy to say that I was lucky enough to get 5 group E teachers this semester, and I am confident that they will take this article into account when assigning my final grade.

Editors Note: ALL The Villanovan Staff was lucky enough to get all group E teachers this semester. We hope that they will take this information into account at finals time.

VFL March on Washington

By EILEEN CUNNIFFE

On January 22, 1973, the United States Supreme Court handed down a tragic decision that has since resulted in the loss of nearly ten million innocent human lives. Since that ruling seven years ago, the legal and social controversies have continued to mount.

For pro-lifers, the battle has been a long uphill climb with nearly as many setbacks as advances. Legal loopholes and terminologies have resulted in gross inconsistencies and injustices. To mention just a few, in many states a minor may not have her ears pierced without parental consent, but no consent is required to have an abortion; and parents may sue the doctor who delivers their child for "wrongful birth" if the child is born with handicaps of which they were not previously warned.

In spite of such frustrating legislation, Right-to-Life groups across the country have continued to form a strong and consistent grass-roots movement over the past several years, supporting life from the unborn to the elderly.

Last Tuesday, on the anniversary of the Roe-Wade decision, tens of thousands of Americans joined in the seventh "March For Life" in the nation's Capitol. A busload of students from Villanova participated in the day's events, both locally and in Washington, D.C.

A recent proclamation by the Delaware County Council supporting the pro-life cause drew much criticism from area pro-abortionists, including several NOW members, who insisted that the Council's pro-life stand was an unfair representation of Delaware County's Citizens. So before going to Washington on Tuesday morning, several local pro-life groups, including the Villanovans For Life, stopped at the County Courthouse in Media to show appreciation for the Council's proclamation and to counter the "pro-choice" pickets who assembled to protest the County's "Pro-Life Day."

Upon arriving in Washington, the Villanovans For Life met up with the National Youth Pro-Life Coalition members from various parts of the country, and joined them in the march. (By chance, the VFL marched next to pro-lifers from Notre Dame, and although there was a difference of opinion as to who won a recent basketball game, students from both campuses were united in their pro-life convictions).

About mid-way through the march from the Ellipse to the Capitol Building, a cold rain started to fall on the marchers, and messages on the brightly-colored posters carried by so many of the protesters were nearly washed away. Nevertheless, the enthusiasm remained in spite of the rain and pro-lifers assembled in front of the Capitol to rally for a Human Life Amendment, to renew the commitment to pro-life standards in our legislation, and to listen to messages from pro-life leaders and politicians across the country-including a message of support from Presidential hopeful Ronald Reagan.

After the rally the marchers spread out to lobby with their elected representatives and to remind them that the pro-life movement will not go away until all human life is once again protected by the government. Villanova students called upon legislators from Pennsylvania, Illinois, and New Jersey to thank those who supported pro-life legislation in the past year, and to criticize those whose voting records were pro-abortion.

The March For Life is a consistent way of renewing the pro-life pledge; but it is merely one phase of the on-going educational and political challenges which face pro-lifers today. As the marchers, cold and wet but still determined, returned to their buses at the end of the day and headed home to Villanova and hundreds of other destinations around the nation, the seventh "March For Life" came to an end. But the eighth year of legalized abortion-on-demand was already well underway — and at the alarming national rate of one abortion every 30 seconds, not a moment is to be wasted in the struggle for Life-legislation.

"For pro-lifers, the battle has been a long uphill climb ... legal loopholes and terminologies have resulted in gross inconsistencies and in justices."

Freshman - Still Learning

By DEIRDRE FLANAGAN and SHARON MILLS

Congratulations freshmen of '83, you've survived your first college semester. You thought life wasn't so bad the first four months as long as you were armed with a blue book, a dictionary of 10,001 college terms, and of course a six-pack of friends. You're proud that you know the post office hours and the four types of salad dressing in Dougherty. Do you still remember your mailbox combination, or your roommate's name? You'd better look through the freshman record and brush up on the names and faces of your ten closest friends. This semester doesn't include Orientation Counselors and "Howdie-doodie" games. Your Chem teacher isn't going to start classes with a few rounds of "Elephant and Giraffe" so everyone can become better acquainted.

'We're talking about college life in the raw. Who cares about the 101 ways to make your bed, or Level 1 laundry laws. By now you've discovered which washers stretch your clothes, and which ones eat them. What we're discussing is classes, profs, and the drop/add routine. All you dropped and added last semester were your books. Now you know it's possible to have an English teacher with a real name instead of the famous Dr. Staff. -

If parties in Dougherty were the highlight of last semester's weekends, consider sampling an off-campus festivity this semester. Sugartown isn't a confectionary fantasyland where everyone goes on Thursday and doesn't return until Sunday. It's a real town, with real people, and real parties . . . real wild parties. Also, Frat gatherings have now lowered their height requirement so even freshmen can get in — too bad Kellys doesn't work on the same system.

Where have all the tailgate parties voyaged to? Good question. Rumor says the third floor of the library. Now you know why they card you, but where do they hide the keg??

bouncer is enough to quell most disturbances.

Another important question to consider is what beverage should I serve? Often people jump to the conclusion to get a keg and serve beer. This is fine most of the time but occasionally people like a change of pace. For this I recommend a grain punch. Grain alcohol can be purchased at most any State Store, and because it is so strong (190 proof) it can be stretched to serve many people. My personal favorite is grain mixed with Hawaiian Punch (Tropical Fruit), various fruit juices, and fresh fruit (apples, peaches, oranges, grapefruit, etc.). Many people leave out the fruit, but this is what I feel really makes the punch. It seems the fruit soaks up the alcohol, and just eating a few pieces of fruit will leave you in a wonderful state of nirvana.

The final item to consider is what type of music should be played. This is often a difficult choice to make since some people like rock, and others like to dance. Disco is dying, so I recommend a variety of rock. The Beatles, The Rolling Stones, The Who, Led Zeppelin, and The Grateful Dead are always popular at parties. Much of the new rock coming out is also suitable for both dancing and listening pleasure. So with these tips in mind let's all go out and organize a couple of parties. They can start out slow, but believe me they will grow! Let's get Villanova back on its feet for the 80's!

Gary Numan

The Pleasure Principle

by Chris Siawecki

It is difficult to immediately grasp and label The Pleasure Principle because coldness and impersonalization are parts of Gary Numan's message. My first few listenings resulted in stirring up only the word 'interesting,' but I was groping for the handle on something more specific. Luckily, I heard John Cleese of Monty Python's Flying Circus portray a theatre critic in a skit about Neville Shumpe, whose plays described the human condition in terms of British rail. In the midst of his beautifully insane tirade about ambiguity, he emotes the phrase, "a plea for understanding in a mechanized ethos." Bravo, troops.

Gary Numan's latest is impressive for only his second album. It lashes out at technology as a way of life (what, again?) through his often awesome lyrics. But, the album is unsettling rather than frightening because of the limitations inherent to a musical vehicle whose essence is control of self and emotion, against which his lyrics rebel. He translates this control into basic three- and four-note riffs, sterile production, repetition, and a voice devoid of all but the starkest emotions. The result is a mixture of syncopated circuitry and unpretentious synthesizer washes, with Christopher Payne's viola rippling everywhere.

If Roger Waters ever held a write-alike contest, Gary Numan would make Springsteen's blues about factory life sound like The Wizard Of Oz. Some of the titles are incredible, such as "Metal," "Complex," "Observer," and "Engineers." In places, the lyrics to "Metal" are especially charming: "My Mallory heart/Is sure to fail" and "I'm still confusing love with need." His odd detachment, when adapted to a Bowie-esque vocal style of rapid call-and-repeat, wonderfully understates the rage in his words. He must really have his alien bit down, because when I showed the cover photo of him to a friend of mine, the best he could come up with was, "Well, at least he doesn't have long fingernails."

Sound Waves

Warren Zevon's Bad Luck Streak In Dancing School was more than a year in the making and should be in your hands soon. According to Warren, the album contains "the kind of music I've always wanted to write. There's one instrumental and some orchestral linking, some odder structures. I would say it probably bears a strong Stravinsky influence." (Zevon met the maestro through an earlier mentor, conductor, and critic Robert Craft.) The classical interludes, however, do not preclude some muscular and antic rock from the old werewolf. The "Peckinpah of Rock," as he has been dubbed, sometimes leaves the children home and gets in a little practice with his .44 Magnum revolver, restricting its use to "the far back country, where only the true buckaroos and the mules and horses and my girlfriend ever venture." However, the Magnum has been supplanted on the back cover of Bad Luck Streak by Uzi submachine gun, fave of terrorists worldwide.

Jim Morrison, who may get a posthumous Grammy for his An American Prayer, will stand revealed in fuller detail than ever before when No One Here Gets Out Alive, biography by Danny Sugarmen and Jerry Hopkins, is published in April. The book takes up Morrison's life in the midst of early childhood and ends with the most complete account yet of his mysteriously untimely death. The book has drawn the wrath of the Morrison estate; Jim's father (a retired admiral) and his father-in-law (a retired high school principal) joined forces to brand it a "ghoulish despicable rip-off." A chapter — not the one about his death — will be excerpted in Rolling Stone in March.

Linda Ronstadt says her forthcoming album Mad Love, produced by Peter Asher, is simply "good rock & roll." Linda sang some of it at the Fox-Warfield in San Francisco at two benefit shows for the Cambodian boat people. She performed with Joan Baez (who organized the benefit) and Hoyt Axton.

The Car's lead guitarist Elliot Easton recently told Jas Obrecht of Guitar Player how he helps reproduce the band's complex studio sound on stage: "My hands are constantly moving. The way our songs are structured, the guitar will jump out for maybe two bars and then come back into the ensemble. I don't use the volume pedal for this . . . I'm quick enough with the knobs and the toggle switch. Once I get used to a guitar, I can really do it in a split second, and this is how I get past trying to accomplish what is done on albums as overdubs.

Ride Through Time

By FRED PESCATORE

Looking for somewhere to go and something to do? Do you enjoy nature in the heart of a metropolis? Well, if you do then I think the Fairmount Park Trolley-Bus may be just for you.

The open-air green and red Fairmount Park Trolley-Bus is decked out like a streetcar of yesteryear and is Philadelphia's modern attempt to recreate the turn-of-the century Victorian Fairmount Park Trolley.

Every spring, summer and fall, the trolley-bus operates between 9:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. and takes you on a scenic 90-minute loop. The passengers may board at any one of the many stops and can get on and off as often as they like.

The trolley tours start at the Tourist Center located at 16th St. the J.F.K.Blvd. in Philadelphia, and it narrates a marvelous story about Fairmount Park as it passes hundreds of sculptures, fountains and colonial mansions. It makes about 21 stops in all which include the Academy of Natural Sciences, the Franklin Institute, the famous Philadelphia Museum of Art, the Philadelphia Zoo, America's first, Playhouse in the Park, the Mount Pleasant Mansion, Robin Hood Dell East and West — showplaces for some of the great musical talent and many other exciting places.

Fairmount Park has over three million trees and it is the largest city park in the world — encompassing 8,000 acres of history, culture and recreation.

There are many forms of recreational activity such as boating, sailing, fishing, bicycling, picnicing, horseback riding, tennis, baseball, jogging and lots more.

In the early years of American history, many wealthy people made their homes on non-historic Fairmount Park. The Schuylkill's banks were once a very picturesque suburb of Philadelphia, comprised of magnificent estates nestled on the hills overlooking the river. Today, Fairmount Park still contains a vast legacy of historic 18th and 19th century mansions, ten of which are still open to the public.

For you history buffs, the Park was the site of the Centennial Exhibition in 1876 and in fact 2 major buildings from the first American world's fair still stand — Memorial Hall and Ohio House.

Today, Memorial Hall houses a sound-and-light scale model of the entire Centennial Exposition. The Ohio House, which once was a state exhibition building in 1876, is today the Fairmount Park Information Center.

The Philadelphia Zoo, which is the nation's first, opened in 1875 and has since expanded to 42 acres which 1600 birds and animals call their home.

The Park offers much entertainment and the Playhouse in the Park offers professional theatre-in-the-round.

The Trolley-Bus also takes visitors past the Japanese Tea House which is an authentic 17th Century and to the cabin that served as Ulysses S. Grant's headquarters in the final days of the Civil War.

Culture, excitement and a bit of taste of the past all for $1.50. The admission price also entitles you to special admission discounts to all the attractions along the way. What more could anyone want?

"Northern Lights" Details Story of Struggle

By MARC LAPADULA

Northern Lights captures a simplistic sensitivity not often expressed in recent films. In a day of twisting, complex plots and exaggerated special effects, it clearly stands alone.

Northern Lights is the story of a struggle whose memory has almost been lost but cannot be forgotten by those of later years who were to benefit so much from it.

It is the story of Scandinavian wheat farmers in North Dakota. The year is 1915. The story involves hardships, restraints, and injustice. It is the dawn of a change that would affect some 40,000 farmers in the span of a year. It is the desperate attempt of disgusted men to form a Nonpartisan League so that they can gain some form of control over their futures.

One man who risks the loss of his farm, and, unavoidably the woman he loves, is Ray Sorenson, played by Bob Behling. Behling gives a strong, notable performance. The harsh realities faced by men like him are clearly exemplified in the lines on his face.

Susan Lynch plays Inga, the young woman Ray plans to marry. She is a talented actress and handles her role with versatile assurance.

Last year at the Cannes Film Festival, John Hanson and Rob Neilson received the Golden Camera award for "Best First Film," for writing and directing Northern Lights. The film, which utilizes a largely unprofessional cast, cost only $330,000. The product of their achievement can be classified as a drama-documentary, for although Ray Sorenson is a fictional character, the story behind him is a true one.

The music, by David Ozzie Ahlers, is perhaps the most intriguing element of the entire movie. It clearly conveys a mood with which an audience, foreign to the frozen recesses of North Dakota, can identify. The music is sometimes hopeful, sometimes joyous. It also at times conveys a sense of being defeated. However, this is the story of these people.

The photography is also noteworthy. Black and white film combined with Judy Irola's simple camera techniques are employed to better communicate the desolate setting.

Unfortunately, on the entertainment level, many may find Northern Lights lacking to their tastes. The audience, expecting excitement, may find itself abandoned in the long angle shots of the snow-covered fields.

Everyday action takes place. The movie primarily focuses on the plight of these people and the circumstances under which they must live and try to change.

Some perhaps forget and many do not know of the struggle that once saw families lose their land — forcing them to rise up bravely, risking everything to prevent disaster. It is to these people that the movie is dedicated. It is the memory of these men and women that is responsible for the creation of the film in the first place.

Robert Behling as Ray Sorenson, tries to convince a neighbor to join fight for farmer's rights.

A Look Inside

The Philadelphia Museum of Art

By MARY JANE GAVENDA

Any of you who have seen the movie "Rocky" will remember the thrilling jogging scene in which Rocky triumphantly runs up the famous stairs of the Philadelphia Museum of Art. Well, now that you all have observed its outside beauty on film, why don't you take a look on the inside and find out what it's really famous for?

The world-renowned Philadelphia Museum of Art offers a wide range of artistic expression from the Far East and Medieval to the Renaissance and Modern mode. Besides the magnificent paintings and sculptures by great masters such as Picasso, Renoir, Monet, Van Gogh, Rembrandt and Rodin (to name but a few), there are also wonderful "period" rooms displaying the furniture, art, and mood of the times. Among these, the chandeliered French Drawing Room, the Romanesque Cloister, the landscaped Japanese Tea House, and the mysterious Chinese Palace Hall are definite visual experiences.

Special exhibitions at the museum are continually being held. A costume gallery featuring mostly French and American styles 1700-1925, an exhibition of recent Oriental acquisitions, and an overview of travel depicted through the century will be on display through the month of February.

In addition to housing all this artistic genius, the museum provides special services to its many visitors. Free tours and gallery lectures are given on a daily basis. This coming month, lectures on Matisse, Oriental Art, and American Art of the 1960's will be featured and presented by the museum staff. Also tours of the Fairmount Park mansions and trips to China, Russia, England and Burgundy are sponsored by the museum as well as museum memberships.

The Philadelphia Museum of Art provides great opportunities either for intensive study by the art enthusiast or a new learning experience for those with little cultural background. See as much or as little as you like, and of course, don't forget to have your picture taken on the famous steps!

Specifics: To get there by public transportation, take the Paoli Local to Penn Station, cross the street to the Tourist Center and take the Fairmount Park trolley (they leave every half hour) to the museum. Admission is a mere 50c upon presentation of your trolley ticket and student I.D. The museum is opened Tuesday through Sunday from 10:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.

Coming Soon

Folksinger Oscar Brand, who has been broadcasting for WNYC since 1945, and has been a regular on network radio and television for three and a half decades, will be making his first club appearance in three years. The scene of this rare event will be THE MAIN POINT at Bryn Mawr, Saturday night, February the 2nd.

Brand is now Curator of the Songwriters Hall of Fame Museum at One Times Square, host of "The Folksong Festival" (WNYC-AM, Thursdays at 8 p.m.), interviewer for National Public Radio Network, and composer of the score for the musical, now in production, based on Robert Ardrey's "Thunder Rock." He has already been represented on Broadway by "A Joyful Noise" and "The Education of H*Y*M*A*N K*A*P*L*A*N." He still appears at colleges, universities and concert halls in folk song concerts, but rarely in night clubs.

Randy Newman will appear at Philips Auditorium, West Chester State College, West Chester, PA. Sunday evening, February 10th, at 8 p.m.

One of the most original talents on the musical scene, Newman will bring his ironic, tongue-in-cheek lyrics to the intimacy of Philips Auditorium on the West Chester State campus.

Tickets are $6.50 and $5.50 and are available at Sykes Student Union, Rosedale Avenue, Mad Platter, West Chester, Bag and Baggage, Wilmington, All Ticketron Locations, and Wanamakers, Center City.

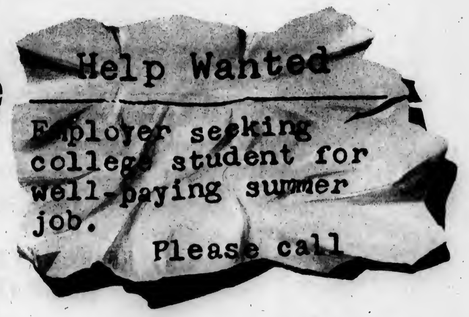
There's a lot more of these around than you might think.



And you don't have to just rely on your local newspaper to find them. Because this spring, Ford's Insider magazine will feature an entire issue on how and where to find summer employment.

There will be information on government jobs, including tips on taking the Civil Service exam. Articles on overseas jobs, too. Intern and co-op programs in private business. Jobs workin' on the railroad and other outdoor money-makers. Jobs at resorts. Even jobs at Disneyland. And for the individualist, job profiles of a clam digger and a magician.

Insider will help you find the summer job you need. And to find Insider, all you have to do is pick up a copy of your college paper and look inside. It's free from Ford.

OLYMPICS IN JEOPARDY

By JERRY VENTRESCA

For those who continue to insist that politics should not stop the 1980 Summer Olympics from taking place in Russia, the first part of this article will attempt to point out that politics long ago tarnished the spirit of the Olympics, to use a phrase of Philadelphia Inquirer Sports Editor Frank Dolson. And for those who are curious in knowing what Villanova's Olympic hopefuls feel about boycotting the Moscow Games, the article also presents interesting opinions and suggestions.

Who can forget what happened in Munich at the 1972 Summer Games? Due to conflicts in Africa and the Middle East, the Rhodesians were forced to leave the '72 Olympics because of objections to their apartheid government. Meanwhile the Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO) made it known that they didn't care if politics intervened in the Games. After a long standoff at the Olympic Village where PLO terrorists held hostage numerous Israeli athletes, tragedy finally occurred — the terrorists murdered the athletes.

Jim Tuppeny, director of the Penn Relays, probably best summarized the thoughts of the 1976 Montreal Summer Games when he said recently, "You couldn't get in the Olympic Village in Montreal; there was so much security." Sydnee Maree commented similarly. Maree is a prime example of political intervention in the Olympics. A South African citizen attending Villanova, he cannot compete in the Olympic Games due to the International Olympic Committee's (IOC) protesting of South Africa's apartheid government. "We have to admit," said Maree, "that politics exists (in the Games.)" Maree continued, saying in Montreal at the '76 Games "security was heavy because of South Africa." Politics is just as much involved in Moscow as NBC and Coca-Cola.

After President Carter presented the Soviets with a one month ultimatum to leave Afghanistan or the United States will attempt to postpone, cancel, boycott, or move the Games, numerous questions sprung up. Will the IOC postpone the Games or even cancel them? They might consider it if the U.S. receives much support. The removal of the Games is equally unlikely, especially on such short notice. Both Munich and Montreal have converted their Olympic Villages into apartments and Mexico doesn't want the Olympics as much as an exiled shah.

A boycott is the last tactic. The president's executive power includes refusal to grant Americans visas to Moscow, advise American airlines that regular flights to Moscow wouldn't be in their best interests and control equipment (such as NBC's) from being taken out and brought into this country.

At Villanova, three tracksters training for the Olympics have mixed feelings on the question of a U.S. boycott. Senior Keith Brown, training for the 400 meter said, "I don't like Russia . . . the athlete's safety might be in jeopardy and that'll hinder their performance. I plan to go, will go and pray that God protects us." Hurdler Rodney Wilson is in favor of a boycott. Wilson however felt the United States should hold an invitational meet here in the States in replace of the Olympics.

Carlton Young, a freshman competing in the 200 meter said a boycott was "allright," but he'd rather look forward to participating in the Games. He suggested the Summer Games be moved from Moscow because "it would be very dangerous for American athletes over there." All three runners favored a permanent site for future Summer Games — all agreed on Greece.

Assistant track coach Jack Pyrah argued strongly against a boycott. "It doesn't do the kids a darn bit of good if the U.S. backs out," said Pyrah. The coach of Villanova's hopefuls seemed confident that such great security will be in Russia that there is no danger for the athletes. "Unless there is an all out war," continued Pyrah, "there will be an Olympics." However he added that if half of the invited countries boycott the Games, it will be a stern message to Russia to remove their troops from Afghanistan.

Spring Season Sparks Champion Tracksters

by RAY ENGLER

The defending Indoor Track Champion Wildcats of Villanova have shown through their first four meets this season that they remain a force to be reckoned with by their challengers.

Of particular interest is freshman Rodney Wilson from Bartram High, who becomes Villanova's best hurdler since Ery Hall, the Olympic silver medalist in the high hurdles in 1968. Wilson tied Hall's all-time indoor best in the 60 yard high hurdles with a matching 7.0 time of his own at an indoor meet at Lehigh University last December 8 and has followed it up with consistently strong performances throughout the season. Wilson's mark allowed him to qualify for the IC4A and NCAA Indoor Championships.

Villanova's other outstanding freshman, Carlton Young, also ran an IC4A and NCAA qualifying time of 47.96 for the 440 yard dash, the best in the East this year, at the East Tennessee Invitational on Jan. 13. Young also sprinted a 47.0 relay leg at that same meet.

The choice of Philadelphia's Sportswriters as Athlete of the Year, Don Paige, posted solid times and still remained undefeated indoors. At the Philly Track Classic (Jan. 18), Paige captured the 1000 yard run in 2:09, winning despite the minimal challenge of a four-man field.

The following night at the Olympic Invitational in New York's Madison Square Garden, Paige held off a furious rush by Villanova alumni Mark Belger in the 1000 meters to win by four-tenths of a second (2:21.6 to 2:22.0). The lean senior then anchored the 3200 meter relay that set a meet record at the Olympic Invitational, running a 500 meter leg himself in 1:51.0.

The other members of the 3200 meter relay (Mike England, Amos Korir and John Hunter) have also had solid showings this season. England qualified for the NCAA's and IC4As with a 1:52.1 time in the 880 yard run, as well as contributing a 1:50.8 leg on that 3200 meter relay. Korir won the two-mile race at the Track Classic in a photo finish over Solomon Cheburof Fairleigh-Dickinson by only one-tenth of a second. Maree's contribution to that relay was 1:53.2.

Hunter, the Irishman, ran two solid 880s on two consecutive nights; 1:51.2 in the Track Classic two-mile relay and 1:50.0 in the 3200 meter the following night. The team total was 7:25.0 for that record-setting relay.

Others who qualified for both the NCAAs and IC4As are: Willie Syndor in the 60 yard dash (6.22 seconds at East Tennessee). Dean Childs in the mile (4:05.43 — good enough for first place — at East Tennessee) and the 3000 meter distance (7:59.3 at the Olympic Invitational), Carey Pinkowski in the mile (4:05.82), Sydney Maree in the three-mile (placing first with 13:33.62) and Kevin Dillon in the 1500 meters (3:47.6).

Dillon and Pinkowski also qualified for the IC4As in the mile and two-mile.

Villanova's next meet is Sunday in Princeton's Jadwin Gymnasium for the Princeton Relays. The following Friday (February 8), the Wanamaker-Millrose Games will be held at Madison Square Garden in New York City.

Cats Crumble

By BILL ROCK

The seventh ranked Redmen of St. John's, behind 6'8" center Wayne McKoy, outmuscled the Wildcats en-route to an 81-75 victory last Saturday at Alumni Hall in Jamaica, New York.

The win, the Redmen's 15th in a row, raised St. John's record to 17-1. The loss left the Wildcats at 12-5.

McKoy and junior forward Ron Plair pulled down 12 and 11 rebounds, respectively, in leading the Redmen to a 41-30 advantage that proved the difference in the game.

Wildcat Coach Rollie Massimino stated, "Wayne McKoy is as good a player as anyone we've faced. This is the third time we've played against him and it was by far his best performance."

Villanova's John Pinone led all scorers with 24 points, including 19 in the second half. Alex Bradley added 17 and Rory Sparrow pumped in nine. But that was not enough to offset a balanced St. John's scoring attack which placed four men in double figures.

McKoy led the New Yorkers with 20 points, while Plair tossed in 19. All-American candidate Reggie Carter fired in 16 from long range, and electrifying freshman David Russell scored 13, including a one-handed alley-oop tap-in.

St. John's led most of the first half, but never by more than seven. Bradley kept the Wildcats close, scoring nine of Villanova's first 13 points and 11 for the half.

A jump-shot by Reggie Carter gave St. John's a 32-25 lead with 4:43 left in the half, when the Cats put together a rally. They outscored the Redmen 7-2 before intermission to go into the lockerroom down by two, 34-32. Bradley ended the half in style by blocking Frank Gilroy's last second jumper.

Nova jumped out to a 40-38 lead at the beginning of the second half, before McKoy went to work. He scored three baskets, including a tap-in to give him 1000 points for his college career, during a run of ten unanswered St. John's points that put the Redmen up 48-40.

The Cats battled back behind the inside scoring of John Pinone. A three-point play by the freshman center closed the gap to 62-58 with 6:52 remaining. St. John's then broke the game open with another string of ten straight points.

Again McKoy was the key. He swooshed two turn-around jumpers during the surge and culminated it with a ferocious dunk that would have made Darryl Dawkins envious.

After the game, St. John's Coach Lou Carnesecca had only praise for the Wildcats. "Villanova is a fine team. I felt we played a good game, and we had to. Most teams either have a weakness in the front court or in the backcourt. Villanova has good guards and is also strong up front."

Coach Massimino likewise praised the Redmen. "I would have to say that St. John's played the best of the three top 10 teams we've faced. That is not to say they are necessarily better than Syracuse or Notre Dame, but they definitely played the best against us."

"Still, I felt we could have won. When we went up by two at the beginning of the second half, I thought we had a real shot. We were in the game except for those two spurts."

The Wildcats play at Providence on Tuesday night and will be seeking to avenge last year's one point loss to the Friars at the Palestra. The Cats return to the Fieldhouse Saturday night against Dick Harter's Penn State Nittany Lions.

Wildcats Extend Streak to 16

By KATHLEEN STICKEL

The Temple University Owls just weren't wise enough to beat one of the nation's top women's basketball teams — Villanova. The Wildcats continued their undefeated season to 16-0 with a 65-47 victory over Temple.

Karen Hissay led the team with 16 points. Hissay is presently the second highest scorer on the squad. Kathie Beisel tallied 14 points, eight rebounds and nine assists. Stephanie Vanderslice added 10 points and seven rebounds. Leading scorer Lisa Ortlip contributed six points and six rebounds. Mary Beth Gibson, Bess McGinn and Lu-Ann Krothe added four each. Kathleen O'Malley had three points and Rosemarie Burke and Lisa Souder each shot for two points.

Villanova hopes to increase their winning ways to 16 next week as they go up against Cheyney State Tuesday on the road and host Immaculata on Thursday.

Harter's History and Hopes

By PATRICK FLYNN

Once upon a time, a man named Dick Harter stepped down as head basketball coach at Rider College. The Broncs were coming off a 16-9 season, not bad for a first-year mentor. But for Harter it was time to move on to bigger and better things.

That's where this story begins.

Tomorrow night, Dick Harter brings his Penn State Nittany Lions into the Field House to face Villanova. The meeting will represent the latest chapter in a long and interesting rivalry between that man and this school.

It all started innocently enough. During the 1966-67 season Harter invaded the Big Five with the Penn Quakers. The Wildcats, on their way to an NIT bid, easily knocked off Penn 71-54. Nothing strange there.

Things started to heat up the following season. The Cats responded to a near-loss at the hands of Penn in the Quaker City Tournament by blowing the Quakers off the Palestra court, 75-45, in the regular season matchup. The plot thickens.

Finally, in 1969, Harter found the secret to beating Villanova, letting the air out of the ball and stalling his way to a 32-30 win in a game that poured gasoline on what had already been the hottest intra-city rivalry this side of Belfast. The battle lines were drawn.

Over the next two seasons, Penn established itself as a national powerhouse. A 25-2 slate in 1969-70 was topped by an undefeated regular season the following year. Penn, at 28-0 in 1971, was two wins away from heading to Houston for a shot at the Bruins when they took the court in the finals of the Eastern Regionals.

A funny thing happened on the way to the Astrodome. Penn never got there.

It's always written that on any given day anything can happen in the Big Five? "Any given day" arrived. Harter's team went up against Villanova, whom they had beaten three times in a row, including once earlier in the season. The streak ended there. The story found its climax.

It wasn't so much that Penn was beaten which shocked everybody. It was how badly they lost. Would you believe, 90-47?

This was no Merrimack game. No Notre Dame-Valparaiso matchup. This was the final game of the Eastern Regionals, a contest between two of the eight best teams in the United States. Games like that are seldom decided by 43 points.

So Jack Kraft and Villanova faced John Wooden and UCLA. Dick Harter and Penn faced ridicule. The situation sent Harter packing, away from the Palestra, the soft pretzels, the memory. He didn't go back to Rider. Or to some place like Drexel or a local high school. He went to Oregon.

The story died there for a few years, revived only by two contests. The first was won by the Cats in Harter's first year on the coast and the second a 116-77 demolition by the Ducks in 1974 in the first of Oregon's three successive NIT seasons.

Last year Harter moved to Penn State to try to awaken a sleeping giant that has known only football for so long. Last year Villanova won, 36-34. Tomorrow night Harter gets his first up-close look at the Villanova Field House. That alone can cause nightmares to a visiting coach.

That's not all. Penn State has decided to drop out of the Eastern Eight, an insult to some of the league's moguls. This might be Penn State's last visit to the Field House.

Inevitably, some Big Five expert will have a sign to wave tomorrow, reading simply, "90-47." Now you know the story, too. And if you forget any part of it, just ask the neatly-dressed man at the near end of Penn State's bench. He probably remembers.

Icecats Race Towards Cup

By JIM FEMIA

The Villanova Icecats are well prepared to take on the rest of the Middle Atlantic Collegiate Hockey League in the race for the Hannigan Cup. The Wildcats are atop the division at the mid-point of the season with a 5-2 record and 8-3 overall.

A powerful offense, steady defense and some outstanding goaltending has enabled the Cats to get off to its best start in history. The Icecats have seven players in the top scorers list. Leading the league in scoring is sophomore sensation Tom Curran with 21 points while following closely behind is junior Chip Kenny (19 pts). Other top scorers are Mike Kane (9), Bill Quinlan (9), Chris Mancuso (8), Paul LaFond (7) and Jim Femia (6).

Leading the defensive troops, captain Mike Fitzgerald is having another banner year while sophomores Joe Mitchell, LaFond and Femia are all playing steady. Freshman Brian Emmerich has been a strong addition to the Villanova defense.

Tom Margiotti has had one outstanding game after another during the first half of the season. The junior goaltender is second in the league in goals allowed with a 3.83 average. Senior Mike Alegardo is back from an illness and Al Salvato and Chris Kenny have both contributed considerably.

Other top players this season all with five points have been Steve Carr, John Lammers, Barry Whitaker, Kevin Kelly, and Ken Downey.

Geisz Reaches Milestone

"We're Still On Cloud Nine"

By RALPH MANOPPELLO

A few short years ago John Wooden of UCLA was known as the father of modern time basketball coaches. His accomplishments on the hardwoods were little less than remarkable. But this type of man comes along so infrequently that today's sports fans have to be satisfeid with just good coaches rather than great ones. Tucked away in Villanova's sports scene is a coach who rates as one of the great ones in his sport, Ed Geisz, Villanova swimming coach.

Last Friday, Coach Geisz distinguished himself by becoming one of the few swimming coaches ever to achieve 200 victories. In his 27 years at Villanova, his teams have suffered only five losing seasons while compiling a 201-119 record. Although the impressive record, that win become the goal for Geisz. "I knew so many coaches who never got their 200th win, I can think of five off hand. I was so anxious to get it."

Steve Quidlen, co-captain of this year's squad, also saw the victory as special. "We wanted it for him," explained Steve, "we owed it to him." Quindlen said that the win was also an incentive for the team. "We were confident we were going to get it. The team even went out and got a plaque with the date of the meet on it. I would have looked funny to give coach an out-of-date gift."

Ed Geisz began his coaching career in 1949 at Malvern Prep. Four years later he came to Villanova to take over a sport which only had one coach with a winning record in eight years.

In 1972, Coach Geisz got a chance to see three of his swimmers compete in the Olympics in Munich, Germany. Tom Aretz and Olaf Von Schilling represented West Germany while John Fitzgerald, from Chicago, was in the U.S. modern pentathlon. "Getting a swimmer to the Olympics was always my dream."

Along with the Olympics, Geisz proudly boasted about his eighteen swimmers who were All-Americans 46 times on relays and in individual events. The coach also spoke of Dick McDonough, Villanova's only national champion and ten time All-American.

Numerous honors and awards have come Coach Geisz' way. In 1965, the U.S. State Department asked Geisz to go to Bagdad, Iraq, to conduct clinics and develop swimming programs in the Middle East. "It was amazing," Geisz exclaimed. "They had the facilities but did not know what to do with them. I set up schedules, programs and training rules to help improve their swimming."

As everything changes with time, Geisz sees a change in swimming also. "Today, pools are super, eight lanes and deep water." A thorn in Geisz's program which is not new to Villanova University is the facilities the swimming squad has to work with. "Our pool is only four-lanes. Everyone has new pools except us. We need a new pool not only for better training but for easier recruiting," explained Coach Geisz.

One of Geisz's big projects which has been going on annually for the last forty-six years is the National Catholic Interscholastic Swimming and Diving Championships. This meet draws over four hundred swimmers from across the nation. Geisz also added, "about 60 percent of Villanova's swimmers come from that event."

But, with everything else the coach has accomplished, from being named to Pennsylvania Swimming Hall of Fame to being recognized as a Master Coach by the Collegiate Swimming Coaches of America, that 200th victory carried a lot of weight. "I thought I would have gotten it two years ago, then last year. I thank the athletes who swam in those 200 meets and especially this year's awesome team."

"For myself, all I can say is that it was one hell of a feeling."

Swimmers Capture Triple Crown

By BOB CONWAY

Ed Geisz who became the fourth Villanova coach to collect 200 victories, described the monumental victory as, "delightful." "Of the 200 wins none of them came easy."

Coach Geisz was quick to point to his many swimmers over the years for his success. "I just recruited them; they did all the work." He has coached 18 swimmers who have attained the status of All-American. He has also coached three Olympians.

The Wildcats not only defeated St. John's, they also handed Syracuse and Pennsylvania a loss over the weekend. The swimmers started the season by winning three straight, then went into a drought losing their next two. Fortunately they did not dwell upon their losses as they bounced back upping their record to 6-2 for the season.

The meet against Penn was exciting as the Cats clawed out a 60-53 win. Todd Russell won the 50 yard freestyle and then he anchored the 400 yard medley relay along with the 400 yard freestyle relay.

A new Villanova record was established in the 400 yard freestyle relay. The quartet of Bob Baltera, Bruce Baltera, Bob Kownurko and Todd Russell turned in a time of 3:09.5. Kownurko won the 1000 yard freestyle and the 500 yard freestyle also, turning in times of 9:55.0 and 4:45.8, respectively.

Coach Geisz thinks his team is awesome. Geisz said, "The team is getting fine leadership from Pat Quindlen." He also credited divers Mark Feldner and Dave Linder with much improvement.

Watercats Lap Lafayette

By ROBERT L. P. WALSH

The Villanova women swimmers placed first in 11 of 16 events en route to a 79-77 victory over Lafayette on Tuesday night at the Field House. The women's team now has an unblemished 6-0 record while Lafayette picked up its first loss in four meets. Excluding a forfeit by Kutztown, the swim team has outscored its opponents by the combined score of 434-211.

Although it is early in the season, the women have been swimming surprisingly well. On Tuesday, Alice Maben qualified for the Easterns in the 100 yd. breaststroke and Nationals qualifiers included Jeani Franks in the 50 yd. butterfly and the medley relay team of Maben, Rita Eden and Mary Maier.

Coach Jane Ackerman viewed the Lafayette meet as a "tune-up" for the Thursday night clash with Drexel. The meet is important according to Coach Ackerman because, "If we win the Drexel meet, we'll go undefeated." More important than a season without a loss will be the full development of the wealth of potential the team holds.

Women Take Crown

By KERRY LYNCH

The Villanova women's track team won the Big Five Indoor Championships last Friday for the first time ever. The Wildcats dominated the competition by placing among the top three in all but one event. Much of the glory belongs to Amelia Cain, Brigid Leddy, Sue Shea and Peggy Stewart, whose streng performances led their team to victory.

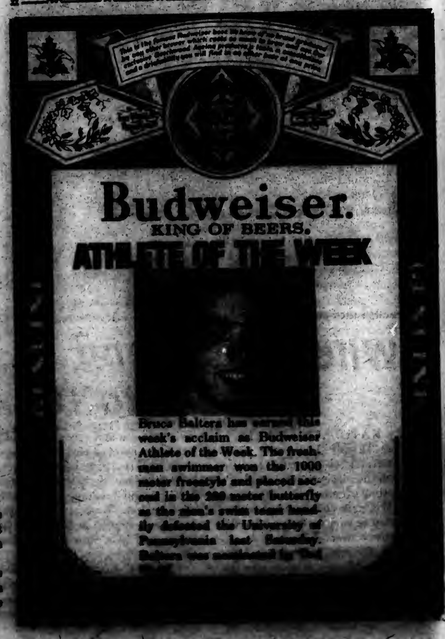
Brigid Leddy took the lead in the mile and stayed out in front all the way to win in 4:58.2, establishing a new field house record. Sue Shea finished third in the same race.

The 440 yard dash was, perhaps, the best race of all. Amelia Cain sprinted out and led her heat throughout the race. Apparently undaunted by the previous five races she had run that night,Cain ran a swift 62:34 to finish in first place.

Other notable Villanova performances included a second place in the 4x 100 relay and Pat Robinson's third place in the 220. In the high jump Peggy Shemet took first place with a jump of 5' 4" and Ann Marie Veit took fifth.

The final score showed the Villanova women the victors with 77 points, ahead of second place West Chester by 25.

Nominations for Budweiser Athlete of The Week must be submitted by students and are due each Tuesday at 5:00 P.M. in The Villanovan Office.



Bruce Baltera has earned this week's acclaim as Budweiser Athlete of the Week. The freshman swimmer won the 1000 meter freestyle and placed second in the 200 meter butterfly as the men's swim team handily defeated the University of Pennsylvania last Saturday. Baltera was nominated by Tod

Salary Increase Tops Budget

By MARIANNE LAVELLE

A 10 percent increase in faculty salaries, 9.4 percent increase in tuition, and 9 percent increase in room and board for next year highlights the preliminary budget finalized by the Senate Budget Committee Tuesday night.

The budget will be discussed at a special University Senate meeting, to be held February 22.

Most of the Budget Committee's discussion concerned the faculty salary and tuition increments, according to Jim Agnew, committee member and SGA vice-president.

"The number one priority from Father Driscoll's office was faculty salary increments," said Agnew. "They want to bring the salaries closer to the cost of living, and they haven't been able to do this in the past."

Last year, the preliminary budget set faculty salary increments at 5 percent, which was later brought to 7 percent after discussion on the Senate floor. "The teachers in the faculty caucus this year originally asked for a 14 percent increase," said Agnew.

Agnew said that the decision to give the faculty a 10 percent salary increase was "because of the rising cost of living, not directly because of the union vote. But I'm sure they have it in the back of their minds."

The Villanova chapter of the American Association of University Professors, complaining of low salaries and insufficient benefits, in January petitioned the National Labor Relations board to hold an election for collective bargaining, February 26 and 27.

"We're glad to know that salaries next year will be better than last year," said Dr. James Berquist, AAUP chapter president. "But we feel part of the motivation may be the prospect of collective barbaining," he said. "We're happy to see the increase, but we're wondering about the motivation right now."

Student tuition, according to the preliminary budget, would be raised 9.4 percent next year. "The SGA believes this is fair, said Agnew, "since the increase is mostly for the operating expenses of the Connelly Center, which will be an asset."

In the first year of operation of the Connelly Center, Agnew said the budget will account for a $206,000 operation deficit. "The financial office gives the center so much for paying salaries and equipment, and the center will give back less, because of its limited revenue generating capability," said Agnew.

The revenue from the Connelly Center, as the Budget Committee predicted, includes money from the the game rooms, snack bars, and banquet facilities. The Budget Committee made up the budget figuring on no liquor license this year. "If in the next year, they do get a liquor license, I expect the deficit would be gone," said Agnew.

Legal Center Established

By MELISSA ARAYA

Lower Merion Township zoning law prohibits more than two unrelated persons from living in the same house. Five Villanova students living in the same house received a letter from the Building Inspector informing them of his coming inspection, on the following Tuesday at 10:00 a.m. Do they have to let him enter the house? Can they simply lock three beds away in the bedroom?

Sebastian M. Rainone (Business Law)

Or take the case of a houseful of students who were issued a ticket at 1 a.m. on a weekend for having a loud party. A clause in the township laws prohibits loud noise after 11 p.m. Can they legally be evicted? Should they fight eviction? Don't all students lose when they take cases to court?

These were two of the hypothetical but very common problems faced by college students which were discussed at a workshop held on Monday night by Dr. Sabastian Rainone, of the School of Commerce and Finance. Rainone, also an attorney, will moderate the new Villanova University Legal Information Center.

The Center will be opening soon, possibly as early as next week, and will be staffed by second and third year Villanova law students, under the direction of Rainone. It will be used primarily to aid students with landlord-tenant problems.

Rainone, a 1972 graduate of Villanova Law School, stated, "There is no official connection between the program and the Law School. All law students involved are volunteers, and serve for consultation only. If a student having difficulty needs legal assistance (in court), we contact lawyers, mostly Villanova Law School graduates, who will help them for little or no money. The whole theme of the program is "Villanovans helping Villanovans."

Four attorneys present at Monday's workshop, who plan to aid Rainone in the program were: Noah Cutler, a 1971 graduate of Villanova Law School, and 1972 graduates Donald Wydrzynski, Bruce Dolfman, and Michael Goldberg.

At present, the majority of counseling done by the students deals with off-campus housing problems, but Rainone hopes to change this. "Hopefully, we will expand to consumer problems, small-claims court, and criminal offenses. I personally counsel everything, from civil to criminal."

Rainone has long been interested in advising and interacting with students, and feels that this type of center is needed at Villanova.

"It is a fact that today well in excess of 100 colleges and universities across the country have centers like this, and many even have full time lawyers. I characterize this as an idea that has already existed. Providing student legal assistance is just another outgrowth of student services.

"I really see this as another logical addition; every university and college will one day have something like it." He added, "Students need legal advice because they are not only legally liable (because of lowering age limits) but they are more exposed to different situations today."

Rainone realized the need for such a center partly as a result of

Stanford Smoke Bomb Incident Sparks Anger

By JERRY DOUGHERTY

Some confusion and much anger resulted when a smoke bomb was set off in Stanford Hall on the afternoon of January 30.

The smoke produced by the device prompted a response by the Wayne and Bryn Mawr fire companies, both of which dispatched fire engines to the residence hall.

Answering an alarm sounded at around 5:00 p.m., the fire companies reached the scene by 5:05. Soon after arriving, the firemen discovered the smoke bomb. By 5:20 the area had returned to normal, all the fire-fighting equipment having departed.

In spite of a fire alarm having sounded throughout the building, a few residents evacuated from Stanford. Most of them casually watched the happenings from their windows.

One resident was taken to Bryn Mawr Hospital as a result of the smoke which filled some areas of the building. He was treated for smoke inhalation and later released.

Stanford Hall, scene of last week's smoke bomb scare.

After finding the smoke bomb, the fire companies handed it over to the Radnor Township Police.

This latest incident illustrates the chronic problem Villanova has had with false alarms and other fire-related pranks. Numerous false alarms have been sounded over the years, although this incident involving a smoke bomb is isolated.

University policy calls for residents caught pulling false alarms to be fined. Bernard Quinn, Radnor Township fire marshall, believes strong disciplinary action is needed. "They (those caught pulling false alarms) should be expelled," he said.

Joseph Cunnane, director of University security, expressed extreme irritation over the incident at Stanford, terming it "a juvenile trick." He said he was "still waiting for someone to come into this office asnd tell who brought the smoke bomb here."

Anthony Martin, assistant dean of men, admitted that problems remain in the area of student attitude toward fire safety. "I think an average student would probably not take heed of a fire alarm sounding," he noted.

Telecake International

Heart shaped cakes, red roses or red hearts as expressions of feelings for loved ones have made Valentine's Day the most popular single gift-giving occasion for Telecake.

Telecake is a nationwide network of bakeries which operates in a similar manner to the flower by wire systems.

By simply calling toll free 800-453-5710 a Telecake operator will bridge the distance between you and your away-from-home sweetheart.

Spring Break in Washington

Anyone with some kind of commitment to non-violence may have an opportunity to spend Spring Break in Washington, D.C., through the Center for Concern. Ann Felker, graduate of Villanova, currently in law school in Washington, D.C., has extended an invitation for a week-long live-in in Washington, D.C., during Spring Break. Sponsored by several Washington and Baltimore Peace Communities, the week would include films, speakers and discussions led by sell-seasoned Peace Activists as well as opportunities to demonstrate for peace. This effort is part of a demonstration for peace in our capital involving peace groups from different universities around the U.S. For further information, contact Sally Livingston, Center for Concern, Ext. 760, Rm. 206, Dougherty Hall.

Valentine's Sing-O-Grams

Get ready for the second annual singing telegram series to hit campus! For a really unique way to show your Valentine sweetheart a sign that you care, the Villanova Singers plan an even bigger marathon of individual messages. You can hire a Singer to dial and sing your song choice, or even in person, if possible, for a nominal fee, on February 14, Thursday. Call the Singers office at Ext. 528, at John Barry Hall for more information. A really personal and fun way to "care to sing the very best."

Accounting Society

The Accounting Society will have a meeting on Thursday, February 14, at 12:45, in Bartley room 110. The guest speaker will be a representative from the Internal Revenue Service and the topic to be discussed is "Career Growth for Accountants in the IRS."

Psi Chi

The Villanova Chapter of the Psi Chi honor society will sponsor a dialogue between Dr. Daniel Ziegler of the Psychology department and Dr. Bernard Gallagher of the Sociology Department. Dr. Ziegler will represent a Humanistic outlook on psychotherapy while Dr. Gallagher will present his views from a Psychoanalytic stand point. The dialogue will be held on Wednesday, February 13 at 4:30 in Tolentine room 215. Refreshments will be served after the discussion.

Sigma Xi Lecture

Dr. Roger Lynn of the Math Dept. will address the topic "A BREAKTHROUGH IN LINEAR PROGRAMMING?" on Thursday, Feb. 14th at 12:30 in Rm. 302 in Tolentine Hall. All interested faculty and students are invited to attend.

Law School Applicants

PRINCETON, N.J. — Applicants to law schools are advised that delays in delivery of a new computer system have resulted in a backlog of Law School Data Assembly Service (LSDAS) reports to law schools. Law schools have been made aware of the problem through frequent updating on the status of the processing schedule.

Although law school admission offices may be somewhat slowed in making their decisions, students can be assured that fairness will be paramount, and no individuals will be penalized for late reporting delays incurred by the LSDAS.

Because of the backlog, it is estimated that, at the current processing rate, there will be delays for about the next eight weeks. Staff have been greatly expanded and are working long hours to meet these problems. Educational Testing Service (ETS), which administers the LSDAS, regrest any personal inconvenience to candidates.

The LSDAS was begun in 1970 at the request of the law schools. Its purpose is to summarize information from college transcripts, test scores from the Law School Admission Test and other biographical information used for evaluation by the law school admission offices.

If there are specific problems that cannot wait, please write to Law Programs, Newtown, Pa. 18940. Please do not telephone.

Photography Classes

The Villanovan Photography Dept. will sponsor a series of Photography classes on Tuesday evenings starting February 12, 1980. Various lectures will be given by area photographers. To register, stop in the Villanovan office.

A.C.S. Meeting

There will be a general meeting of the Association of Commuting Students Tuesday, February 12, at 12:45, in the North Lounge. Skiing, ice skating parties, and a food and clothing drive will be discussed. Bring a friend. Hope to see you there.

Clinic Hours

In addition to the regular hours, Dr. Boyle will have clinic at 4:00 p.m. on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

Science Dinner Dance

The First Annual Science Dinner Dance will be held on February 9, 1980 at the Sheraton Valley Froge. A night of good food, music and dancing is promised. Tickets are only $36.00 per couple and are on sale at C.I.C.

Film Festival

The Honors Program is sponsoring an Ingmar Bergman Film Festival during the spring semester. The festival consists of six classic Bergman films, shown on Sunday evenings at 7:30 in the West Lounge, Dougherty Hall. Admission is free, and the festival is open to all who are interested. Below is the schedule:

Do you own a van or station wagon? Earn some spring break money driving students to and from JFK airport in New York City. Depart March 1 evening. Return March 9 afternoon. Contact Dr. J. Murphy, English Dept., 201 Vasey, Extension 262.

Concert Band Jazz Ensemble

For anyone interested in joining the Concert Band and/or Jazz Ensemble for Spring Semester there will be sign-up sheets posted on the Band bulletin board in Dougherty Hall and outside the Band Office located on the first floor of St. Mary's Hall. Practices are to be held on Monday, Tuesday, and Thurday evenings from 6:00 to 7:30 in St. Mary's Auditorium. All musicians are invited to join and some instruments will be available for rental.

Dream Exploration

Again this semester the University Counseling Center is offering its popular Dream Exploration Group. If you are interested in looking at your dream life in a safe, supportive environment, inquire in 106 Corr Hall.

Civil Engineers

Tutors are now available, free of charge, for all Civil Engineering Students. Courses include:

Plane Surveying, Statics, Dynamics, Fluid Mechanics, Strength of Materials, Structural Mechanics, Sanitary Engineering I, Transportation Engineering I, Soil Mechanics.

Apply in the Department Chairman's Office. Sponsored by C. E. Honor Society.

Daniels, Mason and Gallagher

On February 20th (Ash Wednesday) an excellent local band will be appearing at the Main Point in Bryn Mawr. At 8 p.m. Daniels, Mason and Gallagher will be in the area for an evening of great original music. If you're into acoustic music, be it folk or rock, don't miss D.M.G. at the Main Point. $3.50 tickets can be obtained at the C.I.C. or at the door.

If just the mention of tests or exams starts you worrying, you may benefit from the Counseling Center's Test Anxiety Reduction Program. A confidential, proven service that will help you remember what you learned is available now so you'll be ready for mid-terms! Sign up in 108 Corr Hall.

Kennedy Speaks in Philadelphia

Criticizes Carter's Handling of Iranian Situation

By MARIANNE LAVELLE

Attacking President Carter's foreign and economic policies, Senator Edward M. Kennedy brought his campaign to Philadelphia last week.

Kennedy addressed the Pennsylvania Legislative Committee of the United Steelworkers of America at the center city Sheraton.

Kennedy criticized Carter's handling of the embassy hostages in Iran. "Hostages have now been held 88 days in Tehran, and it is a situation I believe should not exist," he said.

"The United States was warned that if it permitted the Shah into the country that there would be danger. On the basis of one medical opinion, President Carter accepted the Shah into the country.

"A commission should be named to take action on the situation. The commission should not meet until the hostages are returned to the United States. I want to see some initiatives, I want to see some action. I refuse to accept that those individuals become permanant hostages.

Kennedy also asked for debate on foreign policy issues. "When Hitler's panzer divisions were in the English channel, we were debating foreign policy, and I believe it's time we debated our foriegn policy now."

The Soviet invasion of Afghanistan was encouraged by Carter's acceptance of Soviet troops in Cuba, claimed Kennedy. "We made a serious mistake, when this president of the United States said that the Russian troops in Cuba were unacceptable, and then later said that he would accept them. You remember when Carter went rushing up the hill, and then went rushing back down the hill. That type of action encouraged the Soviet reaction in Afghanistan," he said.

"I want to see other countries around the world, the NATO countries, Japan and the Asian countries. Are they prepared to send their men to fight in the Persian gulf?

"Democratic and Republican presidents alike have gained the confidence and respect of the Soviet Union. We need a restoration of our foreign policy, so that our allies understand us, and our adversaries respect us," he said.

Kennedy criticized the current state of the economy, which he said was "scarcely addressed in the State of the Union message."

"Every worker in this room knows the facts. The economic policies of this administration have brought the highest deficit, highest interest rates and rates of inflation in this country.

"The only way that we are going to get effective handling of the issues of inflation are not the ways we have seen in this administration, but through effective mandatory wage-price guidelines, and guidelines on profits, dividends, and interest rates. We need to develop a process that says 'enough is enough,' and bring a halt to the problems of inflation in this country."

Kennedy addressed what he said was the "the central issue of our times," freeing ourselves from dependence on the Persian gulf for oil.

"There are only two ways we can reduce oil consumption. We can raise the prices, as suggested by the administration and most oil companies, or we can develop a system of rationing that is fair and equitable, and treats working people the same as others."

Although Kennedy met with Democratic Mayor Bill Green before his speech to the Steelworkers, he received no endorsement from the mayor or the union last week.

His Philadelphia speech covered the same issues as his speech at Georgetown University.

Students Foiled In Acme Thefts

By BILL ROCK

Three separate shoplifting incidents involving Villanova students took place at the Acme Market on Penn and Lancaster Avenues in Bryn Mawr on the evening of Friday, January 25.

The students were apprehended by the assistant store manager. They were taken to the Bryn Mawr police station and issued citations.

Charles Kennedy, manager of the Acme, explained the incident, "Early that evening a Villanova student was caught trying to steal a piece of London broil worth $10.44. Two friends of his were apprehended trying to take some cheese and chicken."

"Several hours later another student tried to steal the same piece of London broil. It was a little hard to believe."

Kennedy emphasized that anyone caught shoplifting in the future will be prosecuted. This is due largely to a recent increase in the number of shoplifting incidents at Acme markets.

"I cannot understand why someone who attends a fine college, and pays plenty to go there, would have to steal in order to supplement his food budget," continued Kennedy. "It gives a bad name to Villanova.

"We do not enjoy prosecuting people. We do not want to put a black mark on someone's record. However, I have to watch out for my job. This shoplifting has to be stopped, and if prosecuting offenders is the only way to do that, then we have no other choice."

Safety Request Filed

By MARGUERITE ESMONDE

Villanova filed a request with the Pennsylvania Public Utilities Commission (PUC) last week for the addition of an outside footbridge on the overpass on Route 320, according to James W. Patterson, Villanova's lawyer for the proposal.

The PUC in Harrisburg will serve a copy of the proposal to each of the defendants, or respondents, involved. The six respondents, ConRail, Amtrak, SEPTA, PennDOT, Radnor Township and Delaware County, will have an opportunity to respond to the complaint, explaining the extent of their responsibility for the overpass.

A viewing of the site will be scheduled by the commission to investigate and discuss the condition of the bridge. The respondents may reach a decision out of court after the viewing.

"There's always the possibility of an agreement without any force from the Commission," Patterson said. "I wouldn't hang my hat on it though."

If the respondents fail to reach an agreement out of court, a hearing before a judge will be held to determine whether an unsafe condition exists. Both sides will have the opportunity to present their case at that time.

Should the judge decide that the overpass is unsafe, a second hearing will be held to determine what action will be taken and who will bear the cost. "Normally the cost is allocated among the respondents," Patterson said.

Patterson feels that Villanova's case looks hopeful. "It's pretty early to tell, but if the overpass is as dangerous as I've been told, chances are good that we will get some action," he commented.

"The fact that there is an existing way to get across the train tracks causes a problem," Patterson said. "It's my view, however, that there's still a problem in using the tunnel, especially for women at night."

Patterson was unable to say how long the PUC will take to reach a decision. "There are so many variables that it is difficult to estimate the time. A low estimate would be two to three months, but that would be a minor miracle unless an agreement is reached out of court," he stated.

"I'd like to hammer out something so that we don't have to go through all this rigamarole."

Dorm Rates Vary

By MARK STIEBER

The Dean of Men's office disclosed that current Villanova policy provides for varying room and board rates regarding campus residence halls.

"There is no clear written policy as to the rates charged for various on-campus housing," stated Mr. Anthony Martin, Associate Dean of Men. "Current prices are based on progressively increased costs of resident services."

"One need only walk into different buildings on campus and realize why dormitory rent varies," Martin continued. "Rooms in newer buildings that are in better condition are typically in greater demand than others and their rates reflect this."

According to Martin the matter is simply that some campus buildings cost much more to maintain than others. The University feels that the cost of housing certain students should be apportioned directly to those students.

There are three levels of housing rates at Villanova.

Single rooms in Austin Hall are in the middle range of dormitory rates.

The basic rate of $1055 for the semester's room and board applies to Corr, Fedigan, and Galberry Halls, and to double rooms in St. Mary's and Sullivan Halls. These are some of the university's oldest buildings with somewhat worn furnishings and fixtures. Fedigan was erected in 1930.

A secondary rate of $1105 is charged for single rooms in Austin and Delurey Halls. The additional fee of $50 is surprisingly low with the rooms being the same size as double occupancy rooms in other dormitories.

A third rate of $1155 applies to Stanford and Good Counsel Halls as well as single rooms in St. Mary's Hall.

The Stanford and Good Counsel buildings, being the newest on campus, are under a gas heating system, different from the rest of the university. It was hoped at the outset that gas would be economical but this has proven false. The size of the buildings has made them some of the most expensive to maintain.

An inordinate amount of light fixtures as well as individual heating and air-conditioning units in each room have sent costs soaring.

Board Meeting to Study Athletics

By JERRY DOUGHERTY

The University Board of Trustees will meet next Tuesday, February 12, to consider the report on athletics submitted to it by an ad-hoc committee on athletics.

At this upcoming meeting the Board could possibly reach some decisions regarding the athletic proposals put forth by the ad-hoc committee, depending on whether enough information is provided by the time of the meeting.

Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., University president and board member, stated, "At this time I can't say if there'll be a decision made at the meeting. The cost of the proposed facilities and improvements has yet to be determined."

Driscoll noted that when the Board does reach decisions on the athletic proposals, they will be based on need and priority. In this regard, the Special Board Committee on Athletics voted to rank by need the priority for facilities.

New athletic fields on the west campus, near St. Mary's, were given first priority. This proposed area of development is the least costly of those mentioned in the athletic report. Improvements to the football stadium, which include such measures as installation of lights, a new track, and astro turf, were placed second on the Board's priority list.

Any decision on a new indoor athletic facility lies farther down the road, according to Driscoll. Schematic plans for the proposed center still await completion, and an approximate cost figure has yet to be arrived at.

"We'll get engineers to provide us with construction drawings, then a request for bids will be put out," Driscoll said.

the number of students who came to his office seeking legal advice. Joe Nichols, a Villanova law student, helped to get the idea developed, and get other law students interested. There are presently 12 law students involved.

To remove any possibility of illegality or malpractice difficulties, Raitone had his idea approved by the Delaware County Bar Association, and contracted insurance coverage for a reduced rate. He then submitted a proposal to Dean Clay, Dr. Cleary, and Fr. Deegan for their approval. "The administration is very cooperative, and the center was given official status as a recognized undergraduate organization," according to Raitone.

Visiting Professor Speaks on Writings of T.S. Eliot

By RICHARD DISTEFANO

The department of English at Villanova invited Derek Traversi, a professor at Swarthmore College for the past ten years, to speak about T.S. Eliot, the Anglo-American poet and subject of one of Traversi's recent books. The lecture took place in Corr Chapel on Thursday, January 31.

Derek Traversi spoke on T.S. Eliot.

Professor Traversi's opening remarks concerned Eliot's style of writing: the poet's "devotional poetry" consists of what one wants to believe, with no assumptions required. He explained that Eliot's work deals with beliefs, and there is a danger of incorrectly interpreting his work to be abstract. The reader should bear in mind that Eliot was not a philosopher, and in attempting to understand the poet, one "must read what is there."

After this introduction, Professor Traversi continued to do an analysis of Eliot's "Burnt Norton," which is known as one of the author's Four Quartets. "Burnt Norton," according to Traversi, illustrates a convergence of what has been and what might have been, as related to the present. This is an interpretation of the first three lines of "Burnt Norton":

Time present and time past
Are both perhaps present in time future,
And time future contained in time past.

The second line's use of "perhaps" also evinces the tentative nature of the poem.

Later in "Burnt Norton," Professor Traversi noted a "Dantesque view of eternity" in the nature of what is learned by what is not. The paradox of the human condition is furthermore displayed by Traversi's suggestion that, "only by grasping time can we grasp eternity," that time is only conquered through time.

Also evident throughout the poem are the symbols of daylight, signifying permanence; and darkness, denoting a shriven soul. There are many dynamic relationships in this work, as each part is involved with the others.

Professor Traversi concluded with some more comments on Eliot, emphasizing how difficult it was for inspiration to strike the poet; Traversi added, however, that it is unusual for most people to form new ideas after age 25, as Eliot did.

Team Wins Bowl

By BILL ROCK

The four-man team known as the Astro Zombies captured first place in this year's College Bowl competition.

The team posted three lopsided victories during the week of January 28 through February 1 en route to the championship.

The squad consists of Bob Murray, an astronomy major; Jim Arrison, a freshman physics major who hails from La Salle Acedemy; Thomas J. Bevilacqua, a junior Honors and chemistry major; and Bill Guerin, a junior Honors and psychology major, and former news editor of The Villanovan.

The team is coached by Richard Caruana, who also serves as the alternate participant.

The College Bowl consists of a series of trivia questions, dealing with such diverse topics as chemistry, etiquette, physics, geography and sports.

The Astro Zombies won their first match by defeating Noll's Team. Their score of 275 points was the best in the tournament, so they received a second round bye.

In the semi-finals, the Smart Ging Guys became their second victim. In the final round, they defeated Plato and the Republics.

The team now moves on to compete against schools from throughout the Northeast in Staten Island, New York, on February 23.

According to Guerin, the team is looking forward to its competition in New York. "We expect it to be a tough battle, but it should be fun. If we can figure out a way to afford to get there, we will be in good shape I think we have the talent to be competitive against any school."

The 9 percent cost increase in room and board will include the rising costs of food, maid service, and maintenance, said Agnew. "That's as low as we could get it," he said.

"The Administration wanted to raise it more, since such a great number of students want to live on campus. They would like to use it as a lever to generate more income. So room and board could increase a lot in the next two years," he said.

To meet President Carter's energy plan, said Agnew, $37,000 was allocated for increasing heating efficiency in University buildings.

Agnew said that it was the feeling of the Senate Budget Committee that "more outside income must be brought in to alleviate problems and to keep the school competitive in the next ten years. The Committee feels that more must be done, especially by the Development Office and the Board of Trustees,".

begin with and is being amortized over a period of twenty to thirty years," Martin clarified. "We feel it is the responsibility of the students receiving the benefits from these expenditures to contribute toward them.

"It is important to realize that resident halls are an auxiliary enterprise and not a necessary part of the running of a university," Martin stated.

Black Week Set

By BRIAN SUPERVIELLE

The Black Cultural Society, an organization on campus for the last eight years, will be staging Black History Week from February 11 to February 16 on the Villanova campus.

The Society's president, Stephan Roots states, "This year's program is the most comprehensive program that any student organization has ever tried to do." Last year's Black History Week was a great success on campus, and the Black Cultural Society plans to make it an annual event.

The program coordinators for BCS are Judy Wood, Reggie Franklin and Anita White. The advisors for the society are, Terry Nancy of the Communications Department and Father Cedric Wilson.

They hope to enlighten the Villanova community to the efforts and cultural contributions of black students on campus.

The activities planned are:

Feb. 11 — 10 a.m. - 7 p.m. — Films in the North Lounge
Feb. 12 — 7 p.m. — Reeves Memorial Choir performing a concert on James Weldon Johnson "Creation" — North Lounge Dougherty
Feb. 13 — 8 p.m. — Crime Forum on Black Crime with Judge Clifford Scott from Philadelphia and Professor Manning of the Law School as moderators — North Lounge, Dougherty
Feb. 14 — 8 p.m. — Political Workshop with Political Activists from Philadelphia — East Lounge, Dougherty
Feb. 15 — 8 p.m. — Black Cultural Society Variety Show — St. Mary's Auditorium
Feb. 16 — 12-12 — Black Cultural Fair — Field House

An art display starting February 10, will be posted in various show cases in Dougherty Hall.

Student Travels to Russia

Refusnik Reveals Plight

By TERRY O'TOOLE

The telephones in the Moscow hotel were probably bugged, so the sensitive calls had to be made from a public phone booth across the street. The number they were trying to reach, however, had been disconnected by the state.

They decided to take a chance and hailed a taxi, giving the driver a slip of paper bearing the address in both English and Russian.

The cab stopped after several minutes; they found the right door and knocked.

"Sasha?" the visitors asked.

"Yes."

"We're friends from America."

What followed, according to Bradd Boxman, was "a tremendous emotional experience." Boxman, a junior Spanish major and president of the Villanova Jewish Union, and Noah Efrom of Swarthmore College had found Sasha Yakir, a 24-year-old Soviet Jew and a "Refusnik," a Jew who is seeking to leave the Soviet Union and who is persecuted by state because of his decision to emigrate.

Sasha was adopted by Boxman's Villanova group last year, and the Jewish Union has since attempted to aid his efforts to emigrate to Israel. Boxman and Efrom spent nine days in the Soviet Union in early January seeking out a number of Refusniks and Jews, travelling for the Philadelphia-based Soviet Jewry Council and the Hillel Foundations.

"It was very spontaneous," Boxman said, describing their meeting with Sasha, who had corresponded with Boxman since the Villanova Jewish Union took interest in him. "We hugged for several minutes. He would fit in perfectly on campus; he's very westernized."

Boxman explained that Sasha graduated from the "Institute," the Soviet equivalent of an American university, with a degree in engineering but cannot find employment because of his religion and his desire to leave the Soviet Union. He is required to serve in the army if he cannot find a job, but, once enlisted, the state can claim that he was exposed to secret information and prevent his emigration as a security risk.

"Russia is very bland, the social atmosphere is stifling," Boxman said. "You can't discuss politics; you can't disagree. Everything is atheistic and very depressing.

"Sasha didn't fit in, though. Noah had never met him before, and he was surprised. Sasha is very outgoing. He speaks English well and took us on a tour of Moscow."

The trip was designed, Boxman said, to maintain contact between the Refusniks and Western groups, to bring goods and information to the Refusniks that they could not obtain in the Soviet Union, and to "let them know there are people in the West who care."

Villanova student Bradd Boxman (l.), Sasha Yakir, and Sasha's father, Evgeny Yakir (r.) converse in the Yakir's home in Moscow.

"A lot of these people are in financial need," Boxman said. "We brought in eight pairs of American jeans, which sell for about $200 each on the Russian black market, and gave a pair to seven families. They will sell them, giving them enough to live on for months.

"We brought them Hebrew things. Hebrew is illegal, but it's a necessity for the Refusniks that want to emigrate to Israel. It's also more than that; it's a link with their past, an act of defiance. They meet in small groups in apartments and learn."

Boxman and Efrom brought in Hebrew books, concealed underneath their clothes, medicine, jeans and a short-wave radio for the Refusniks.

"They've been known to have bodily searches, so it was really scary," Boxman said. "They put you in a glass box for three or four minutes while a uniformed Army officer walks around you, just looking at you. Then you go through customs.

"One Refusnik family had a 10-year-old daughter with a gall bladder condition. She needs medicine for it, and the Soviets won't let it be imported for her, so we carried bottles in."

On their second day in the Soviet Union, Boxman and Efrom met their first Refusnik in Leningrad. He had been waiting for eight years to emigrate.

"He seemed tired of waiting," Boxman said. "He looked like he had been worn down. A lot of the Refusniks are brilliant people — engineers, doctors. Once they become Refusniks, their jobs are cut off.

"But you have to do some kind of work or you're a parasite. He had been trained as an engineer; his job now is to guard taxis."

On their last night in the Soviet Union, Boxman and Efrom met Sasha's father outside Moscow's only synagogue, which Boxman said is kept as a showplace for Westerners. A friend of Sasha's, Lev Ginin, had been arrested for being drunk.

"He wasn't drunk; they wanted to force him to go into the service," Boxman said. "The KGB took him in. They gave him five days to say yes, or he would go to prison in Siberia. And the stories you hear about the prison system are true."

The American pair later met Lev, who taught Hebrew in Moscow's Jewish underground,

Teaching Couple Mark 25th Anniversary

By BILL TUCKER

This year marks a rather unique event for two members of the Villanova Community. Dr. Benedict A. Paparella and Mrs. Julia B. Paparella are both celebrating their 25th year as faculty members. They also are the first married faculty members at Villanova.

Dr. Paparella arrived here in September of 1955, as a professor of philosophy. He began his career here the hard way. Due to lack of space, his first class was the last pew of the school chapel.

Mrs. Paparella came to Villanova in February of 1955. She was the first instructor of Medical-Surgical Nursing, in the then new bachelor of science degree. She says, "It's most difficult to place in the confines of a few sentences all that has happened in the past twenty-five years. With just the buildings alone, it is truly remarkable that Villanova has grown to its present size. Can you imagine watching 14 of our present buildings being built?"

Dr. Paparella also commented on the campus, saying that "it has always been an exciting moment for me to view the chapel from east to west across campus with the setting sun."

The Paparella's were first introduced to each other after they both heard a guest speaker in John Barry Hall. Two years later they were married in Dec. 1962. They became the first married couple [illegible] Thomas was the faculty child.

Both Dr. and Mrs. Paparella have had distinguished careers at Villanova and elsewhere. Mrs. Paparella's long list of achievements include: first College of

Internships Prove Rewarding

By BETTY RUTKOWSKI

"All things being equal, having experience makes the difference when looking for a job after graduation." This quote by Dr. Albert J. Dorley, Jr. sums up the philosophy behind the Internship and Community Involvement Programs at Villanova University.

These programs, established in 1977, provide students with experimental learning opportunities unobtainable in the classroom. Both types of programs are conducted for the duration of an academic term and for which academic credit is granted.

The Internship Program places interested students in job situations in which they work for anywhere from six to fifteen credit hours. The average forty-hour week earns the intern fifteen credit hours on a pass-fail basis, of which no more than six may be from the students' major. The remaining [illegible] credited as electives.

The Preservation of Freedom

For the past week, students on this campus have been freely expressing their views — both pro and con — on President Carter's proposed reinstatement of registration for the draft. Yet have any of these students considered what a privilege it is to be able to criticize a governmental policy? Of course not.

As Americans, it is our right, not a privilege, to be able to state our views publicly. As Americans, it is one of our many rights. We have become complacent about these rights. We take them for granted.

Today's article about Sasha Yakir, a Soviet refusnik who is being denied the right to emigrate from the Soviet Union, and others like him should serve to remind us how fortunate we are to live in a country where the individual's rights are so fully protected that we can take them for granted. However, it should also serve a more important purpose-namely to awaken us from our apathetic slumber and examine our self-indulgent attitudes.

Consider for a moment. While we bitch about the injustice of being given only a few days notice of an upcoming test, Soviet dissidents suffer under the injustice of being denied their most basic human rights.

Twenty-one year old students at Villanova are outraged by the restriction of their right to drink alcoholic beverages while on campus. Consider for a moment how ill-treated and frustrated are the Soviet dissidents who are denied freedom of expression, freedom of worship, freedom of mobility, and are actively persecuted for their attempts to attain these rights.

The Soviets boast of their lack of class structure-when in actuality they have the most dangerous type of class structure in existence. The Soviets decide who is socially acceptable based on how fully an individual accepts the system. If one does not accept the system, then one is not acceptable.

Consider how many Americans, indeed, how many Villanova students, would be deemed unacceptable using this criterion. We abhor the Soviet caste system and this blatant repression on the part of the Soviet government.

We do not advocate war with the Soviet Union-for war is destructive and pointless. However, we commend Bradd Boxman for his courage to get involved and his commitment to something he believes in.

We urge all members of the Villanova community to commit themselves to a cause. To protect their rights and their freedom, and to be proud of them. To break down the walls of this artificial paradise we call college and take an interest in the needs of someone other than themselves. Certainly demand your personal rights on campus — it is only human. But also, demand that all people have the freedom to live their lives in the way that they desire—it is truly human, perhaps divine.

Legal Counseling Available

About 1600 of Villanova's 6000 undergraduates live in apartments or rented housing, according to the Dean of Men's office. As students run down the lists of off-campus housing provided by the Dean of Men and women's offices to look for rooms, they meet township zoning laws that prohibit more than two unrelated people to live together, apartments where landlords increase rent yearly, and apartments that don't accept students.

Landlord-tenant rules are not easily understood, and adequate housing is difficult to find. Most students begin their searches for housing unaware of their legal rights.

After finding housing, students could face eviction or fines, still not knowing their rights or chances in a court of law.

But now, Villanova will have a free and organized legal counseling center for undergraduates with these problems.

The Villanova University Legal Information Center will run under Student Activities, and will provide counseling to Villanova undergraduates, and undergraduates of other schools within a 15-mile radius.

According to Dr. Sebastian Rainone, a business law professor who worked for two years organizing the Center, over 100 colleges and universities across the country already have these types of legal centers. Penn State has two such offices and hires a full time lawyer.

Villanova's center will be operated by law students who will offer their time gratis. Any cases that need to go to court will be referred by the law students to lawyers who have volunteered to take the cases for small fees or for nothing.

Villanova is located in an area where apartments are costly, and many do not accept student tenants. But students need not be duped or confused when dealing with landlords, since the information and advocacy is now, finally, available.

Bank Lines

I wonder if other members of the Villanova Community who bank at the Bryn Mawr Trust Company's Campus Branch are as tired as I am of the long and slow lines one must endure to make small transactions. Today I was 25th in line. There were only two lines both of equal length. There were two other tellers available but I was told that at 1:30 these stations could not be opened because they had to settle their account before the "downtown" branch closed at 3:00 p.m.

I waited almost one 1/2 hour to deposit one check. It would seem that because we appear to be a captive audience the bank chooses not to recognize that as customers they need us more than we need them.

If service does not improve maybe we should all consider closing our accounts and banking elsewhere or perhaps the University which rents the bank the space it occupies might use its influence to persuade the bank to improve its service.

Sincerely,
Justin J. Green, Ph.D.

Drafting Women

To the Editor:

Commendations on your "On Campus" feature of February 1, 1980. Mr. Chris Whalen's comment that he doesn't "think that women are either culturally or physically suited for combat" went right to the heart of the matter.

I have written President Carter along these lines and also proposed that our colleges and universities be used to provide military training for women (along with a hefty infusion of federal funds) should they indeed be required to serve involuntarily. This would give them training in communications, computer work, technological and clerical fields with the facilities at hand.

This suggestion would offset the financial disarray that many of our colleges and universities would face with the loss of a portion of the male college applicants from a predicted smaller pool in the years ahead — something for all of us here at Villanova University to consider in the months ahead.

Sincerely,
CAROLYN C. LEA

Alcohol Concern

To the Editor:

It's the third largest killer in the United States today. Over 10 million Americans are victims of its grasp, three times that number are family members caught by the web of its influence. Yet in an article, "Partying at Villanova — A Lost Cause?" which appeared last week in the VILLANOVAN, a call goes out to return to the campus party where nirvana is induced by grain alcohol.

The writer makes his position quite clear; with a return to the parties of years past "we can get this school back its respectability." Nowhere in his article did he confront, that based on statistics, there are at least 580 alcoholics or alcohol abusers just within Villanova's full-time undergraduate population alone. Nor was there mention of the lasting entrapment that the abuse of alcohol may hold for those who bow to the frequent peer pressure exerted during the kind of party described as a "memorable moment."

I am concerned. Without the mention of one single strategy to achieve responsible drinking, not the slightest concern expressed for the safety of those attending these parties, the writer very clearly becomes an advocate for the irresponsible use, what becomes, the abuse of alcohol.

There are readily available, simple strategies that will insure that the use of alcohol will not detract from human dignity or lead to patterns, perhaps life-long patterns, of self-destructiveness. Many students come to college with well-established patterns of social interaction, while other students many learn new patterns during the college years. Drinking patterns that are either reinforced or learned may well play a crucial role in the ultimate happiness and health of the individual and his or her family. If only there was an approaching awareness of the ramifications of the position that was advocated by the writer last week.

Christian Perspective

Dear Editor:

I am perplexed that at a Catholic University, of six students and two professors who commented on registration and the draft in your February 1 paper, none made any reference to Christianity as a motivating influence. Neither did your editorial on the same subject.

Further, I am saddened at the approval by the administration of killing by militarism on the one hand (see picture of lethal Villanovans on page 3), and the rejection of killing by abortion on the other. Do we preserve fetuses to be baptized Catholics only to be given the last rites as victims of our worship and idolatry of and allegience to Caesar's wars? From a Christian perspective is it not true that the ROTC does not belong on this campus any more than does an abortion clinic or a death chamber? The early Christians were against all three (cf. Athenagoras, A Plea for the Christians, Chapter 35, 175 A.D.) Why aren't we?

In peace,
William Durland, Ph.D.

On Beaming

Dear Ed.,

What are you trying to prove with your "Who Knows Who Cares. . ." column? So far this semester you've: locked Basic Jasek in a closet, put the Union $5000 further into the hole, and worst of all, you beamed up a Villanova student!! Who do you this you are!?! In the past, the only people who made WKWC were Charles Manson, Sid Vicious, Captain Cunnane, Joe Cassidy, and Steve Steckler!! Why do you have to pick on poor, innocent people??

Back to my point —

Next time you decide to beam somebody up-do it right!! First of all, you need to say "Scotty." This is essential, because if you don't say "Scotty," you may end up in a Klingon Space Cruiser. The next thing you say is "Beam me up." When you put the two together it should be "Scotty, beam me up." Who in the world (or in the universe) said that you could beam somebody up? To tell you the truth, it is impossible for an outside organization to beam up another human being. By the way, I'll bet you don't even have a telecommunicator!

Until next time!

Ok Scotty, beam me up!

Scotty, beam me up!

S.G.A. Response

Dear Editor:

Congratulations, to the S.G.A. for a fine presentation of the financial problems now facing the Villanova community.

"A Question of Confidence," (Villanovan, Feb. 1, 1980) is a call for the Board of Trustees and the administration to get off their rhetoric and take actions designed to enhance Villanova's fiscal position.

The ball is now in their court. The S.G.A. and the university Senate only have the power to recommend policy to Fr. Driscoll and the Board. Beyond that it's up to the President and the Board to take the needed action.

Commuter Complaint

Dear Editor:

I was very upset when I read Jerry Ventresca's article "Olympics Comes to Villanova," I am a commuter student at Villanova and I do not feel that any event should deepen the rift between resident and off campus students. Tony Martin obviously does not believe in Villanova for Villanovans. He believes in Villanova for male residents. I find using the term Olympics a poor choice of words — the Olympics are for everyone, not just for a select few! Mr. Martin is condoning an event that will not further the growth of our University. Male residents are not the only ones who enjoy competing in such events as backgammon, foul shooting, pool, etc. . . . All students do!

Why wasn't such an event run through the intramural department? Why wasn't the Association of Commuter Students or the Student Activities Department consulted about such an undertaking? These are the organizations that are set up by the Dean of Student Life to program such events, not the Dean of Men.

It has been stated in the article that "you can't get anything out of Villanova unless — you put something into it!" I ask: How can a student put something into it if he is not asked to do so. Tony Martin, Wake up!!! We go to Villanova too and the two thirds of the male population that you choose to ignore in these Olympics don't like it.

Respectfully,
Paul Mariani

Olympic Boycott

To The Editor:

The Communist regime in Russia is guilty of violating the principles of fair and peaceful sports competition upon which the Olympic games are founded. The Soviets have always seen the Olympics as a confrontation of East and West under the guise of friendly and peaceful competition. The Russians see the victory of their athletes over those of the west as proof to the world of the superiority of their communist social system over that of Western civilization.

The Russians quite candidly describe exactly in what light they perceive the nature and political function of the games. The 1980 edition of the Manual of the (Communist) Party Activist, which, in atheistic Russia is the Bible of their social system, simply states: "The acute ideological struggle between the East and the West directly affects the choice of cities for the Olympic games. The decision to hold the games in Moscow has become the convincing evidence of the correctness of the foreign policy of our country." Moscow welcomes the Olympic games as a tremendous propaganda opportunity to present to the world a picture of Russia that is, in fact, a fraud. The Russians want to be seen as a member of the world community in good standing.

The truth of the matter is that the Soviet regime is guilty of consistently violating international law and all standards of civility. The Kremlin seeks to subjugate the world and its policy of naked aggression against innocent nations threaten world peace and ultimately . . . war. It is a government not of, nor by the people and is guilty of countless crimes against its own citizens. A government with such an attitude and guilty of such crimes is not morally fit to host an international event devoted to peaceful competition and should not be accorded that honor.

The moral rationale for boycotting the Olympics is strong, but underlying the controversy is a more deeply rooted issue. A boycott of the Olympics in Moscow in coordination with other strong measures will demonstrate to the Kremlin, as firmly as possible, short of war, that their criminal acts are not consistent with the peaceful goals of the world community; that we, here in the United States, stand ready to make the sacrifices necessary to stop Soviet aggression.

Consider what a humbling of Soviet prestige it would be if other nations showed their disapproval of Russian foreign policy and refused to take part in the Olympics. What would the Russian people, carefully shielded from world opinion, think of their country's hostile actions if the world boycotted the games? How would the Kremlin explain to the Russian people the ostracizing of their nation from the world community? Think, too, of the billions in hard western currencies, sorely needed by the Russians, that would be lost if no one came to Moscow.

The issue is simply this. The Kremlin sees the Olympic games as a yardstick of world opinion for its world designs. Contingent upon our participation in the games, they measure ratification or rejection of their foreign policy.

Compete in the games and the Russian leadership will consider the United States unwilling to oppose Soviet expansionism and the third world reception to it. The Kremlin will react accordingly, adventuristically and boldly encroaching upon neighbors to create a Soviet dominated world order.

Boycott the Olympics and we will show the Russians that we condemn Soviet foreign policy and as a world community stand fiercely determined to resist the expansion of totalitarian communism and the manifestation of Soviet Hegemony in the World.

War Opposition Polled

Dr. William Durland, assistant professor of religious studies, polled his classes last week on the following question: "Are you conscientiously opposed to war making?" The question was explained to include all wars, defensive as well as aggressive, and to encompass not only belief, but practice.

Durland noted the higher number of women opposed to war making. He also said he believes the high number of "don't knows" among Catholics indicates an educative need.

The results of the poll were as follows:

All students (108)
Conscientiously opposed — 51%
Not opposed — 33%
Qualified or selective — 0%
Don't know — 16%

Men (52)
Conscientiously opposed — 37%
Not opposed — 50%
Qualified or selective — 0%

Women (56)
Conscientiously opposed — 64%
Not opposed — 18%
Qualified or selective — 0%
Don't know — 18%

Catholic Students (93)
Conscientiously opposed — 50%

When Soviet troops stormed Afghanistan last Christmas weekend, Americans began to voice opinions that haven't been heard since the early sixties, and Carter claimed that U.S.-Soviet relations had plummeted to the lowest point since the Cold War.

We asked Villanova students what their feelings were, concerning the Soviet aggression, relations between our two countries, and whether they felt a resurgance of the Cold War mentality.

Thomas Margiotti, Junior

It's too bad . . . I felt that the U.S. and Russia were slowly getting together but this is a real setback. I am for the boycott of the Olympic games and anything else that can be done peacefully to show our disapproval.

Yes, the Cold War has started again. I hope we keep it on ice.

Tony Salvador, Junior

During the 1970's, the Soviet Union spent large amounts of money on their military. They were able to do this because they spent very little on oil. As the Soviet oil supply decreases, I feel they find it necessary to test Carter and the U.S. as to Soviet expansion in this area. The Soviet Union needs the oil and the warm water of the Persian Gulf. I feel that they will withdraw soon. The world community should take action, but the U.S. is too immobile to act alone. The Soviet Union realizes Carter is tied up with Iran, that is why they made their move now. Detente never existed.

N.T.H.
Ron Triolo, Brian Bullock, Bill Mezzanote, seniors

We feel that the Soviet aggression in Afghanistan is a travesty, a gross violation of human rights. The world community's only choice is to curb this appetite with diplomatic and economic means.

Fr. Shawn Tracy

"Fifty hostages are a lot more acceptable than 15 million!"

Jack DePierro, Sophomore

With a military advance on Afghanistan, the USSR makes a move to control the precious Persian Gulf. This totally reduces all detente and Salt II ties we may have produced over the last 20 years. We should avoid military confrontation, yet take a strong stand against this outrage.

Susan Burns, Senior

The Russians are abusing their power and will continue to exploit people less powerful than themselves. The U.S. should take action. However, an Olympic boycott is neither appropriate nor effective. The U.S. needs to do much more than pulling their athletes out of competition.

PERSONALITIES ON CAMPUS

Professor Enjoys Flying

By BARBARA HIGGINS

What does Paradise Lost and general aviation have in common? Only in Dr. Kantra's Milton class can you find the answer. "Milton knew everything about science in the 17th century. And in Paradise Lost, for example, there is an awful lot of aeronomics. Satan's flight out of hell, through chaos, into the void: a lot of what Milton writes about technically sounds an awful lot like the language of astronauts, translunar injections, etc."

That is what you call combining two pools of knowledge, aviation and literature, and producing a new and interesting twist in literary interpretations.

Dr. Kantra, member of the English Department is an avid devotee to the tantalizing sport of air-born transportation.

It all started when he was a freshman at Muhlenberg College in Allentown, Pennsylvania.

"Right after the war, I bought an Indian Scout Motorcycle, and I was starting off on a summer trip to Canada with a friend. Before we reached the city limits, he got hit by a garage truck backing out of an alley. And my mother was so anxious about this that she made me sell my little Indian Scout Motorcycle. (I have since bought another one.) And instead of taking that up as a hobby as a young fellow, I learned how to fly, which my mother thought was much safer than motorcycles."

Dr. Kantra quickly pulls out a recent article that was published by the Villanova's "The Squires" publication to support his mother's claim. The statistics concerning the accident rate for transportation are surprising: Automobile accidents claim 1.33 lives per 100 million passenger miles travelled; buses, .13; railroads, .06; and domestic air flights, .04.

"Most pilots figure that the most dangerous part of any flight is from the house to the airport," Kantra adds.

Flying has always been more than just a hobby to the professor; it has been a mode of transportation that he and his wife made use of when visiting their daughters while they were in college at Duke and Northwestern Universities.

"We travel all the time. I get better mile agethan these fuel-efficient cars and I can travel in straighter lines in less time."

When he was courting his future wife, Phyllis, he used to fly into her hometown in New Jersey. Now she is his number one, live-in co-pilot, and shares his enthusiasm for flying.

Dr. Kantra is a joint owner of a small airplane, along with a few of his pilot friends, which they house at North Philadelphia Airport. He claims that he flies at least three times a month. The flight requirements set by the Commercial Flight Review requires six instrument approaches and flight hours every six months, in order to hold a license.

When asked if he ever considered making flying into a career, he says, "No more than someone would consider making driving a car into a career."

Internships

Interns work side-by-side with professionals, gaining invaluable experience, contacts for the future, and the opportunity to test their skills in the actual work situation for which they have been working.

Placement is not restricted to the Delaware Valley. This year, eight students have been placed in government offices in Washington, D.C. and two are working in New York on Wall Street and at NBC, Inc. According to Dr. Dorley, Coordinator of the Programs, "Internships are available in public and private sectors. Students are also encouraged to develop their own internship programs."

Internships are available to students in the second semester of their junior year. A minimum grade point average of 2.50 is required for eligibility.

This semester, twenty-nine students, under the direction of Dr. Dorley, are taking part in internships in areas ranging from radio and television to government to psychology. Interns are working as reporters, resident counselors, legal researchers, probation officers and a host of other jobs in some of the twenty-four areas open for internships.

The Community Involvement Program gives students the opportunity to work on projects at local community agencies and organizations for three credits.

Both programs are offered to students on a voluntary basis and are suited to the individual needs of the student. Recruitment for the Fall semester will be taking place in late February to early March. On February 27th, a representative from the Washington Center for Learning Alternatives will be on campus to recruit interns to work in Washington, D.C. this fall.

If interested in either program for the fall semester, contact Dr. Dorley now for an application for admission to the program.

CAMPUS COMEDY

The Draft - It's Not On Tap ... Yet

By BRIAN BUINEWICZ

What a way it was to wake up, and especially on a Monday. To begin with, I lost a contact lens, tried to shave off my chin and was late for class again. Then I heard there's a chance of reinstating registration for the draft. They say it's only a registration and a draft isn't necessarily the next step. Then what do they want my name for — to send me a birthday card? Who told them I wasn't doing anything and wouldn't mind fighting a war? It certainly wasn't me. I can see it now; "Geez, I'm sorry but my life is booked up solid. Catch you some other time."

Why do we have to enter a war anyway? If I die fighting in it, I'm not going to enjoy any of the benefits of the agony of defeat, of the thrill of victory. Those people don't like us, and if we start shooting at people we don't know, chances are extremely good that they're going to get mad and start shooting back. Traveling to some Godforesaken country isn't exactly appetizing, but fighting in this place could prove to be just as hazardous. Who's to say that when it's all over I won't be able to heat and light my house by just walking in?

There are some alternatives to this mess besides packing up and taking off singing "O Canada." Claiming certain ailments (such as severe allergic reaction to gunpowder) won't work if they really want you: if you are warm, you're in. One good solution is to get married and pregnant as fast as possible, but biology hasn't solved that problem for me yet. Big bucks are to be had in sheep herding in Montana, and the draft wouldn't bother you (if they find you). What general in his right mind would be found on a cold night without woolen jammies?

Better yet, let all the senior citizens of the world fight it out. They have lived a good part of their life and are usually complaining of being forgotten. They would probably enjoy the chance for some fun. Speed and reflexes have usually dwindled considerably for them, so less territory would be conquered. Their eyesight is poor, so less casualties would be suffered due to poor shooting abilities. And best of all, senior citizens tire easily — most of the time usually spent fighting would now be spent sleeping. Less people would be hurt, providing a much safer war.

Of course, instead of sending troops in, we could hit them from the economic and governmental point of view. If the backing for money went from gold and silver to McDonald's Quarter Pounders we would once again be the world power. Everyone would want the burgers and then we could raise prices and dictate peace. Let's give them Chrysler and Lee Iacocca. With all the money pouring into the car manufacturers, there wouldn't be any money left for weapons. Or send them Three Mile Island with illustrated instructions for their very own meltdown so they can effectively eliminate themselves. If SEPTA management ran their government for three months, we wouldn't have any kind of worry.

All I can say is Tuesday has to be a better day.

Atlantic City Offers Jobs

By MELISSA ARAYA

There's a great place to escape from mid-semester boredom, and it's less than two hours away. Atlantic City offers fun, excitement, and for those with luck, a chance to get rich quick. It also offers opportunity.

The casinos presently in operation are Resorts International, Park Place (also known as Bali), and the Boardwalk Regency. Three new hotel-casinos are under construction, to be operated by Playboy, Benihana of Tokyo and MGM. The rates for a room at any of the hotels average from $65 to $80 per night but travel agents, bus companies and the hotels themselves offer special package deals.

The hotels have much to offer, and you can enjoy an entire weekend without leaving the premises. The Boardwalk Regency, for example, offers a selection of five restaurants, four bars (with 24-hour entertainment), and, of course, the casino.

In the casino, the prospective gambler can choose from Baccarat ($25 to $2500), craps ($25 to $1000), roulette ($1 to $1000), blackjack ($25 to $1000), and the inevitable one armed bandits, the slot machines. The lines to the slot machines are usually long, so once you get a chance at one, it's wise not to leave it until you're completely satisfied.

There is an abundance of diversions in Atlantic City, and this creates an abundance of well-playing jobs. Most hotel-casino employees are required to have a state license. There are different types of licenses, according to the type of job you will be holding, but the average casino workers' license costs approximately $160. The license must be renewed annually, but once the person is employed, the hotel pays for the renewal. To obtain a license, the applicant must be at least a six-month resident of New Jersey.

Processing of the license takes about 6 months to one year, so it is advisable to apply for one well in advance of your job search. If hired by a hotel or casino, you will be reimbursed.

The Regency Hotel/Casino in Atlantic City.

Hotel and casino owners stress the fact that young people are sought by them to fill such positions as cocktail waitresses, dealers, security guards, bartenders, chambermaids and also managerial positions, marketing and public relations jobs. "The opportunities for advancement here are unreal," stated one hotel employee, "the sky's the limit, especially for college graduates."

"Waitresses and bartenders are unionized," stated Karen Pizzutallo, a cocktail waitress at the Boardwalk Regency, "and that means good money and job security." Waitresses earn $2.70 per hour plus tips. The management doesn't like to hire summer help, though, so if that's what you're looking for, leave that fact out during your interview."

Pizzutallo also advises that college students seeking summer employment should apply to the casinos which have not yet begun operation. "It's much better to start a job when the hotel just opens, because in the case of waitressing for example, if a girl comes in now, she's behind 170 others who started on opening day." She continued, "Having a license when you apply is important, because if you go into a hotel and have a license, you've got the job."

The salaries of casino employees are high, but so is the cost of living in Atlantic City. Pizzutallo related, "The average apartment costs between 500-550 dollars a month, so what most people do is find roommates, usually other casino employees, to share the cost. Four or five girls can get a house for about $800 a month."

Interested applicants are advised to inquire at the Personnel office. Be prepared, however, for a lengthy application and many personal questions. "They check into your past all the way back to your great-grandparents. They want to be sure you don't have any Mafia links within your family," stated Pizzutallo, "You are sent down to the Parkade Building on Tennessee Ave. and asked to fill out a 25-page application, and then you're fingerprinted and questioned further. It's an involved process to go through, but it's really worth it."

Whether you're looking for a summer job (or a post-graduate job) or just looking for a fun-filled, exciting time, Atlantic City is the place to find it.

and accompanied him to a meeting of Hebrew teachers. Lev and a friend prepared to walk the two back to their hotel in the 20-below-zero Moscow night but, shortly after leaving the meeting, they stopped.

"Lev said, 'Let's huddle,' " Boxman remembered. "There were three KGB men behind us. Up until then, I didn't know if we were being followed or not, but they were definitely following us now.

"They looked just like they do in the movies, all wearing long coats and hats. They stuck their heads into the circle and took a good look at us, taking off Noah's hat to get a better look."

Boxman and Efrom were leaving the next morning with tapes, notes and film of the Refusniks they had visited.

"We were very scared we would have trouble at customs," Boxman said. "At the hotel, I bought two books on Lenin to throw into my suitcase in case of trouble. But they didn't even look in our bags."

Although few people Boxman and Efrom met in the Soviet Union spoke English, the American pair attempted to sense the mood of the nation.

"The Soviets operate on fear," Boxman said. "You can never figure them out. Everyone is in fear.

"In the Soviet Union, the Olympics are everything right now. They've spent billions on it, and you can't walk anywhere without seeing the Olympic symbol or some reminder of the games. It will have a very big impact if the U.S. doesn't go."

During their visit to Moscow, Boxman and Efrom were approached by a man who spoke English in Red Square. He explained that he was a visitor from the Ukraine, and he offered to trade the Americans almost anything for their jeans.

"We talked to him for a while," Boxman said, "and we asked him about Afghanistan.

" 'We don't know much,' the Russian said. 'We know that their government asked us to come in.' "

Boxman will show slides from his Russian trip on February 14 in the West Lounge, and on February 20 the Jewish Union will participate in a trip to Washington to lobby for support for the Refusniks. If you would like to contact Boxman in reference to Soviet "refusniks" please call 353-2800.

The Jewish Union will hold another "Free Sasha Day" on April 23.

Budget Development

The development of a budget is a difficult and time consuming job in any organization. But in a university environment, where student tuition accounts for 90% of the operating funds, the task is enormous. There are a variety of parties to satisfy: students, faculty, and administrators.

Each department of the University has specific needs, some more pressing than others (In many cases they must meet state and federal regulations). Over the years, Villanova has implemented a plan to define the goals and the needs of the university community. Thus, the budget can use these priorities as a foundation. The priorities for the 1980-81 budget are as follows in order of importance:

1. Salary Increment: It seems during the past several years faculty and staff increments have not kept up with the rising cost of living. Villanova's administration plans to commit the necessary resources to offset as much as possible the cost of living and, where appropriate, to reward outstanding performance.
2. Financial Aid to Students.
3. West Campus Planning.
4. Athletics.
5. Development. As stated before, Villanova students provide over 90% of the university's operating income. Additional revenue sources of income must be located through alumni and business to help balance the rising cost of tuition. It should be a primary duty of the members of the Board of Trustees to foster development programs for the financial benefit of Villanova.
6. Energy Conservation.
7. Classrooms, Labs, Academic Equipment Additions.
8. Planning. The creation of a five year long range plan for university development is an important objective of the 1980-81 budget.
9. Connelly Center. March 1980 is the scheduled operating date of the new Connelly Center. Currently the operating budget foresees a deficit in the Connelly Center operation. While every effort will be made to keep the deficit as low as possible, the 1980-81 budget must generate sufficient income from other sources to cover this deficit.
10. Faculty Development.
11. Tuition and Room and Board Increases. It is inevitable that tuition rates and room and board fees will continue to increase because of inflationary pressures, the university administration plans a 9.4% increase in tuition, thus tuition will rise from $3,500 to $3,830.

The number of residents is set at 2,664. A 9% increase will raise room and board from $2,210 to $2,410 on the average.

12. Recruitment of Students. Because of limited housing Villanova plans to increase the emphasis toward commuting students. Events such as Candidates Day and Open House have been budgeted for the 1980-81 budget.
13. Dougherty Hall Renovations.
14. New Academic Programs.
15. Renovation of Older Dorms.
16. Public Relations.

With these sixteen priorities and the requests of each department, the 1980-81 budget begins to take shape. The University Budget goes through many phases, it begins with the Administrative Budget Committee and then is reviewed by the University Senate Budget Committee. The University Senate Budget Committee sends its reviews and recommendations to the Senate for approval. The budget then goes before the University Board of Trustees. Throughout this process it is examined and re-shaped by administrators, alumni, faculty and students.

In the coming weeks the Budget will be put before the Senate Budget Committee for final examinations and then to the Senate. Many problems will arise and no one can tell for sure the final outcome of the vote to approve the 80-81 budget.

I welcome you to become involved in the budget process by letting us know how you feel, and what areas of the university need improvement. We look forward to hearing from you.

Committee Update

Student Rights

As the new semester begins, the Catch-19 committee has taken on a new look. They are now concerned with the rights and privileges of Villanova students, not so much the drinking policy of the state. The first thing on our agenda is the Student Bill of Rights for Villanovans. This will take student involvement with a lot of patience. We urge those interested in undergoing such a project to attend our next meeting, which will be advertised.

Publicity and Communications

We are off to a new semester at Villanova University and a new beginning for the Publicity and Communications Committee. Apathy was not the feeling one received at the first meeting. An eager and enthusiastic group of students seemed ready and willing to accomplish goals that are set for the coming year. Committee elections and new plans will be the topic for next week's meeting. All are more than welcome to attend: Tuesday, February 12, 1980, 6:30 p.m., second floor Dougherty, S.G.A. office.

Senior Graduation Week

Discussing a fantastic plan in the Pie Shop will not accomplish anything. Doing something to make that event actualize is what counts.

Many senior students have inquired about the schedule of activities which will occur the week before their graduation. In response to this type of interest, a special Senior Graduation Week Committee will be instituted. All interested seniors are invited to actively participate in this committee.

The committee needs your help. I would like to see every senior contribute some of his or her time to the organizational process of this "Senior Week." You who have sent your letters to the Editor complaining about Villanova's social life for three and a half years, this is your chance to run the show.

It's time to convert the talk into a constructive plan of action. Seniors, put your "two cents in" for the last time. Your ideas could result in the difference between a dull waiting period or a great fun-filled week. Take into consideration that graduation week is for you. Who knows more about the activities the seniors want than the seniors themselves?

This committee will afford you with the opportunity to leave Villanova on a memorable note.

There will be a general meeting for interested students on February 14 at 12:45 in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall. If you cannot attend the meeting, but would like to volunteer your services, please stop up in 204 Dougherty.

Begin your assistance by filling out the survey contained in this issue and then join this Senior Graduation Week Committee.

I look forward to seeing you next Thursday at the meeting.

Vickie Colonna
Student Body Vice-president

Any questions may be directed to either Vickie Colonna or Tony Cofone at ext. 539.

Commuters Shafted Again

"You can't get anything out of Villanova unless you put something into it." But what if you're never given a chance? Once again the Villanova Commuter has been closed out of an activity whose purpose is to foster a greater sense of unity among Villanova students.

This is in reference to the upcoming Villanova Olympics under the direction of Assistant Dean of Men, Tony Martin. This event consisting of backgammon, foul-shooting, volleyball, ping-pong and arm-wrestling may be "an attempt to organize participation and competition among resident students in a greater variety of activities," but what about us?

The Villanova commuter seems to be expected only to come to school, pay tuition, and leave. We are expected to be a complacent source of money for the benefit of the campus. However, it has been stated that Villanova students are very sports-minded and participation is the key word to a successful Residence Hall Olympics. Who says male residents are the only students at Villanova? Why should the Villanova Commuter always be the last to be considered? Who pays for it anyway?

If an activity of this magnitude cannot include all students, then we believe it should not be held at all. They are asking us to fund an event, through our tuition, that is of great interest to all students and allow only a small percentage of students to participate.

Isn't this so very typical of the illogical way of thinking we have seen over the years at Villanova? If you want something put into Villanova, why don't you give us a chance?

HAPPY VALENTINE'S DAY

Store Displays Valentine Gifts

By SUZANNE TAVANI

On Valentine's Day everyone's a Lover, but Change of Heart, a pint-sized store in Philadelphia's New Market, proves there's a lover born every minute of every day.

Decorated in the traditional color of love — red — Change of Heart specializes in a variety of "sweetheart" gifts running the gamut from mugs to Swedish crystal vases all decorated with hearts, shaped like hearts, and trimmed in red. Lily Mansi, manager of this lovers delight, explains that "it's a store that makes people feel good. The heart is a charming shape that people relate to in a happy kind of way."

Since love isn't a seasonal phenomenon business is as good in December as in February. "One man bought $50 in gifts in one visit during the Christmas season," commented Mansi. With St. Patrick's Day approaching, green colored heart gifts will be sold.

Rather than buy your sweetheart the traditional box of candy and flowers, Change of Heart offers a mind boggling assortment, such as a music box which plays the song "Love Makes the World Go Round," red umbrellas decorated with white hearts, different sized mugs, a mail box, handbags, quilted heart-shaped boxes, a baby's Bunting Suit, and even a set of red dishes with white hearts. One women buying a hat and scarf set decorated in red and white hearts matter-of-factly stated, "I just like hearts . . . I'm a die-hard romanticist."

Being a die-hard romanticist should explain why someone would purchase a heart shaped salt and pepper set, the salt side in white while the other black for pepper. Mansi, obviously happy at the success of this unique shop, noted with a laugh that the most unusual request for a gift has been a heart shaped dart.

Another unusual gift found is a box which states on the outside "I want to be happy, but I won't be happy" . . . and on the inside, "till I make you," Well if nothing suits your fancy so far why not send your Valentine a card — a heart shaped puzzle on which you can inscribe your own love message.

While love can be unique, Change of Heart certainly is.

Romantic Nature Flows Forth

By DIANE SWEENEY

Valentine's Day! What other day of the year can turn the boy next to you in Chem Lab into Don Juan or can make the girl who always sits at the next table in the Pit suddenly rise from a "7" to a perfect "10"?

Once again, it's that time of year when we reveal our true romantic nature and splurge in hearts and cupids and mushy poems. It's that time when joy sparkles in the eyes of all lovers (and quite a few greeting card manufacturers, too).

If we were to trace this tender holiday to its early stages, we would learn of a Bishop Valentine who, after miraculously curing the son of a rhetorician, died by choking on a fish bone. True, the story is not as romantic as we'd like it to be, but perhaps the explanation of the word "valentine" evolving from the Norman word "falatin" is more pleasing. Although literally translated as "lover of the fair sex," "galatin" was used more often, however, to refer to exactly the type of man your mother would not approve of. Since February 14 is traditionally the day that birds choose their mates, it is also possible that this bit of folklore developed into the modern custom of choosing a valentine. There is still no connection, though, between birds choosing their mates and a St. Valentine.

Although the Romans practiced the celebration of Lupercalia, in which each person would choose the name of a mate from a box, it wasn't until the 17th century that the custom of choosing one's own valentine evolved.

Suppose, though, that your Valentine's Day is not as romantic as you'd like it to be — suppose, for instance, that your boyfriend won't even spend a mere $36 for a dozen roses. All hope is not lost — there's still champagne and candle-lit dinners to bring out the Casanova in him. If this doesn't work, we are lucky to have preserved some love-potion recipes which have been handed down throughout the years. Louis XIV resorted to eating peas, and at sixty-six, his mistress reported that he still had quite a healthy sex drive. If you just don't like peas, this 17th century recipe should cure your sluggish nature: Crush together and leave for a month:

200 millipede's eggs
250 bees eggs

Pour off clear liquid and drink.

If this tasty little treat doesn't solve your problems, don't despair — Valentines Day 1981 is still 371 days away, so you've got plenty of time in which something can happen.

Kissers Compete

By KELLEY KENWORTHY

"A peach is a peach, a plum is a plum, but a kiss isn't a kiss without a little" . . . Contestants at the Villanova Union's Annual Kissing Contest vied to prove the adage, which began at 8:30, Jan. 30 in a steamy Day Hop Caf. The competitors were read a list of eight rules by referee Kathy Kunze. The kisses were to be no longer than fifteen seconds, timed by assistant referee Sue Scott (who also manned the spray bottle of chloraseptic to keep things sanitary). There was to be no double dribble (starting over), no foul play, no forward pass, no "Roman" hands or "Russian" fingers. No full court press or Hoover suctions, and positively no foreign objects in mouth were allowed.

A panel of eight participating judges, four males and four females would decide who'd bear the name of Villanova's Best Kissers. The emcee introduced the judges who were then sprayed with the chloreseptic. They were aided by six non-participating judges who rated audience reaction.

The competition was hot and heavy with each contestant demonstrating their own tan tallying technique. The first female contestant Elaine Shields (who made such a lasting impression on the male judges that she was named Villanova's Best Female Kisser) approached the stage garbed in Western dress complete with a holster of lip gloss and a bandanna for lassoing the male judges' total attention.

Villanova's own famed basketball player, Rory Sparrow, displayed his own exotic technique by flexing the muscles of his torso sending the largely female audience into a frenzy. He left each female judge breathless and wanting more, which he gladly supplied making the rounds a second time and trying a third. He was ushered off the stage by the referee. Needless to say, he received a perfect score from some stunned ladies and was proclaimed Villanova's Best Male Kisser.

There were a total of eleven contestants trying to prove themselves Villanova's Best Kisser with ardent and unusual techniques. There were five males and six females, one of whom exclaimed, after kissing a certain forward judge, "He had a foreign object in my mouth!" Simply put by judge Tom Shortell, judging for his second year, "It was quite an experience!"

Characters Trapped In "Glass"

By EILEEN McCAFFREY

Vasey's Theatre's production of Tennessee Williams' The Glass Menagerie is the story of a St. Louis family in the 1930's trapped by memories, illusions, and reality. The plot centers around a former Southern belle's (Amanda) obsession with obtaining a gentleman caller (played by John Carozza) for her crippled daughter Laura. Her son, Tom, played by Jeffrey Musmanno, narrates the story — a memory of his which he calls a reality with the appearance of illusion. It takes one into a world of unreality that is frightening because it really existed. Amanda, portrayed by Lorraine Spritzer, tries desperately to live in a world of southern belles and hospitality that no longer exists. To fill in the gaps, she attempts to force Tom and Laura (played by Teri Fimiano) to play roles in that world. Unable to accept her husband's abandonment of her, and unprepared to live outside of the South, Amanda lives her life through her children. Laura must become a Southern belle like her mother, and Tom must stop being selfish like his father. Amanda twists her children's worlds so they revolve around her. Both children have fractured personalities; both respond differently to their mother.

Tom stays away from their apartment and works at a job he hates in order to support his family, but is torn apart by his desire to do something meaningful. He thinks of how short his life is, and how much he is wasting it. However, he is trapped by the obligation to support his mother and sister. Like his father, he is smothered by his mother. For Amanda to be secure she must possess her children. Nothing is his own; he is never free. His mother calls him selfish for wanting a life of his own, yet possessiveness drives him away. She lives in fear that he will become like his father and leave her. Once, he says that if he was selfish like his father, he would be gone.

Laura allows her physical defects to stand in the way of self-confidence and relationships with other people. Her overbearing mother merely drives her further into her imagination, where she listens to the Victrola and plays with her menagerie of little glass animals. Amanda constantly worsens Laura's inferiority complex by making her feel that she is worthless unless she becomes a Southern belle like her mother.

The set design (by David Hearn) is realistic for the most part. However, in keeping with Tom's opening monologue, the reality is sometimes given the appearance of illusion. The walls of the apartment appear to be covered with translucent netting. At certain times, especially during Tom's narrative monologues, the lighting is used to cast strange shadows on and through the netting, which give the scene a tint of unreality. During the monologues, Tom stands outside the apartment in present reality, while the apartment appears to be dreamlike. The set design and the costumes are all from the period.

The Glass Menagerie will run from February 6-9 and 13-16. Group rates are available, with an opportunity to discuss the play with the actors and director.

Auditions for Dinner Habits, a new play by Michael Schmitt and directed by Jackie Fisher, will be held at Vasey Theatre Sunday, February 10, from 1-5 p.m. and Monday, February 11, from 7:30-10:30 p.m. Sign up in Room 108 Vasey Hall.

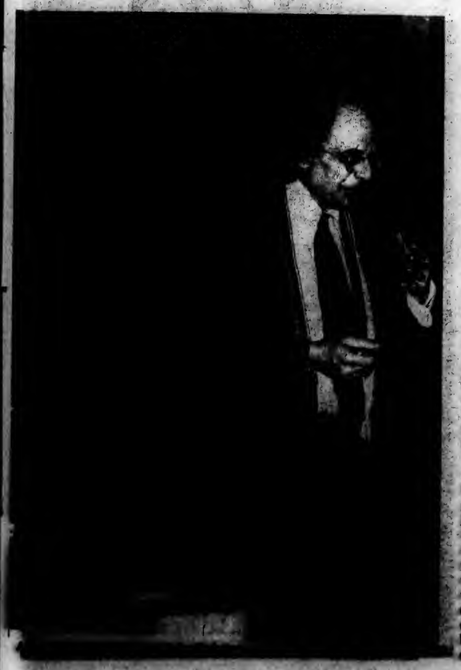
Lorraine Spritzer as Amanda in "The Glass Menagerie"

Ultimate Hipster at Main Point

By JERRY ARTH

The "Beat Generation" enjoyed a resurgence on Friday, Febuary 1 at The Main Point in Bryn Mawr, as two of its more prominent members, Allen Ginsberg and Peter Orlovsky, along with Steven Taylor, gave not just a poetry reading, but an overall poetical experience.

Ginsberg is, of course, the eminent poet/philosopher/spokesman of a movement started in the late 1940's and the early 1950's by himself and a few other disaffected intellectuals, among them Jack Kerouac and William Burroughs. These were sensitive and restless men, stirred by the complacency and the stifling atmosphere of a post-World War II America, where a benevolent Ike ruled and tail fins were the American Dream. They wrote vast, hyper-conscious pieces, smoked marijuana, raised their awarenesses with experiences which bordered on the mystical, and talked incessantly all the while. They were unlike any generation ever seen in this nation, and they often shocked a staid populace with frank and unsparing prose and poetry, and with equally excessive lifestyles.



But bit by bit, they fell by the wayside. Kerouac retreated to his hometown of Lowell, Massachusetts, where he sought to escape his fame through alcoholism and dependence of his beloved mother. Burroughs went 'round the world, seeking refuge in such a distant place as Tangiers. Only Ginsberg endured and made the transition from a 1950's avant-garde leader to a buddah of the 1960's counter-culture, standing at the fore of the fight to stop the Vietnam war. And through the 1970's and now into the 1980's he has continued, struggling for the anti-nuclear cause, with unabated energy and drive.

Ginsberg has published well over a dozen volumes of poetry, since the appearance of his controversial first collection, "Howl," printed by City Lights Books in 1956. He won the 1974 National Book Award in poetry, and the National Arts Club awarded him a Gold Medal for Distinction in Literature last year. His new book, "Plutonian Ode," is to be released later this year.

Ginsberg and Orlovsky, constant companions and occasional lovers for over the past twenty-five years, dressed conservatively in jackets and ties. Only Orlovsky's long grey pony-tail belied the image. Ginsberg no longer sports the busy beard and mustache which have long been associated with him; rather, he was clean-shaven, and his only hair was a scanty fringe around his otherwise bald pate. Steven Taylor, a young singer-songwriter-player who often accompanies Ginsberg's poems, was less formally attired, and seemed to portray the stereotype of a coffee house performer.

There was a full house of some 270 people for the late performance, ranging from college-age students to those who seemed to have been part of the "Beat Generation" from its inception. The atmosphere of the club was one of dim lighting and air perfumed with incense, with audience and performers partaking of teas and natural foods.

Ginsberg dominated the first half of the show. He opened it in typical fashion by chanting a simple mantra as a voice exercise. Then he swung into a semi-serious poem, "Guru Blues," a witty devotional hymn sung in a Country and Western style. From there, he went to "Stay Away From the White House Blues" or else you'll go to Vadra hell." Ginsberg then showed his intellectual diversity with a 14th-century ballad which he had set to music, entitled "I Sing of a Maiden without a Mate," soft and poignant. A trilogy of poems recently published in "The American Poetry Review" followed. They were "Lack Love," Love Returned," and "Maybe Love Will Come," and dealt with the universal topics of the aging process and how it makes the body unattractive. He continued with poems of his recent European trip, then poems concerning recent events in his life, including haikus on his and Orlovsky's arrests for picketing a nuclear-trigger manufacturing plant in Colorado.

Peter Orlovsky followed by reading from his volume of poetry, the very title of which is unprintable. (Author's note: the title pertains to clean rectal passages) Many of the poems were ribald; they dealt with Orlovsky's sexual experiences with a certain woman named Denise, and suggestions for what America should do with its human waste. But others were endearing, like "Someone Like Me When I Was Twelve," a verse about a camp counselor who once desired Orlovsky. Delivered in Orlovsky's booming New Yorkese, the poems made the audience laugh, so much so that the intermission was not really welcomed.

The second part of the performance opened with Peter Orlovsky playing the banjo to neat little hill-billy songs about his New York farm, and then came what might be considered one of the highlights of the evening: two original songs by Steven Taylor. With a pure, uncomplicated voice, he sang a song entitled "Bring Back the Horse," an ode to by gone days. In the same manner, he sang "I Wanna Be a Survivor," pessimistic about life in modern society, but hopeful that things may change in the future.

Ginsberg sang a beautiful, peaceful poem about death, "Lay Down," and then enlivened the crowd with a vulgar ditty, "Everybody's Just a Little Bit Homosexual." He then read the longest poems of the evenings, salutes to life in Gotham ("Manhattan") and the neighbor which feeds upon it and is Ginsberg's home state, "New Jersey."

The show closed with the poem-song, "And All the Hills Echo-ed," which had the audience singing along with the refrain. There was an expectation of more, but Ginsberg announced that he was tired, which was perfectly reasonable after four hours in two readings on stage.

The performance stands in my mind as an unforgettable experience. In a sense I was disappointed-Ginsberg didn't read many of his more famous works, ones which established his reputation, like "Howl," or "Kaddish," or even "Plutonian Ode." But what he did do (along with Peter Orlovsky and Steven Taylor) was create the mood and vitality of the "Beat Generation," a boundless, carefree feeling which we especially could use today.

Comedy Revue Sparkles

By SHARON WINTERS

An Evening Without Liza Minelli is a series of delightful vignettes performed with zeal and vigor at Plays & Players Theatre in Philadelphia. The material and acting maintain a high caliber and fast pace for the duration of the show; the performance seems to end too soon.

Tim Grundmann, the author, supplied viable satiric material. His first target was the theater itself. Grundmann took the classic story of the understudy catapulted to the starring role and adds a twist: the actress discovers she memorized the wrong lines ten minutes before the curtain. The author manages to bring forth a fresh Tarzan parody. This new version of the jungle epic is performed as quasi-Italian opera; however the ending is Romeo and Juliet with bananas. Grundman supplies a jogging anthem during the show guarenteed to appease runners and nonrunners alike. The song describes joggers as having running shoes "where our brains ought to be" but allows that "our sex life is better."

Another vignette involves a funny twist on the old story of the young, embarrased man at the local pharmacy; he has a hot date but the pharmacist is female. When he finally is able to ask for a prophylactic, he finds that there are many to choose from including Gucci designer ones. The material remains consistantly funny throughout the lively stories. Grundman's script evidences a flair with words and a vivid imagination.

The author also doubles as the pianist for the show. He performs all the music in the review. Grundmann ably provides the mood for the vignettes and accompaniment for the songs. The author's other credits for the show include composer, lyricist and director.

The production of An Evening without Liza Minelli uses a sparse stage; there are virtually no props. The acting is an integral factor to the proper display of the material. Two actors carry the weight extremely well.

Jan Shiffman, Dana Vance, and Tim Grundmann in "An Evening Without Liza Minelli."

Dana Vance utilizes her whole being in her performance. Her voice, face, body and attitude create a series of heroines from vignette to vignette. Costume changes were minimal; Vance brought characters to life with a seeming ease while wearing the same skirt and top. The prefunctory leopardskin for the Tarzan opera was the only help that she used in weaving her illusions on stage. Vance portrayed such varied roles as a shallow fashion model and a tough survivor, "Helen Graves, the other woman."

Jan Fredrick Shiffman was an excellent foil and often a straight man for Vance. He may be the only actor who ever played the part of a "Joy of Cooking" book. Shiffman played the sedate library book rather low-key although he had a chance to display some wonderful facial expressions when Vance flipped through the oversized volume attached to his chest.

The two actors worked well as a team throughout the show. They seemed to have a feel for the material as a unit. Smooth, polished and well-rehearsed, they glided from vignette to vignette with agility.

An Evening Without Liza Minelli is definitely a show worth seeing. All the component parts fit together to form an enjoyable, entertaining, funny show.

Outlaws — In the Eye of the Storm

By STEVEN COMBS

After their Hurry Sundown album the Outlaws changed their producer, target audience, and personnel. The result is a different brand of music from the four guitar army. Recently, the Outlaws, spurred on by the success of their live double album, have tried to capture a larger share of the mainstream rock market. Henry Paul has left the group to form his own band which is still very much country (they played here last year). The Outlaws, however, have tried to polish their act for the big city.

"Long Gone" is some of the most powerful Outlaws work since their first album. The guitar calisthenics are faster and cleaner than on earlier albums. Even the twin drummers are apparent. You would think that would always be the case but four screaming axes can cover a stampede.

"It's All Right" is typical of the last two albums. The vocals sound reined in and muted while the guitars carry the song.

The most audacious move every to widen a band's following must be the inclusion of an Elvis Costello tune on In The Eye of the Storm. It was only a mistake in that while the Outlaws' guitar work puts every punk in the world to shame, Elvis' strident vocals sound much more appropriate than the Outlaws howling harmonies.

On "Blueswater" the guitars churn the air like jet engines propelling notes across the sky. It is reminiscent of the bands early work and one of the best cuts on the album.

"Come On, Dance With Me" features a slightly different rhythm that works much better with the Outlaws new sound, than the beat traditionally used by the group. I would expect that the next album will have mostly a 'new wave' percussion section and perhaps a change in vocals. Several times on In the Eye of the Storm both guitar and vocals sound as if the rough edges had been sanded down. It's like finding out that somebody has shaved the fuzz off of your tennis ball, the game isn't the same.

The album ends with strength. "I'll Be Leaving Soon" is another less-than-typical Outlaws tune that is most likely a sign of good things to come. In the Eye of the Storm may be an apt name. The Outlaws appear to be nearing the end of a musical transition that began with Playing to Win.

The Steve Howe Album

By MAURICE J. KELLY

Steve Howe (of Yes fame) is an extraordinary guitarist. This fact is more than adequately proven on his second solo work which is simply titled, The Steve Howe Album. Unlike Howe's first album, Beginnings(which was a noble but far too melodramatic endeavor in terms of orchestration), this second album is a nice example of versatility both in musical composition and performance.

Side one is the stronger side and it opens with what could be called a nice upbeat song "in the hey of life" (hey, somebody pass me a granola bar - OK?) entitled "Pennants." This song is immediately followed by a barnyard flavored ditty entitled "Cactus Boogie." After hearing this tune one can't help but check the soles of one's feet for a peculiar brown matter.

There is also an impressive cast of musicians on this album who also go a long way in helping contribute to the album's overall success musically. Percussionists Bill Bruford, Clive Bunker, and Alan White each add their own individual rhythm patterns throughout various cuts. Also there is the synthesizer and electronic keyboard artistry of Patrick Moray and Ronnie Leahy; and, while both keyboards and percussion do not at anytime take center stage they do serve as an appropriate backdrop for the guitar work of Steve Howe. This is indeed Steve Howe's album. It was written for him by him. Yet this is not really a musical self pat on the back. On songs such as "Meadow Gray" and "Surface Tension" we hear an acoustic Steve Howe that has rarely surfaced anywhere else before. His picking style has an air of incredible clarity to it that at the same is not sacrificial for the sake of the rhythm and vice versa. While this album is a pleasant experience to listen to, it is not popular music. But if you were to look at it as one facet of creativity as related to the group Yes, then you might very well end up being surprised about the craftsmanship of Steve Howe.

Little Feat — Down On the Farm

By STEVE COMBS

Down on the Farm is perfect party music. It bops along with a sound similar to the Grateful Dead and vocals that bring James Taylor to mind.

The title cut starts off with a shout down between man and bullfrog. That sets the tone for the rest of the album, inspired nonsense. "Down on the Farm" is a dynmaic track with bouncing drive and twanging guitars.

"Six Feet of Snow," co-written by Lowell George and Keith Godchaux, is a sugar coated country ballad bemoaning the lonliness forced on an asphalt cowboy by the storm that keeps him from home.

The next cut is reminiscent of the Atlanta Rhythm Section. "Perfect Imperfection" swings along slowly telling of the flawed beauty of love.

On the album jacket it reads, "This is from us all to Lowell, straight from the heart. Goodbye, friend. Be free." "Straight From the Heart" opens side two with all the joyous energy of Little Feat.

A laid back jazz beat powers "Front Page News." Some of the more interesting instrumental work can be found poking around this cut. Then it's back to business as usual with "Wake Up Dreaming," another Atlanta Rythm Section-type love complaint.

"Feel the Groove" is a relaxing lesson in dancing for those white folks who still don't have rhythm. You can hear the music dance around you, swaying and kicking.

The difference between this album and something like The Wall is obviously vast. One is a cryptic opera dealing with the metaphysics of man's soul. Down on the Farm is unpretentious rock n roll that just plain sounds good. Each is a masterpiece in its on way.

OLYMPIC ACTION . . . Or Inaction?

By PAT FLYNN

You'll have to excuse me for beating what may well be a dead horse this week, but with the Winter Olympics only days away, it seems like a logical time to get a few licks in about the fiasco which is currently surrounding the Summer Games.

Right away, you're probably thinking that a dyed-in-the-wool sports fan such as the one who sits behind this typewriter would be totally opposed to a boycott. I mean, this is the guy who wanted the Pope to be deported for disturbing the mood of the baseball playoffs last October. This is the one who wants to declare John Wooden's birthday a national holiday. Here's the fanatic who actually sits down and watches that televised NBA game on Christmas afternoon. For sure, this will be a condemnation of all that stay-at-home talk.

Wrong.

I felt that way for awhile. It seemed that President Carter was taking advantage of a weaker force by using the United States Olympic Committee as a mouthpiece for token resistance to the Soviet Union. It appeared to be a grandstand act, an attention-getter designed to revive fading re-election hopes. In short, it reeked of politics, something sports in general can do without.

But most of all, the athletes were in concern. It didn't seem fair to make them give up so much for the sake of foreign affairs.

Then, suddenly, we were all implicated. The president's suggestion to reinstate registration for the draft (not for Billy Sims or Gene Banks, but for you and me, gang) shook away the stubbornness and brought the situation directly into all of our lives. We all pray that it never happens, but if that most valuable of all lotteries should ever become necessary, there'll be a lot more at stake than medals.

I still feel badly for the athletes who have trained so extensively and may be robbed of their moment of glory. And I really don't think that a boycott of the Moscow Games will change anything. However, one thing is for sure. The United States isn't doing the Soviet Union any favors by keeping the cameras of NBC at home, thereby stamping out the greatest propaganda showcase imaginable.

I wonder if anyone ever discussed a boycott in 1936 when Hitler's Germany was in the spotlight. And I wonder what the American tone would have been like if Jessee Owens hadn't humiliated the Germans. The point is that what we don't need is to extend the good-guy image of the U.S. We shouldn't be kicked around. We shouldn't look the other way.

Let's all hope that the entire situation doesn't amount to a mere piece of gamesmanship on the president's part to grab headlines and/or votes. Despite the trauma of Munich, the confusion of Taiwan and the disgraceful Sidney Maree sage, the Olympics are still a great way to spend a few weeks of summer.

But right now, a bigger game is at stake, for all of us, infants to senior citizens (but mostly for us lucky late-teens.) And for a while at least, sports (gulp) have to take a back seat.

Olympics Held On Campus

By BOB CONWAY

The Residence Halls Olympics, which are sponsored by the Office of the Dean of Men, are now underway. Basketball, the most popular event, has been going well while the backgammon segment of the games was implemented this week.

Each week will mark the start of a new type of competition. The games require such a wide variety of talent that everyone should find something to their liking. Besides basketball and backgammon there will be swimming, arm wrestling, track, volleyball, tennis, billiards, and a tug a war.

Assistant Dean of Men, Tony Martin, is hoping that everyone will get involved. "With the majority of the male residents being underclassmen there is a great need for community activities. I hope the Olympics will bring about a sense of unity in a dorm." Martin added, "If nothing else, the Olympics is a great way to get to know one another."

When the question was posed to Mr. Martin, "Why is this program strictly for male residents?," his answer was, "The first step is to get the concept off the ground. The next stage would include all residents, and following that all Villanova undergraduates."

The resident students like the idea of competing in a variety of interests and activities. Marshal Dillon of St. Mary's said, "I think it is great that there are both athletic and non-athletic events to bring about healthy competition."

Assistant Coach Apprentices Under Rollie Massimino

By ED McASSEY

Mike Mucci has been an apprentice to head hoop mentor Rollie Massimino for the past seven years. He has been preparing for a career in coaching in four different capacities under Massimino. "I really want to be a coach on the college level. Right now, I see myself in the learning stage," states the 1977 graduate.

He became involved in Villanova basketball as a player on the freshman team (no longer in existence) in 1974. That was also the first year that Massimino assumed control of the basketball program from previous Head Coach Jack Kraft. For the next three years he was the varsity manager as Massimino continued to rebuild the basketball program at Villanova. In 1977 he served two years as a graduate assistant while working on a Master's Degree in Education. During this past year, he has been serving as a part-time coach.

"As a graduate assistant, I was basically learning to coach and learning a lot about basketball from Coach Massimino. I also oversaw the recruiting operations here in the office and took care of the film exchange program. Since I was a graduate student, I was not able to go out and recruit." Mucci continues, "This year I have been recruiting out in the field. I think this is one aspect of the game that I like the most."

"My favorite moment since I have been here, had to have been two years ago when we went to Providence in the NCAA's. I saw everything come together there," remarks the young hoop assistant. Mucci saw Massimino bring his team of four or five freshmen starters in his first year to the NIT competition by the time those same freshmen had become seniors. "Those initial recruits, players like Joe Rogers, Larry Herron and John Olive and later Reggie Robinson, Keith Herron and Whitey Rigsby, helped Villanova gain recognition. First the NIT and later the NCAA's," remembers Mucci.

Mucci sees this year's quintet as being closer, deeper and obviously more experienced than Massimino's initial team; however, he emphasizes that the program philosophy hasn't changed. Mucci explains, "Coach Mass wants the kids to get a degree. He tries to instill the idea of loyalty and the "family" concept while representing Villanova.

Assistant Basketball Coach Mike Mucci.

He wants the best for all his players."

Mucci looks for Villanova to be on the top of the Big Five race; however, he cautions that the City Series is anything but predictable. "We still have Temple and St. Joe's; experience tells us especially with the St. Joe's game that emotions are so high, the game can go either way, despite the teams' record. In the Eastern Eight, Villanova should finish in the top four according to Mucci. He predicts Pittsburgh, Rutgers and Duquesne sharing the other positions. "We still have two key league games; Pittsburgh (away) and Rutgers (5-1) should be tough ones." analyzes Mucci.

Mucci says it is too early to speculate on recruits. "I can see us possibly bringing in three next year. Obviously we'll be looking for a center and so is everybody else. We could also possibly recruit a shooting forward," offers Mucci.

Intramural Hoops Displays Quality Basketball

By KATHLEEN STICKEL

The 1980 men's intramural basketball league is under way and is "showing a much better quality of basketball than previous years," according to John Coughlin and Chris Harms, the student coordinators of the league.

There are six different divisions, each with seven teams. In the 6:30 time slot at St. Mary's, two of the top teams from last year have already battled each other for the lead in this section. The Express (3-0) toppled last year's resident league champions, the E-Men (4-1) by a score of 60-47. The E-Men are led by captain John Czipo, junior star Joe Nadzak, Derek Powell, Mark Haynes, Dan Nicholson, Brian Scott and Bob Ryan, among others.

In another competitive division at 5:30 in Alumni, the undefeated Fred's (4-0) squeaked past Roche and O'Brien's (2-1) by a slim margin of 53-51.

Pete Harrington, Paul Jules and Jeff Sherry are several of the members of Roche and O'Brien's. The victors of that game include Brian Costello, Pat O'Brien, Kevin Curley, Dave Sattori and Jerry Miles to name a few.

All the Young Dudes from the 7:30 section at St. Mary's remains undefeated at 3-0 and is led by Tom Durling and Bill Mezzanotte.

The fraternities, which play on Sundays are led by DTD starred by Steve Kirk and Bob Rohrbacker.

The faculty has sported a team they call The Assembly. Brian Jones of the Sociology Department and Dan Reagan of the Philosophy Department show Villanova students that they can dominate even outside of the classroom

The Law School is represented by a team called the Grebs. The Grebs slipped by Home Grown 77-76. With no time left, a 1-1 foul shot pulled the future lawyers ahead by one.

Women Place High Among Powerhouses

By KERRY LYNCH

The Villanova women's track team traveled over 300 miles this past weekend to place fourth in the Pittsburgh Invitational. Sixteen teams came from all over the east, providing stiff competition for the Wildcats.

several good races throughout the weekend. Shea ran close behind Leddy in the 1000 to place second. In the mile she finished third in 4:57 her best indoor time. Whitfield, running the 880 in 2:14, placed second to Colquitt of Morgan State in a very close race.

The distance medley team of Amelia Cain, Shea, Whitfield and Leddy went out with the leaders and stayed in front. Their winning time was 11:51.2, which established a meet record.

Other events in which Villanovans scored were: the high jump in which Peggy Stewart finished second; the fifty yard hurdles where she placed fourth; the two mile relay team finishing fourth and the mile relay team took sixth.

Villanova finished within a respectable distance of track powerhouses Maryland and Michigan State and within points of the reputable Morgan State. The final scores were Maryland 131, Michigan 101, Morgan State 71 1/4 and Villanova 69.

Brigid Leddy was named Outstanding Distance Runner of the meet for her first place finishes and meet records in the 1000 yard run and the mile. She also anchored two Villanova relay teams.

Tracksters Warm Up Princeton

By ROBERT L.P. WALSH

Last Sunday, Jumbo Elliott and the Villanova track team travelled to Jadwin Gymnasium for the Princeton Relays and they did not dominate the meet. Assistant Track Coach Jack Pyrah explained, "It was just a meet to give everybody a chance to run." Since almost everyone qualified for the more important IC4A and NCAA Championships, the Wildcats could afford to use a variety of runners in the relay events.

Villanova's only first place finish in the relays came in the sprint medley relay as Keith Brown, Rodney Wilson (22.6), Carlton Young (21.4), and John Hunter combined for a time of 3:28.8. The Wildcats also finished fourth in the mile relay, third in the distance medley and fifth in the two-mile relay.

Individually, there were some fine performances by Villanova. Wilson tipped several hurdles but still managed a meet record of 7.43 in the 55 meter hurdles. Running at an unaccustomed distance of 3,000 meters, Don Paige kicked to an easy 8:11.8 win. Willie Sydnor placed third in the 55 meter dash for the Wildcats.

Cheyney Edges Villanova

By RAY ENGLER

"We gave it our best shot; there was nothing more we could have done," said Head Coach Harry Perretta. Perretta's Wildcats saw their 16-game winning streak go by the boards at Cheyney State, 58-48, in a women's basketball contest.

The Wildcats, ranked 18th in the nation this week, played solid defense throughout the game, led by Lisa Ortlip's five blocked shots and seven rebounds and Stephanie Vanderslice's team-high 12 rebounds. "Our diamond defense did the job, but (Valerie) Walker shot right over it," said Perretta, praising Cheyney's All-American sophomore Valerie Walker, who led all scorers with 21 points. Even though Villanova slowed the other Cheyney players for the most part, Walker would occasionally pull up and get 20-foot jump shots over the Wildcat defenders almost at will.

At halftime, Cheyney led 24-18; but Villanova had the momentum going their way and drew within three at 33-30. But about this time, Cheyney started to stiffen defensively, forcing the Wildcats to shoot from far outside and controlling the game inside, even with Lisa Ortlip scoring 16 points.

Three Wildcats were in double figures (Ortlip-16 points, co-captain Mary Beth Gibson-12 and Karen Hiznay-10) and three others scored in single figures (Stephanie Vanderslice-4, Kathy Beisel-4 and Lu-Ann Krothe-2).

"I was pleased with the way we played, but they were just too tough," was Coach Perretta's reaction to the game. "We have three more regional games coming up, so we have to buckle down and try to make the regionals." If the hard work and intensity that the women have shown this year continues, they should be a shoe-in for a bid this year.

Bowlers Continue Streak

The Villanova bowling team won their last three matches since Christmas to up their record to 5-1 in their league, tied with rival Penn State for first place. The Cats are led by senior Ron Geida who currently has one of the top averages in the country. The Bowling Cats are determined to defeat Penn State as soundly as the Wildcat basketball team did last Saturday. Should the cats defeat the PSU Lions it would insure their bid to the National Championships held in Milwaukee, Wis. in late March.

WKVU Tapes Fictitious Promo Game

By PETER RYAN

At WKVU, Villanova's campus radio station, general manager Joe Jasek is continually looking for something new to broaden the scope of the staffs' collective talents. Such was the case when he and sports directors Pat Flynn and Al Oxenreiter conceived an idea for a fictitious basketball game pitting our Wildcats against Rutgers in the 1981 Eastern Athletic Association (EAA) finals at the Pittsburgh Civic Arena.

"We wanted something creative, off-beat and off the wall . . ." explains the general manager of this recent experiment. There was a strong motive for this hypothetical contest however, as Jasek revealed; ". . . we were hoping to show Dick Mumma (a 6'10" high school recruit from Bedford, Pa.) what this place is really like."

In this vein, sports directors Flynn and Oxenreiter created this Villanova-Rutgers thriller on paper and as fate would have it, Wildcat hopeful Mumma scores the deciding points with a pair of last second free throws. "It took five hours for Pat and Al to write and work out the rough copy and the rest was left for me," commented Jasek. After two days the tape was ready for use after adding crowd applause, splicing and other necessary adjustments.

The production of the tape included insight from Marty Marbach, an intern assistant coach for Rollie Massimino. Mr. Marbach provided Flynn and Oxenreiter with enough information concerning our hoop strategy to make the Wildcat-Scarlet Knight clash authentic. At halftime Jasek interviewed assistant coach Mitch Buonaguro and then got a few postgame thoughts from Head Coach Massimino. "The basketball office was a great deal of help to us . . ." said Jasek, adding; ". . . and they were happy to do it."

After an endeavor of this nature the logical question after "why?" seems to be will they (Flynn, Jasek, and Oxenreiter) ever do it again? "We could do it again — but it works easiest for basketball since we only have to concentrate on five players." explains Jasek. The long range hope of this promotional tape is to allow Dick Mumma the chance to get a feel for collegiate basketball at Villanova. The idea of the tape is considered to be a "mind game" by the general manager.

Icecats Impress Northern Foes

By JIM FEMIA

The Villanova Icecats traveled north this past weekend to take on Army and Ramapo in two non-league tilts. Coach S.J.O. Probest hoped for a split on the trip, but got more than he asked for as the Cats tied Army and beat Ramapo in overtime.

At Army, the Icecats had a 4-2 lead with five minutes to play but the Cadets battled back to tie the Cats 4-4. Bill Quinlan led the attack with two goals and an assist. Linemate Chip Kenny had a goal and two assists and John Lammers tallied the Cat final goal. Tom Curran also had three assists. Freshmen Ken Downey and Brian Emmerich both played tough games on defense for Villanova.

At Ramapo, the story was completely reversed as the Cats trailed at the end of two periods, 3-0. Without the efforts of goaltender Mike "Chief" Alegardo the Cats could have easily been down by more than three goals. The Cats were in command from the start of the third period as Bill Quinlan brought the scrappy Icecats within two. Chris Mancusco and Tom Curran later added goals to send the game into overtime. Assistant Captain Chip Kenny then scored early in the overtime period to give Villanova a 4-3 come-from-behind victory.

In a game last Thursday evening, the University of Pennsylvania traveled to the Radnor Rink in hopes of their second victory of the season against the Cats. Assistant Captain Steve Carr led the Villanova attack as the Wildcats trounced Penn, 10-4. Carr, who had previously been in somewhat of a scoring slump broke out in style scoring four goals. Other goal scorers in the Penn game were Mancuso, Mike Kane, Curran, Emmerich, Kenny, and "Killer" Whitaker.

The Icecats have a busy weekend as they travel to Penn State on Saturday and to Drexel on Sunday. Villanova's next home game is February 14, when the Cats host the University of Delaware.

Seniors Shine In Field House Finale

"Thanks for the memories." Coming from a nostalgic senior at the conclusion of his last home game in the Villanova Field House, center Marty Caron summed up the emotion of not only his graduating teammates Rory Sparrow and Steve Lincoln, but also of Wildcat Head Coach Rollie Massimino.

As the lights dimmed and the spotlight found the seniors to be honored, the fans — young and old, graduates and undergraduates, faculty and students alike — were reminded of the memories of the stars and the not-quite stars, the championship teams and the not-quite championship clubs.

From the opening tap-off to the final buzzer, the Wildcats were in the driver's seat with Alex Bradley's 18 points followed by Rory Sparrow's 16 and John Pinone's 15. Although Drexel's Len Hatzenbeller boasted 20 points, the game high and brought down seven rebounds, most for the Drexel squad, the Dragons lost a 2-0 lead and eventually the game, 94-76.

HOUSE FANS INSPIRE FURY

By BETH WHITE

The Villanova Field House and fans are rapidly becoming for the Wildcats what the ACC (Athletic and Convocations Center) is for the Fighting Irish of Notre Dame. The standing-room-only crowd Saturday night at the Villanova-Penn State game witnessed the Cats' eleventh straight home win and gave the Wildcats the mental home-court advantage they needed to put six players in double figures and spark the team to a 45-point rout over the Nittany Lions of Penn State.

Penn State, acclaimed as "the hottest team in the East" after winning seven of their last eight games, had just come off a heart-breaking 56-55 loss to Duquesne. Villanova was coming home after a 10-point victory over Providence College, winning 62-52.

Three Wildcat starters and three more players off the strong Villanova bench tallied ten points or more. Center John Pinone, the Cats' leading scorer and re-bounder, once again paced the Cats with 14 points (four of six from the floor, six of six from the free throw stripe and six rebounds). Junior forward Alex Bradley contributed 12 more, completing six of 12 attempted field goals, pulling five rebounds off the boards and blocking two shots.

Four players tallied exactly 10 points each: senior Marty Caron, junior Tom Sienkiewicz, sophomore Tom Bethea and freshman Mike Mulquin.

Early in the second half, Caron received a pass from guard Stewart Granger and drew a foul against Penn State's Steve Kuhn for the three-point play. Caron commended Granger's play by saying, "Wherever I go next year (after graduation), I want to take Stew (Granger) with me. He will be an excellent guard in the next few years."

Granger showed his razzle-dazzle style on a steal and a dunk with a minute remaining in the game, on his way to eight points and five assists. The freshman guard explained that he "likes to look to the other players first then take the shot myself if no one's open." Granger also proclaimed that, "I definitely want to break the assist record here."

Senior guard Steve Lincoln also displayed a steal and layup of his own, a 15-foot jumper from the top of the key and a behind-the-back pass to Tom Bethea, all in the last four minutes, while tallying three assists and nine points for the game. Guards Sienkiewicz and Bethea each scored ten points, with Sienkiewicz feeding five assists and Bethea giving three more. Starters Rory Sparrow and Aaron Howard added nine points and six assists, respectively.

Coach Dick Harter of Penn State had to be disappointed with the Lion's performance. Six-foot-nine center Frank Brickowski was contained by Pinone and Caron for most of the game and netted only 15 points. Brickowski fouled out with just under eight minutes remaining in the game, severely handicapping Penn State. Freshman Mike Lang had also fouled out four minutes earlier, forcing Harter to rely on the Lion's bench. Villanova's half-court trap stifled the Penn State drive to only a 30% completion of their attempted shots.

Coach Rollie Massimino had a different strategy, though. Although several former Villanova basketball palyers had offered their advice during half-time (at which point Villanova was ahead 45-17), Coach Massimino felt that he "didn't have to call a time-out or put in his first stringers." Massimino thus allowed several minutes of playing time for substitutes Jim Knoebel and Kevin McKenna. Knoebel admitted that, "By the time I usually get in, we've already won the game."

However, Knoebel joined the effort by adding a bucket and a rebound. "It was a great crowd," continued Knoebel, "they really helped. It was really their game." McKenna, a freshman guard, displayed good passing and ball-handling ability during his three-minute stint on the court.

"The boys played with class and style," commended Coach Massimino, "and that is what basketball is all about." High on the head coach's praise list were seniors Rory Sparrow and Marty Caron, who played their last game before a Field House crowd on Monday against Drexel.

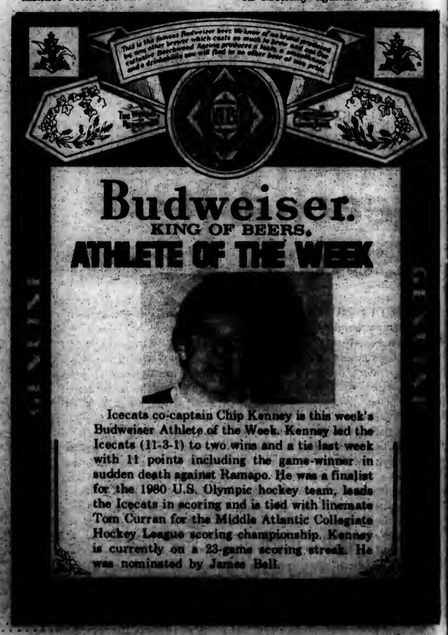
The track team has not been performing at full strength due to the injuries of three key runners. Sydney Maree has been slowed by a bad hip and Anthony Tuffariello is working out on an injured foot and may return soon. Sprinter Al Graves will not be able to run for some time because of torn ligaments suffered in his knee.

The freshmen, however, have been picking up some of the slack for the Wildcats. "Both Carlton Young and Rod Wilson have looked super, as we expected them to," according to Coach Pyrah.

On Friday, the Wildcats will take part in the prestigious Millrose Games at Madison Square Garden. Rod Wilson will be running in the hurdles, John Hunter will sprint 800 meters, and Villanova will furnish several relay teams. The highlight of the meet should be the Wanamaker Mile, which could pit Don Paige against some of the best milers in the world including Villanova alumni Eamonn Coghlan and Mark Belger.



Icecats co-captain Chip Kenney is this week's Budweiser Athlete of the Week. Kenney led the Icecats (11-3-1) to two wins and a tie last week with 11 points including the game-winner in sudden death against Ramapo. He was a finalist for the 1980 U.S. Olympic hockey team, leads the Icecats in scoring and is tied with linemate Tom Curran for the Middle Atlantic Collegiate Hockey League scoring championship. Kenney is currently on a 23-game scoring streak. He was nominated by James Bell.

Electric Splice Causes Blackout

By BRIAN R. QUINN

A faulty electrical splice caused a campus-wide blackout, Saturday, Feb. 9 at 11:58 p.m.

Later, several unidentified residents of Sullivan Hall carried a trash barrel to the center of the quad and set its contents ablaze. Approximately 50 residents of Sullivan and Sheehan Halls walked to the fire and began feeding it with materials taken from the Connelly Center.

"The residents were going wild, burning anything and screaming anti-Iranian obscenities" said Brian Callaghan, a freshman accounting major.

Assistant Dean of Men Anthony Martin termed the incident "unique," and dismissed all possibility that the episode was sparked by anti-Iranian sentiment. "I got the impression that the power failure instigated the episode and the trash can fire attracted attention," he said.

"The Bryn Mawr Fire Department arrived at once and put out the fire," said Peter Harrington, a first floor resident of Sullivan Hall. "But about a half an hour after they left, it started all over again. God knows what they threw in then," he added.

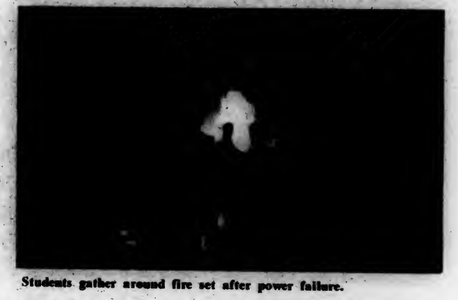
"When security is there, responsibility is out of our jurisdiction," stated Sheehan Halls Area Coordinator Valerie Reid. "It is usually the male residents who instigate things like this," she added.

Peter Harrington and numerous other witnesses said that the security guards appeared to arrive after the fire department. "I imagine they saw the fire department and decided to join in on the act," Harrington said.

Security guards are unable to pinpoint the time of their arrival, or the discovery of the fire.

Any disturbance in or around residence halls is the responsibility of the resident assistant staff, stated Assistant Dean of Men Martin. "Their responsibility is to deal with problems before security arrives. It's not like dealing with a downtown riot." He added that it must be dealt with on a basis of friendly recognition, and respect.

In a related incident, the auxiliary lights in Sullivan Hall, lights which are designed to switch on immediately in the event of a power failure, and light fire exits, failed to operate during Saturday night's blackout.



Students gather around fire set after power failure.

A sidelight to the blackout involving the Bryn Mawr fire company emerged from last Saturday's incidents. Joseph Cunnane, director of University security, said that a false alarm had been called into the fire company a few hours before the alarm on the bonfire was called in.

Thomas N. Trucks, director of University maintenance, expressed apprehension over the two alarms that were called in Saturday night. "I'm afraid that we may soon have the same situation as ten years ago, during the student demonstrations. At that time the Bryn Mawr fire department refused to adequately respond to alarms called in from the campus; they sent only one engine, if that," he said.

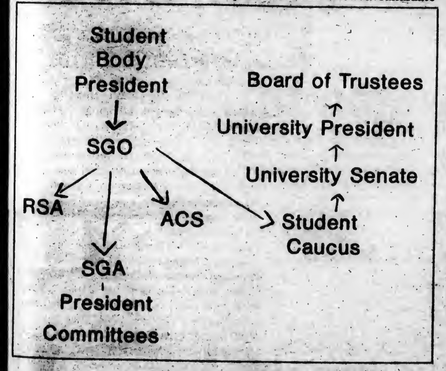
"I hope that this whole disregard of fire safety doesn't end with someone being badly burned or even killed," Trucks concluded.

Student Body, SGA Elections Separated

By MARGUERITE ESMONDE

Student elections will be held this year for both a student body president and an SGA president, splitting the office now held by P.J. Winterhalter.

The student body president and student senators will be elected before April 1, followed by the election of the SGA president some time in April. This procedure will allow a candidate who doesn't win the student body presidential election to run for SGA president.



The student body president will chair the Student Governments Organization (SGO), composed of representatives from the SGA, RSA and ACS.

"The student body president will head the SGO and sit on the student life committee and the University Senate ex officio," stated SGA president P. J. Winterhalter. "He'll represent the University in all functions which deal with outside activities. He'll also be on the board of directors of the Connelly Center."

"The SGO was implemented in September. It organizes and unites all three student governing organizations, the SGA, RSA and ACS, so they can all work on one main problem," Winterhalter said. "Now when there's a problem, it's recognized that it concerns all students. The SGO is a unifying organization."

The SGA will be separated from the University Senate student caucus, functioning instead as a branch of the SGO.

"The SGA president will run only the SGA," Winterhalter said. He'll be in charge of the various committees and will decide what the SGA does as an organization. This structure will revitalise the SGA and get it working. It's a working, vital organization."

Winterhalter has also proposed the formation of an elections commission to regulate the election of the student body president, SGA president and all University senators. The new commission, which will be implemented for elections in the spring of 1981, will consist of three representatives each from the faculty, administration, resident and commuter students, appointed by Fr. Deegan, vice-president for student life. The proposed commission will function independent of the University Senate.

"The commission will represent an equal distribution of the University, Winterhalter stated. "It will have to be recognized by the Senate and SGO first."

Teacher Review Before Senate

By BETTY RUTKOWSKI

A motion regarding the faculty evaluation system is to be presented by the Faculty Affairs Committee to the University Senate meeting this afternoon at 4:00 p.m. in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

The motion calls for untenured faculty to be evaluated every year, and tenured faculty will be to be evaluated every second year. The second motion recommends that the proposed program for a Master of Human Organization Science be approved.

According to P.J. Winterhalter, president of the Student Government Association, this is "one of the best motions to come out of the Senate this year."

"It is comparable to programs at Harvard, Columbia, and Yale and will be extremely good for Villanova."

A new grading system is the aim of the third motion. Brought forth by the Academic Policy Committee, the new system will add pluses and minuses to the present letter system changing the value of quality points per letter grade (e.g. B + - 3.0, B - 2.67, B - - 2.33).

Winterhalter thinks the motion is "hideous, and utterly ludicrous, but the student senators are split."

The final motion presented by the Student Caucus, recommends that any construction on new facilities be postponed until the fund-raising efforts stated in the first Covenant Campaign with regard to endowment are realised.

Assistant Coach Apprentices Under Rollie Massimino

By ED McASSEY

Mike Mucci has been an apprentice to head hoop mentor Rollie Massimino for the past seven years. He has been preparing for a career in coaching in four different capacities under Massimino. "I really want to be a coach on the college level. Right now, I see myself in the learning stage," states the 1977 graduate.

He became involved in Villanova basketball as a player on the freshman team (no longer in existence) in 1974. That was also the first year that Massimino assumed control of the basketball program from previous Head Coach Jack Kraft. In 1977 he served two years as a graduate assistant while working on a Master's Degree in Education. During this past year, he has been serving as a part-time coach.

"As a graduate assistant, I was basically learning to coach and learning a lot about basketball from Coach Massimino. I also oversaw the recruiting operations here in the office and took care of the film exchange program. Since I was a graduate student, I was not able to go out and recruit." Mucci continues, "This year I have been recruiting out in the field. I think this is one aspect of the game that I like the most."

"My favorite moment since I have been here, had to have been two years ago when we went to Providence in the NCAA's. I saw everything come together there," remarks the young hoop assistant. "We still have Temple and St. Joe's; experience tells us especially with the St. Joe's game that emotions are so high, the game can go either way, despite the teams' record. In the Eastern Eight, Villanova should finish in the top four according to Mucci. He predicts Pittsburgh, Rutgers and Duquesne sharing the other positions. "We still have two key league games; Pittsburgh (away) and Rutgers (5-1) should be tough ones." analyzes Mucci.

Mucci says it is too early to speculate on recruits. "I can see us possibly bringing in three next year. Obviously we'll be looking for a center and so is everybody else. We could also possibly recruit a shooting forward," offers Mucci.

Intramural Hoops Displays Quality Basketball

By KATHLEEN STICKEL

The 1980 men's intramural basketball league is under way and is "showing a much better quality of basketball than previous years," according to John Coughlin and Chris Harms, the student coordinators of the league.

There are six different divisions, each with seven teams. In the 6:30 time slot at St. Mary's, two of the top teams from last year have already battled each other for the lead in this section. The Express (3-0) toppled last year's resident league champions, the E-Men (4-1) by a score of 60-47. The E-Men are led by captain John Czipo, junior star Joe Nadzak, Derek Powell, Mark Haynes, Dan Nicholson, Brian Scott and Bob Ryan, among others.

In another competitive division at 5:30 in Alumni, the undefeated Fred's (4-0) squeaked past Roche and O'Brien's (2-1) by a slim margin of 53-51.

Pete Harrington, Paul Jules and Jeff Sherry are several of the members of Roche and O'Brien's. The victors of that game include Brian Costello, Pat O'Brien, Kevin Curley, Dave Satteri and Jerry Miles to name a few.

All the Young Dudes from the 7:30 section at St. Mary's remains undefeated at 3-0 and is led by Tom Darling and Bill Mezzanotte.

The fraternities, which play on Sundays are led by DTD starred by Steve Kirk and Bob Rohrbacker.

The faculty has sported a team they call The Assembly. Brian Jones of the Sociology Department and Dan Reagan of the Philosophy Department show Villanova students that they can dominate even outside of the classroom

The Law School is represented by a team called the Grebs. The Grebs slipped by Home Grown 77-76. With no time left, a 1-1 foul shot pulled the future lawyers ahead by one.

Women Place High Among Powerhouses

The Villanova women's track team traveled over 300 miles this past weekend to place fourth in the Pittsburgh Invitational. Sixteen teams came from all over the east, providing stiff competition for the Wildcats.

Leddy Named Outstanding Runner

Brigid Leddy was named Outstanding Distance Runner of the meet for her first place finishes and meet records in the 1000 yard run and the mile. She also anchored two Villanova relay teams.

Villanova sophmores Jennifer Whitfield and Sue Shea had several good races throughout the weekend. Shea ran close behind Leddy in the 1000 to place second. In the mile she finished third in 4:57 her best indoor time. Whitfield, running the 880 in 2:14, placed second to Colquitt of Morgan State in a very close race.

The distance medley team of Amelia Cain, Shea, Whitfield and Leddy went out with the leaders and stayed in front. Their winning time was 11:51.2, which established a meet record.

Other events in which Villanovans scored were: the high jump in which Peggy Stewart finished second; the fifty yard hurdles where she placed fourth; the two mile relay team finishing fourth and the mile relay team took sixth.

Villanova finished within a respectable distance of track powerhouses Maryland and Michigan State and within points of the reputable Morgan State. The final scores were Maryland 131, Michigan 101, Morgan State 71 1/4 and Villanova 69.

Tracksters Warm Up Princeton

By ROBERT L.P. WALSH

Last Sunday, Jumbo Elliott and the Villanova track team travelled to Jadwin Gymnasium for the Princeton Relays and they did not dominate the meet. Assistant Track Coach Jack Pyrah explained, "It was just a meet to give everybody a chance to run." Since almost everyone qualified for the more important IC4A and NCAA Championships, the Wildcats could afford to use a variety of runners in the relay events.

Villanova's only first place finish in the relays came in the sprint medley relay as Keith Brown, Rodney Wilson (22.6), Carlton Young (21.4), and John Hunter combined for a time of 3:28.8. The Wildcats also finished fourth in the mile relay, third in the distance medley and fifth in the two-mile relay.

Individually, there were some fine performances by Villanova. Wilson tipped several hurdles but still managed a meet record of 7.43 in the 55 meter hurdles. Running at an unaccustomed distance of 3,000 meters, Don Paige kicked to an easy 8:11.8 win. Willie Sydnor placed third in the 55 meter dash for the Wildcats.

Cheyney Edges Villanova

By RAY ENGLER

"We gave it our best shot; there was nothing more we could have done," said Head Coach Harry Perretta. Perretta's Wildcats saw their 16-game winning streak go by the boards at Cheyney State, 58-48, in a women's basketball contest.

The Wildcats, ranked 18th in the nation this week, played solid defense throughout the game, led by Lisa Ortlip's five blocked shots and seven rebounds and Stephanie Vanderslice's team-high 12 rebounds. "Our diamond defense did the job, but (Valerie) Walker shot right over it," said Perretta, praising Cheyney's All-American sophomore Valerie Walker, who led all scorers with 21 points. Even though Villanova slowed the other Cheyney players for the most part, Walker would consistently get off her 20-foot jump shots over the Wildcat defenders almost at will.

At halftime, Cheyney led 24-18; but Villanova had the momentum going their way and drew within three at 33-30. But about this time, Cheyney started to stiffen defensively, forcing the Wildcats to shoot from far outside and controlling the game inside, even with Lisa Ortlip scoring 16 points.

Three Wildcats were in double figures (Ortlip-16 points, co-captain Mary Beth Gibson-12 and Karen Hizney-10) and three others scored in single figures (Stephanie Vanderslice-4, Kathy Beisel-4 and Lu-Ann Krothe-2).

"I was pleased with the way we played, but they were just too tough," was Coach Perretta's reaction to the game. "We have three more regional games coming up, so we have to buckle down and try to make the regionals." If the hard work and intensity that the Wildcats have shown this year continues, they should be a shoe-in for a bid this year.

Bowlers Continue Streak

The Villanova bowling team won their last three matches since Christmas to up their record to 5-1 in their league, tied with rival Penn State for first place. The Cats are led by senior Ron Geida who currently has one of the top averages in the country. The Bowling Cats are determined to defeat Penn State as soundly as the Wildcat basketball team did last Saturday. Should the cats defeat the PSU Lions it would insure their bid to the National Championships held in Milwaukee, Wis. in late March.

WKVU Tapes Fictitious Promo Game

By PETER RYAN

At WKVU, Villanova's campus radio station, general manager Joe Jasek is continually looking for something new to broaden the scope of the staffs' collective talents. Such was the case when he and sports directors Pat Flynn and Al Oxenreiter conceived an idea for a fictitious basketball game pitting our Wildcats against Rutgers in the 1981 Eastern Athletic Association (EAA) finals at the Pittsburgh Civic Arena.

"We wanted something creative, off-beat and off the wall..." explains the general manager of this recent experiment. There was a strong motive for this hypothetical contest however, as Jasek revealed; "...we were hoping to show Dick Mumma (a 6'10" high school recruit from Bedford, Pa.) what this place is really like."

In this vein, sports directors Flynn and Oxenreiter created this Villanova-Rutgers thriller on paper and as fate would have it, Wildcat hopeful Mumma scores the deciding points with a pair of last second free throws. "It took five hours for Pat and Al to write and work out the rough copy and the rest was left for me," commented Jasek. After two days the tape was ready for use after adding crowd applause, splicing and other necessary adjustments.

The production of the tape included insight from Marty Marbach, an intern assistant coach for Rollie Massimino. Mr. Marbach provided Flynn and Oxenreiter with enough information concerning our hoop strategy to make the Wildcat-Scarlet Knight clash authentic. At halftime Jasek interviewed assistant coach Mitch Buonaguro and then got a few postgame thoughts from Head Coach Massimino. "The basketball office was a great deal of help to us..." said Jasek, adding; "...and they were happy to do it."

After an endeavor of this nature the logical question after "why?" seems to be will they (Flynn, Jasek, and Oxenreiter) ever do it again? "We could do it again — but it works easiest for basketball since we only have to concentrate on five players." explains Jasek. The long range hope of this promotional tape is to allow Dick Mumma the chance to get a feel for collegiate basketball at Villanova. The idea of the tape is considered to be a "mind game" by the general manager.

Icecats Impress Northern Foes

By JIM FEMIA

The Villanova Icecats traveled north this past weekend to take on Army and Ramapo in two non-league tilts. Coach S.J.O. Probest hoped for a split on the trip, but got more than he asked for as the Cats tied Army and beat Ramapo in overtime.

At Army, the Icecats had a 4-2 lead with five minutes to play but the Cadets battled back to tie the Cats 4-4. Bill Quinlan led the attack with two goals and an assist. Linemate Chip Kenny had a goal and two assists and John Lammers tallied the Cat final goal. Tom Curran also had three assists. Freshmen Ken Downey and Brian Emmerich both played tough games on defense for Villanova.

At Ramapo, the story was completely reversed as the Cats trailed at the end of two periods, 3-0. Without the efforts of goaltender Mike "Chief" Alegardo the Cats could have easily been down by more than three goals. The Cats were in command from the start of the third period as Bill Quinlan brought the scrappy Icecats within two. Chris Mancusco and Tom Curran later added goals to send the game into overtime. Assistant Captain Chip Kenny then scored early in the overtime period to give Villanova a 4-3 come-from-behind victory.

In a game last Thursday evening, the University of Pennsylvania traveled to the Radnor Rink in hopes of their second victory of the season against the Cats. Assistant Captain Steve Carr led the Villanova attack as the Wildcats trounced Penn, 10-4. Carr, who had previously been in somewhat of a scoring slump broke out in style scoring four goals. Other goal scorers in the Penn game were Mancuso, Mike Kane, Curran, Emmerich, Kenny, and "Killer" Whitaker.

The Icecats have a busy weekend as they travel to Penn State on Saturday and to Drexel on Sunday. Villanova's next home game is February 14, when the Cats host the University of Delaware.

Seniors Shine In Field House Finale

Cats Slay Dragons

"Thanks for the memories." Coming from a nostalgic senior at the conclusion of his last home game in the Villanova Field House, center Marty Caron summed up the emotion of not only his graduating teammates Rory Sparrow and Steve Lincoln, but also of Wildcat Head Coach Rollie Massimino.

As the lights dimmed and the spotlight found the seniors to be honored, the fans — young and old, graduates and undergraduates, faculty and students alike — were reminded of the memories of the stars and the not-quite stars, the championship teams and the not-quite championship clubs.

From the opening tap-off to the final buzzer, the Wildcats were in the driver's seat with Alex Bradley's 18 points followed by Rory Sparrow's 16 and John Pinone's 15. Although Drexel's Len Hatzenbeller boasted 20 points, the game high and brought down seven rebounds, most for the Drexel squad, the Dragons lost a 2-0 lead and eventually the game, 94-76.

Jerry Myles, a senior manager of the basketball team, is honored along with the senior varsity athletes in their last home game in the Field House. The graduating members were spotlighted in a pre-game salute just prior to the Villanova-Drexel game.

HOUSE FANS INSPIRE FURY

By BETH WHITE

The Villanova Field House and fans are rapidly becoming for the Wildcats what the ACC (Athletic and Convocations Center) is for the Fighting Irish of Notre Dame. The standing-room-only crowd Saturday night at the Villanova-Penn State game witnessed the Cats' eleventh straight home win and gave the Wildcats the mental home-court advantage they needed to put six players in double figures and spark the team to a 45-point rout over the Nittany Lions of Penn State.

Penn State, acclaimed as "the hottest team in the East" after winning seven of their last eight games, had just come off a heart-breaking 56-55 loss to Duquesne. Villanova was coming home after a 10-point victory over Providence College, winning 62-52.

Three Wildcat starters and three more players off the strong Villanova bench tallied ten points or more. Center John Pinone, the Cats' leading scorer and rebounder, once again paced the Cats with 14 points (four of six from the floor, six of six from the free throw stripe and six rebounds). Junior forward Alex Bradley contributed 12 more, completing six of 12 attempted field goals, pulling five rebounds off the boards and blocking two shots.

Four players tallied exactly 10 points each: senior Marty Caron, junior Tom Sienkiewicz, sophomore Tom Bethea and freshman Mike Mulquin.

Early in the second half, Caron received a pass from guard Stewart Granger and drew a foul against Penn State's Steve Kuhn for the three-point play. Caron commended Granger's play by saying, "Wherever I go next year (after graduation), I want to take Stew (Granger) with me. He will be an excellent guard in the next few years."

Granger showed his razzle-dazzle style on a steal and a dunk with a minute remaining in the game, on his way to eight points and five assists. The freshman guard explained that he "likes to look to the other players first then take the shot myself if no one's open." Granger also proclaimed that, "I definitely want to break the assist record here."

Senior guard Steve Lincoln also displayed a steal and layup of his own, a 15-foot jumper from the top of the key and a behind-the-back pass to Tom Bethea, all in the last four minutes, while tallying three assists and nine points for the game. Guards Sienkiewicz and Bethea each scored ten points, with Sienkiewicz feeding five assists and Bethea giving three more. Starters Rory Sparrow and Aaron Howard added nine points and six assists, respectively.

Coach Dick Harter of Penn State had to be disappointed with the Lion's performance. Six-foot-nine center Frank Brickowski was contained by Pinone and Caron for most of the game and netted only 15 points. Brickowski fouled out with just under eight minutes remaining in the game, severely handicapping Penn State. Freshman Mike Lang had also fouled out four minutes earlier, forcing Harter to rely on the Lion's bench. Villanova's half-court trap stifled the Penn State drive to only a 30% completion of their attempted shots.

Coach Rollie Massimino had a different strategy, though. Although several former Villanova basketball palyers had offered their advice during half-time (at which point Villanova was ahead 45-17), Coach Massimino felt that he "didn't have to call a time-out or put in his first stringers." Massimino thus allowed several minutes of playing time for substitutes Jim Knoebel and Kevin McKenna. Knoebel admitted that, "By the time I usually get in, we've already won the game."

However, Knoebel joined the effort by adding a bucket and a rebound. "It was a great crowd," continued Knoebel, "they really helped. It was really their game." McKenna, a freshman guard, displayed good passing and ball-handling ability during his three-minute stint on the court.

"The boys played with class and style," commended Coach Massimino, "and that is what basketball is all about." High on the head coach's praise list were seniors Rory Sparrow and Marty Caron, who played their last game before a Field House crowd on Monday against Drexel.

The track team has not been performing at full strength due to the injuries of three key runners. Sydney Maree has been slowed by a bad hip and Anthony Tuffariello is working out on an injured foot and may return soon. Sprinter Al Graves will not be able to run for some time because of torn ligaments suffered in his knee.

The freshmen, however, have been picking up some of the slack for the Wildcats. "Both Carlton Young and Rod Wilson have looked super, as we expected them to," according to Coach Pyrah.

On Friday, the Wildcats will take part in the prestigious Millrose Games at Madison Square Garden. Rod Wilson will be running in the hurdles, John Hunter will sprint 800 meters, and Villanova will furnish several relay teams. The highlight of the meet should be the Wanamaker Mile, which could pit Don Paige against some of the best milers in the world including Villanova alumni Eamonn Coghlan and Mark Belger.

Icecats co-captain Chip Kenney is this week's Budweiser Athlete of the Week. Kenney led the Icecats (11-3-1) to two wins and a tie last week with 11 points including the game-winner in sudden death against Ramapo. He was a finalist for the 1980 U.S. Olympic hockey team, leads the Icecats in scoring and is tied with linemate Tom Curran for the Middle Atlantic Collegiate Hockey League scoring championship. Kenney is currently on a 23-game scoring streak. He was nominated by James Bell.

Electric Splice Causes Blackout

By BRIAN R. QUINN

A faulty electrical splice caused a campus-wide blackout, Saturday, Feb. 9 at 11:58 p.m.

Later, several unidentified residents of Sullivan Hall carried a trash barrel to the center of the quad and set its contents ablaze. Approximately 50 residents of Sullivan and Sheehan Halls walked to the fire and began feeding it with materials taken from the Connelly Center.

"The residents were going wild, burning anything and screaming anti-Iranian obscenities" said Brian Callaghan, a freshman accounting major.

Assistant Dean of Men Anthony Martin termed the incident "unique," and dismissed all possibility that the episode was sparked by anti-Iranian sentiment. "I got the impression that the power failure instigated the episode and the trash can fire attracted attention," he said.

"The Bryn Mawr Fire Department arrived at once and put out the fire," said Peter Harrington, a first floor resident of Sullivan Hall. "But about a half an hour after they left, it started all over again. God knows what they threw in then," he added.

"When security is there, responsibility is out of our jurisdiction," stated Sheehan Halls Area Coordinator Valerie Reid. "It is usually the male residents who instigate things like this," she added.

Peter Harrington and numerous other witnesses said that the security guards appeared to arrive after the fire department. "I imagine they saw the fire department and decided to join in on the act," Harrington said.

Security guards are unable to pinpoint the time of their arrival, or the discovery of the fire.

Any disturbance in or around residence halls is the responsibility of the resident assistant staff, stated Assistant Dean of Men Martin. "Their responsibility is to deal with problems before security arrives. It's not like dealing with a downtown riot." He added that it must be dealt with on a basis of friendly recognition, and respect.

In a related incident, the auxiliary lights in Sullivan Hall, lights which are designed to switch on immediately in the event of a power failure, and light fire exits, failed to operate during Saturday night's blackout.

Students gather around fire set after power failure.

A sidelight to the blackout involving the Bryn Mawr fire company emerged from last Saturday's incidents. Joseph Cunnane, director of University security, said that a false alarm had been called into the fire company a few hours before the alarm on the bonfire was called in.

Thomas N. Trucks, director of University maintenance, expressed apprehension over the two alarms that were called in Saturday night. "I'm afraid that we may soon have the same situation as ten years ago, during the student demonstrations. At that time the Bryn Mawr fire department refused to adequately respond to alarms called in from the campus; they sent only one engine, if that," he said.

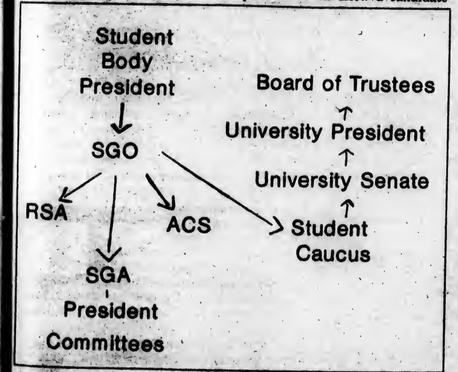
"I hope that this whole disregard of fire safety doesn't end with someone being badly burned or even killed," Trucks concluded.

Student Body, SGA Elections Separated

By MARGUERITE ESMONDE

Student elections will be held this year for both a student body president and an SGA president, splitting the office now held by P.J. Winterhalter.

The student body president and student senators will be elected before April 1, followed by the election of the SGA president some time in April. This procedure will allow a candidate who doesn't win the student body presidential election to run for SGA president.



The student body president will chair the Student Governments Organization (SGO), composed of representatives from the SGA, RSA and ACS.

"The student body president will head the SGO and sit on the student life committee and the University Senate ex officio," stated SGA president P. J. Winterhalter. "He'll represent the University in all functions which deal with outside activities. He'll also be on the board of directors of the Connelly Center."

"The SGO was implemented in September. It organizes and unites all three student governing organizations, the SGA, RSA and ACS, so they can all work on one main problem," Winterhalter said. "Now when there's a problem, it's recognized that it concerns all students. The SGO is a unifying organization."

The SGA will be separated from the University Senate student caucus, functioning instead as a branch of the SGO.

"The SGA president will run only the SGA," Winterhalter said. He'll be in charge of the various committees and will decide what the SGA does as an organization. This structure will revitalize the SGA and get it working. It's a working, vital organization."

Winterhalter has also proposed the formation of an elections commission to regulate the election of the student body president, SGA president and all University senators. The new commission, which will be implemented for elections in the spring of 1981, will consist of three representatives each from the faculty, administration, resident and commuter students, appointed by Fr. Deegan, vice-president for student life. The proposed commission will function independent of the University Senate.

"The commission will represent an equal distribution of the University, Winterhalter stated. "It will have to be recognized by the Senate and SGO first."

Teacher Review Before Senate

By BETTY RUTKOWSKI

A motion regarding the faculty evaluation system is to be presented by the Faculty Affairs Committee to the University Senate meeting this afternoon at 4:00 p.m. in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

The motion calls for untenured faculty to be evaluated every year, and tenured faculty will be to be evaluated every second year. The second motion recommends that the proposed program for a Master of Human Organization Science be approved.

According to P.J. Winterhalter, president of the Student Government Association, this is "one of the best motions to come out of the Senate this year."

"It is comparable to programs at Harvard, Columbia, and Yale and will be extremely good for Villanova."

A new grading system is the aim of the third motion. Brought forth by the Academic Policy Committee, the new system will add pluses and minuses to the present letter system changing the value of quality points per letter grade (e.g. B + - 3.0, B - 2.67, B - - 2.33)

Winterhalter thinks the motion is "hideous, and utterly ludicrous, but the student senators are split."

The final motion presented by the Student Caucus, recommends that any construction on new facilities be postponed until the fund-raising efforts stated in the first Covenant Campaign with regard to endowment are realized.

Student Positions Available

Villanova University is in the process of establishing a Board of Directors for the Connelly Center. The Bylaws for the Connelly Center Board of Directors state that the Board "shall develop policy and act as the guiding force behind all aspects of the Connelly Center. Its purpose and responsibility shall be to develop policies and procedures for the use of the facility, conduct programs, and aid in evaluating the Center's Food Service Program at Villanova University." The Board will have twelve voting members representing students, faculty, staff, alumni and trustees of Villanova University. Faculty and staff will be contacted through their respective Dean, Chairperson or Supervisor regarding availability of positions on the Connelly Center Board of Directors.

There are immediate openings for three students to serve two year rotating terms on the Board. To begin the rotating terms one resident student will be appointed for a one-year term commencing March 1, 1980 and terminating May 31, 1981. A commuter student will be appointed for a two-year term commencing March 1, 1980, and terminating May 31, 1982. One student at large will be appointed to a two-year term commencing March 1, 1980 and terminating May 31, 1982. After May 31, 1981 all terms will be for two years.

Students may petition for membership on the Connelly Center Board of Directors by obtaining an application form from Fr. Deegan's Office, vice-president for Student Life, Dougherty Hall, Room No. 202. Applications must be returned to this office by February 22, 1980.

Now is your opportunity to become involved with the Connelly Center! If you have any questions, stop by and see Fr. Deegan, O.S.A. or Marc E. Tuchman, director of the Connelly Center.

Coffeehouse

There will be a Coffee House, featuring Connie and Perry, Thursday, Feb. 21, at 8 p.m., in the East Lounge. This is your chance to meet new people, listen to good music , and just have fun! A donation of $1 will help support Appalachia.

Commerce & Finance Council

The Commerce and Finance Council will hold its first general membership meeting of the second semester on Wed., Feb. 20, at 5:30, in Bartley 10. Mandatory meeting — All members must attend.

Presidential Poll

On Wednesday, March 12, the College Republicans will sponsor a campus-wide "straw poll" of all the leading presidential candidates in the Pennsylvania Primary. A brief background sketch on each of the candidates will be distributed beforehand, and the results of the poll will be published locally as an indication of college students' views on the Presidential race. During the polling, registration forms for all who wish to register to vote will be distributed. Also, on Tuesday evening at 7:00 p.m. in Bartley Rm. 106, the College Republicans will hold their next meeting. All are invited to attend.

Italian Club

With the start of the new semester, the Italian Club is sponsoring various events such as Italian films, trips to Philadelphia, and an end-of-year Italian Club dinner. Old and new members are welcomed. Our next meeting will be held on February 19, Tuesday, at 1:00 in 317 Tolentine. Future events will be discussed.

Jewish Union

On Tuesday, February 19 Betsy Gordon will speak about the Allied Jewish Appeal and show slides at 12:45 in Bartley Hall room 10. On Wednesday February 20 a group of Villanova students will leave at 5:30 a.m. to travel to Washington to lobby in behalf of Soviet Jewry and Sasha Yakir. All students are welcome and it is not too late to join us. The cost for travel is $10.00. On Sunday February 24 Nora Levin will speak on "The World Response to the Holocaust." The program will begin at 7:00 p.m. in Vasey 208. All are encouraged to attend. On Tuesday February 26 Rabbi Abraham Levine will speak on the meaning of Purim in Bartley 10 at 12:45.

PSE Meeting

PSE meeting Feb. 19, in B105, at 12:45. Very important! Money due for T-shirts, initiation and old member fees.

Softball Tryouts

Student Officer To Meet Carter

By JERRY DOUGHERTY

Student Government President P. J. Winterhalter is scheduled to meet today with President Jimmy Carter.

Winterhalter was invited to attend a meeting in Washington on foreign and domestic policy issues.

Besides Carter, government officials participating in the meeting will include senior members of the White House staff as well as members of the National Security Council and the Domestic Policy staff.

The meeting at the executive building will include discussion sessions that are intended to focus on specific areas which involve college students.

After the meeting, the President will greet Winterhalter and the other invited guests in the East Room of the White House.

Reached to comment on his White House invitation, Winterhalter said he was "honored that he (Carter) chose me. It gives the President an opportunity to see how Villanova people feel in the issues."

According to Winterhalter, several persons from other colleges were invited to the meeting. "You have to keep in mind this is an election year, and Carter's decision to reinstate registration may alienate him from the young," he said.

Concert Canceled

By GINGER FANNON

A concert for Cambodian relief, featuring Johnny's Dance Band, was recently proposed by Dr. James Bean, professor of psychology. It was to be held March 23. The idea, however, met with much protest from the office of Student Activities, and Rev. Robert J. Martin, O.S.A., dean of student activities.

This project was one of the activities being coordinated for the formation of the Villanova World Food Project, an executive committee representing all of the organizations on campus working against world hunger. The goals of this project are: to educate everyone about the need for food policy, to raise money for various kinds of hunger alleviation, and to take political action where necessary to encourage national and international awareness of the problem.

Bean explained that there are two kinds of food policies, constructive and destructive. Destructive food policies make nations dependent on other nations through political or military action. Constructive food policy enables people to help themselves by learning new methods of food production. This is where Villanova places its support.

The concert, which was predicted to cost between $3500-$4000, was expected to gross between $4000-$7000 according to Bean. Due to past experience with a Johnny's Dance Band concert, however, Martin was skeptical as to whether or not the concert could break even. A previous concert for Cambodian Relief featuring Harry Chapin did not break even. He believed that this was too much effort to put into a project whose profit may not even cover its costs.

Bean feels that the concert "could be a winner" because it "makes sense on many levels — Not only would it raise money for Cambodian relief, but it would also serve as an awareness of the hunger problem, not to mention the entertainment it would provide."

Bean took a poll of 160 students

Candidate Visits Campus

By SUZANNE TAVANI

"The draft is the wrong signal to the Soviet Union at the wrong time," is just one viewpoint of Edward Mezvinsky, Democratic candidate for the U.S. Senate seat from Pennsylvania. Mezvinsky, a Montgomery County resident, visited the Villanova campus last Wednesday making stops at the Villanovan, SGA offices, and WKVU, where he taped the interview.

Mezvinsky has served as Chairman of the 1973 Congressional Freshman class, where he sat on the historic House Judiciary Committee during Watergate. As U.S. Representative to the United Nations (UN) Human Rights Committee, he travelled to the Soviet Union for a meeting with refusnicks such as Anatoli Sharansky and Aleksandr Sakarov.

With "Mezvinsky Means Confidence" as his campaign slogan, he openly spoke out on controversial issues ranging from Iran, to nuclear energy, to the draft, and the ERA. "We're dealing with fanatics, it's not a rational situation," commented Mezvinsky on the Iranian situation. "The hostages should be released before a U.N. International Commission is set up."

While only a few countries have agreed to cooperate with President Carter's economic embargo against Russia, Mezvinsky feels that an economic blockade backed by international support would be effective.

"Two things are needed to effectively deal with the Russians: to cut off the trade relationship and to support a boycott of the Summer Olympics," said Mezvinsky, adding later that to go to Russia and saying sports and business as usual would be "ludicrous."

Last Friday the President announced his support for the registration of women into the service although U.S. law prohibits women from combative positions. Mezvinsky opposes all registration at the present time stating that "either you're for the draft or not. Why have men register if a draft 'possibly' won't be reinstated?"

Nuclear energy projects, insisted Mezvinsky, should be put on hold while we learn to use those natural resources we have, such as coal and solar energy. "In 1973 I was one of six in the House of Representatives who called for a hold on nuclear development due to the high risk factors involved with its waste and transportation," stated Mezvinsky.

Considering the Windfall Profits Tax too weak, he sees a need to control the domestic oil companies by taking away the tax subsidy they receive for drilling in foreign countries.

The Mezvinsky family, which includes wife Marjorie Margolies, an NBC news reporter, has opened their doors to three Boat families. One family presently living with them paid 14 ounces of gold to get on the boat. Ms. Margolies, prior to her marriage to Mezvinsky, adopted two daughters, one Korean and one Vietnamese.

When posed with the question of lowering the drinking age to 19 in Pennsylvania, Mezvinsky expressed the idea of having a uniform age when one is recognized as an adult. He stated, "If you're going to subject 18 or 19 year old people to the draft, there should be a /similar stance for other 'adult' things."

Considering the turmoil which greeted the 1980's, Mezvinsky feels "the 80's will put the 70's to shame. The history of this country will be decided in the 80's especially the 1980 elections," and Ed Mezvinsky wants to be one of those who shape U.S. history in the future.

Edward Mezvinsky, U.S.Senate candidate.

Appalachian Trip Readied

By IRENE SMITH

During spring break when most students migrate to warmer places such as Florida or Bermuda, a group of Villanova students will be traveling to Hot Spring, North Carolina to assist in a volunteer program that aids poverty striken areas of Appalachia.

The Appalachia Program, headed by Ms. Barbara Haenn and Fr. Mike Glessner, is in its fourth year of existence at Villanova.

The purposes of the program are to provide a concrete chance for the students to give of themselves for one week and to see people who live radically different lives than the ones they are accustomed to. A third goal is to provide Villanova students with the experience of communal living.

Ms. Haenn stated that the program makes no major change on the poverty level or interupts the cycle of poverty, but there is impact on the individual lives. Barbara Haenn began the program at Villanova after having spent a year working with Vista.

"I was very touched in the year I spent there," she said. "I had just come out of the college experience which was homogeneous and I looked back on it and saw that it was narrow. There was more to life than the one I walked in."

According to Haenn, the week spent in Appalachia is not an easy one. It is a simple living where everything is recycled including the garbage. The students provide for their own meals and everyone takes turns cooking for 40 people.

The area is a lumber area where 32 percent of the people live below the poverty level.

The work will consist of painting houses, repairing and insulating homes, and chopping fire wood to provide heat for warmth. The students will also run a day care center for children in the village.

There are five to seven worksites and students will rotate between sites to get as much exposure as possible to the different types of people.

One of the students Frank Shroeder, remarked on why he wanted to go. "I just wanted to see a completely different lifestyle. A lot of us are in our own world; we don't see real poverty that others live in. I would like to appreciate more what I have by seeing what others lack."

Another student mentioned, "When I first decided, I thought I would be helping people. After two orientation meetings Barbara told us that they would be helping us more than we would be helping them in realizing our values. The purpose is to become more people oriented and get down to basics."

In order to prepare for the stay the group has 4 orientation meetings. In 24 hours they try to form a community and break down any barriers they may have against meeting and knowing people. They also become acquainted with the cultural and geographical aspects of the place they are about to visit.

It is a difficult transition Barbara Haenn stated, "The northern way is geared towards efficiency and production while the southern mentality is geared towards people. The people there are simple persons not concerned with clocks or time schedules; it is a very refreshing change from our lifestyle."

She found that in the Vista program it took 6 months to become acclimated, but once used to it "I loved it." I found that the adjustment upon coming home was far greater than it was leaving.

"The values of Appalachia lifestyle embodied more Christian values than the fast paced lifestyle we exist in."

Activities Dean Receives Award

By VINCENT HAUSMANN

Lambda Chi Alpha (LXA), a national service social fraternity on campus, bestowed their award "for outstanding service in promoting and assisting the fraternity system and Greek life on campus" to Father Robert Martin, O.S.A., dean of student activities.

Martin was one of three individuals honored. Other recipients of awards were Joseph McCabe, chosen as outstanding alumni, and Larry McElroy, a Rosemont resident, selected among candidates for his outstanding community service.

Curtiss Di Paola, LXA president, praised Martin noting his work and contribution to the Greek system:

"He has promoted and assisted all Greek organizations on campus with his constant support," stated Di Paola.

In accepting the award Martin commended the leaders of the fraternity for their work in the Greek system during the three years that he has served Villanova:

"I would like to thank LXA for assisting in promoting the values of brotherhood and the fraternity system," stated Martin.

Summers stated that he wanted to increase the number of midshipmen in the ROTC at Villanova. "Less than ten years ago, the unit had 400 midshipmen. Less than five years ago, the unit had 250 midshipmen. Today, the unit has 164 midshipmen. I want to reverse that trend," said Summers.

Summers stated that the size of the unit affects the decisions of high school students shopping around for a unit to join. He said that students want to join the bigger units.

Summers outlined his plans for the improvement. "We have an active recruiting program. Midshipmen are sending a letter to every Villanova sophomore about the two-year scholarship and college programs. The unit will also operate an information table to be located in Dougherty Hall.

Summers said, "We are trying to get the information to the freshman and sophomore students here at Villanova."

The colonel said that he hopes the students outside the unit realize that the haircuts are not bad and that the uniform is not worn all the time.

Summers pointed out some of the benefits derived from belonging to the unit. Midshipmen

Orientation Underway

By KATHY SANGIACOMO

Orientation 1980 is underway. Ellen M. Tracy, a junior nursing student, has been selected as this year's student chairperson in charge of orientation.

Tracy will be working directly with Stephen J. Steckler, assistant dean of student activities and director of orientation, to select and train the student administrative coordinator, the administrative assistant, the student steering committee, and orientation counselors. The group as a whole will be working towards providing a realistic set of expectations for college experience.

Some of last year's orientation counselors enjoy festivities.

Selection for steering committee members began this past Monday. The fifteen committee members, once chosen, will be assisting in program development. Each member will be responsible for a different area of orientation. And each steering committee member will be assigned five orientation counselors to train for the program.

Once again, the use of orientation counselors has proven effective. There will be 75 positions to be filled. Each of the 75 counselors will be assigned a group of new students to talk to and acclimate with their new environment.

Orientation is designed to be enjoyable yet realistic. Its purpose is to get to students main concerns. The program not only deals with providing information but also with providing support. "We want to provide a balance of college life at all levels and we want to begin by making an effective transition from where the new students were to where they are now," commented Steckler.

He added, "Orientation couldn't be a good program without the responsible, serious, and dedicated orientation staff. Although orientation is a university-wide program and not a student run program, each student will be given more responsibility and will play a very integral role in orientation's development."

There are many changes from last year's orientation program. The changes came about because of evaluations from 1979 orientation and because of 1980's new student enrollment.

Along with the games and entertainment involved with orientation there will be an increased concentration in academics. In addition, there will be time devoted to special University subpopulations such as residents, off-campus residents, and commuters.

As Steckler mentioned, "Orientation is not just making friends. It is presenting a comfortable setting and an environment to allow each new student to feel a part of the University community."

Honors Week to View New Values

By RICHARD McDONOUGH

Talks by Daniel Callahan of the Hastings Institute and by Eugene Kennedy of Loyola University in Chicago will highlight Honors Junior Week, scheduled for March 10-14.

Sponsored by the junior members of Villanova's Honors Program, Honors Junior Week will feature a series of lectures and panel discussions which will address the theme: "The Me Culture: The nature of the changing American values and its implications for the future."

"In comparison to the social activism which characterized the Sixties, Americans of the Seventies have been described as narcissistic, living only for themselves and for the moment," explained Bill Guerin, chairman of Honors Junior Week.

"Cultural historians point to the rising divorce rate, to the decreased participation by Americans in political affairs and in institutional religions, and conclude that our society has become self-centered," continued Guerin. "The purpose of Honors Junior Week is to explore the values of our present society, and possibly to conjecture as to what types of value systems will characterize the Eighties."

Honors Junior Week will begin Monday evening, March 10, with a lecture by Daniel Callahan, director of the Hastings Institute for Social Ethics and the Life Sciences, Callahan's best-known books include Ethics and Population Limitation and The Tyranny of Survival.

For the following evening, a panel consisting of a corporate executive, consumer advocate, labor union official, and sociologist has been formed to discuss the changing nature and demands of the labor force, and to analyze the role of big business in American society.

On Wednesday evening, March 12, Eugene Kennedy of Loyola University in Chicago will deliver the second formal lecture of the week. Both a psychologist and a theologian, Kennedy has authored such works as A Time for Being Human and Living With Everyday Problems.

Thursday evening of Honors Junior Week will feature a panel of sociologists, ministers, theologians who will discuss the importance of traditional religions in present and future America.

Tentatively scheduled for Friday, the last night of Honors Junior Week, is a series of improvisational theatre act related to the theme of the week and directed by Joan Lynch of Villanova's Vasey Theatre department. All

Draft Protested

By MARK NOLAN

In an attempt to stop draft registration and military escalation, an alliance formed by local peace, leftist and community groups sponsored a March for Peace on Saturday, February 9.

The protestors assembled at City Hall for a midday march to the Federal Building (6th and Market Sts.) and back. Mary Doyle, a spokesperson for the March for Peace Committee, said that approximately one thousand people turned out for the event. While the low temperatures thinned the crowd during the post-march rally, Doyle was pleased at the turnout.

While the organizations ranged from the Concerned Muslims of America to the Revolutionary Workers' Headquarters, they stood united on certain issues. The alliance's platform called for an end to U.S. intervention in the Middle East, the withdrawal of Soviet forces from Afghanistan, self-determination for the peoples of the Middle East and the halt of peacetime draft proceedings.

According to alliance members, the recent developments in the Middle East have succeeded in creating a "snowball effect." The Iranian takeover of the American Embassy in Tehran, coupled with the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, have thrown President Carter on the defensive. The President has responded to his political opponents and is now pushing a bill through Congress instituting peacetime draft registration. Within three months, the possibility of American military action in the Middle East has grown considerably, organizers of the march contend.

Doyle stated that the march was aimed at gaining recognition for the antidraft movement. She expressed faith in the public's ability to influence the country's lawmakers, citing the anti-war movements during the Vietnamese conflict as an example.

As an alternative to military action, the Committee proposed peaceful negotiations with Iranians to free the American hostages. The alliance prefers peaceful relations with oil-producing nations instead of 'saber rattling.' Draft registration during peacetime would, they feel, be one step closer to U.S. military intervention overseas.

and found that 70% of them were in favor of the concert.

Martin agrees with Bean in believing that the concert would raise the awareness of the students to world hunger. The disagreement lies in the amount of profit to be made. Martin would prefer to explore low risk, moderate yield projects involving a large number of students.

Bean said, "It would have been nice for everyone; the problem is that it is expensive and we were not totally convinced that the risk would justify the intent."

American Energy Waste Causes Threat

Are We to Blame?

The topic of discussion these days is the draft registration proposed by President Carter. There have already been marches and mock draft card burnings in many cities around the country. However, the issue here is the underlying factors behind that reinstatement. The reason for this near panic is the latest invasion by the Soviet Union of a neighboring country. With closer study, it is interesting to see why we have threatened to involve the two largest powers on earth in armed conflict.

Anyone who thinks that our interests in Afghanistan are truly humanitarian in nature, should stand to be corrected. We are not preparing to send our young off to war because of the brutal treatment the rebels are receiving at the hands of their oppressors. Instead it is because our precious oil supply is in jeopardy and this would hurt our pocketbooks more acutely. Note that all cries of war came only after the Soviets moved near the border of Iran, close to the bloodline of the Western world. President Carter has reacted angrily, threatening military action if our interests are harmed.

We have brought this upon ourselves. In the last ten years, our dependence on Middle East oil has doubled. At the same time, the exploration and development of domestic sources has dropped off. We have become complacent in buying someone else's oil rather than developing our own supplies. The almighty dollar knows only the present: the quick profit. It doesn't pay any attention to the future and the problems which now face us. Our Alaskan Pipeline is not supplying America. Due to a surplus on the West Coast, the oil is being sold to Japan. Americans refuse to conserve their energy. We continue to waste, thereby putting us deeper in debt with those across the sea. Every time we allow ourselves that "one little trip," we increase the power another nation has over us. It must be stopped.

It is not being suggested that had our energy program been different the Russians would not have invaded Afghanistan and lure the United States into a possible confrontation. It is too well known that they have ambitions which stop nowhere short of world domination. But the possibility can always be raised that we wouldn't be rattling the sabers so loudly now and sending our people to war if it weren't for black gold and the hold we have let it achieve.

Only Then Will Women Serve

Aristophanes' character Lysistrata was one of the first heroines in literature. Unlike her male counterparts in the Greek plays, she was no warrior. Quite the contrary, she led all the women of Athens to organize and end the Peloponnesian war.

In his comic portrayal of the war, Aristophanes saw the potential of women as peace-makers.

There are two facts to remember before discussing men, women and going to war. The first is: in our civilization, men have been, and still are, making the political decisions. The current prime minister of England is the only woman who has ever held such an office in Europe. In our own country, there are no women running for president. No women tapping the deep well of anti-Soviet sentiment which exists here, using this as a means of gaining popular support. How many women serve on the U.S. joint chiefs of staff?

The second fact is that since the beginnings of the modern world, since the beginnings of civilization itself, wherein men have been making the political decisions, men have had constant recourse to war. It would be impossible to enumerate the wars. The warring has never stopped.

So in the United States, a country in which men, for the most part, have made the political decisions, and a country which has constantly had recourse to war, it is asked "Should women be conscribed to help in the effort?"

Women who believe that being drafted along with men will finally be evidence of their equality are foolish. President Carter has even suggested that approval of a draft for women would precipitate passage of the Equal Rights Amendment. Women should realize it will not be the mark of progress, but the ultimate consent, to agree to take part in man's historically consistent means of resolving conflict: violence.

It was not easy for Lysistrata to be a leader. But if the potential could be seen in women in 411 B.C., it is still there now. Not all women are pacifists, as Indira Gandhi proves; and not all men are warring, as Mahatma Gandhi proves. But a crude polling printed in the Villanovan last week showed that 64 percent of those women polled were conscientiously opposed to war, whereas 37 percent of the men were.

But it is no longer enough for women to merely be opposed to war. It is time for them to exert a political force in this nation and in the world. It's wrong to think women shouldn't go to war because they can't carry guns. We say that women shouldn't go to war because men shouldn't either. We say that when women have the decision making power that men do, we will see if the decision is still to go to war, and if it is, then women, too, will go.

ROTC Perspective

Dear Editor:

I am very much disturbed by two articles which appeared in the February 8 issue of The Villanovan. The first was a letter from Dr. Durland condemning the NROTC program on campus, and the second was an article by Brian Buinewicz condemning the draft.

These are classic examples of the lax attitude many Americans now have. In both cases, I feel that both writers were only examining half of a case. Let's examine the other half.

By their own admission, the goal of the Soviet Union is eventual complete global domination. Josef Stalin once boasted that our parents' grandchildren would live under Communism. The USSR is slowly achieving that goal by the slow takeover of defenseless nations during other moments of world crises. I cannot help but believe that the invasion of Afghanistan was a direct result of the Iranian crisis. The Soviets need a port on the Indian Ocean very badly. What better way to improve their chances than by the overthrow of a strategically located nation while our attention was on Iran?

The Soviets preach peace and detente, but every move they make is aimed at gaining the control of vital areas such as the Persian Gulf area. Such control could only be disadvantageous to us, and this is the only advantage the Russians can seek there. Why are they seeking this advantage in "times of peace?"

Another point — the USSR has built up a large and powerful military force. The military analysts say that it is primarily an OFFENSIVE force. If the Russians wanted peace, why would they be building such a force? Isn't it logical that having put that much money and effort into it, their intention is to use it one day?

Life under Soviet control would not be enjoyable. What would it be like initially? We have seen that Soviet troops are quite capable of looting and raping. Just ask any German who were in Eastern Europe in 1945. And how many Americans would be executed right away for being traitorous to the USSR? Is this what these two writers are advocating?

Now I would like to put a question to Mr. Buinewicz. Would you rather fight a war in a distant country within the next few decades? Mr. Buinewicz has taken a very cynical and comical viewpoint of something that is threatening all of our lives. His attitude is, "What can my country do for me?" rather than "What can I do for my country?" If we are to successfully contain Soviet expansionism, preferably by deterrence, we need a strong military now. The draft is a necessary step to that strength. Freedom is never just given to anyone; it has to be earned.

Dr. Durland talks about the Christian perspective. To begin with, a midshipman can be a Christian. I am a living example of that. Secondly, Dr. Durland forgets that under Soviet domination, he would have no freedom to practice Christianity. Nor could he express his opinion as he did last week unless it was the same as the viewpoint of the Soviets.

The primary task of the U.S. Navy is to preserve peace by deterring aggression on the part of our enemies. The ROTC program is a vital part of the Navy. Is Dr. Durland against preserving peace and in favor of living within the orders of a totalitarian state?

As far as the "lethal Villanovans" are concerned, Dr. Durland's comment was a very low shot below the belt. The picture to which he referred was of members of the Whiskey Company performing with their trick rifles on Parents' Weekend. How can he consider that such a talented group — whose primary purpose is to entertain — can be lethal with unloaded rifles?

One final thing. No one forced me to put on a navy uniform. I made that choice, and I have no regrets or second thoughts. I am proud to be a naval officer, and I have every intention of remaining one whether we see war or not. Why? Because I love peace. No one wants war; I certainly don't. But if we want peace, freedom, and security, then we should be prepared to defend it now.

Support the draft. Even if you don't, go if they call you. You would not expect another to fight for you; don't you think you should be ready to reciprocate? Who knows . . . the future of this nation might depend on your decision. Anyone who enjoys the benefits of living here, but is not willing to defend the country that welcomes and protects him should not wait for the draft. They should leave now.

Respectfully,
Andrew A. King

Dear Editor:

After reading Dr. Durland's letter in your February issue, I feel it is time for a Midshipman's perspective. First, lets examine the subject of ROTC at a Catholic University. Villanova is not the only Catholic University that has a ROTC Unit located on its campus. Notre Dame, Holy Cross, Saint Peter's, LaSalle, Marquette and Seton Hall, just to name a few, also support ROTC Units. The presence of these Units does not constitute approval of killing by the administrations of these universities. It is merely an acceptance of the reality that officers in the armed forces should be educated and that a contribution must be made to the national defense.

Saint Augustine and other traditional Christian authorities have accepted the legitimate use of force by civil power, they have also accepted the logical premise that one has to prepare to use this force. Part of this preparation is the education of men and women in the armed forces. This is the task of the NROTC Unit at Villanova.

Further, I would like to address your misrepresentaton of the term "lethal Villanovans." The students that you are slandering with that term are normal students that have acquired a taste for excellence and perfection. This is demonstrated in the execution of a drill routine that includes over 1500 separate moves. This drill routine is no more a demonstration of lethality than the routine of the Villanova Marching Band. I believe that your misrepresentation calls for an apology to the students of "Whiskey Company," the NROTC Drill Team.

Thank you for your time, I hope I have shed some light on the seemingly dark side of this argument.

Respectfully submitted,

Emotional Subject

Dear Sir:

A recent The Villanovan article, treating an emotional subject of national import, offered to us readers opposing viewpoints by two faculty members.

The presenting of opposing views is a sine qua non in our academic world.

The subject matter, for my present purposes, is not under discussion.

One faculty member, an NROTC officer, presented, I felt, the sober succinct and steady opinion of one close to the scene.

The other faculty member, a teacher in the Department of History, offered an opposing view with reasons he considered valid and persuasive. However, since his declared academic field of interest is not political science, or sociology, or psychology, or modern history, I reject his views as identified with the status of an expert.

What is terribly unsettling here is the fact that our students and younger faculty members may have well rejected the officer's statements out-of-hand — and accepted the history teacher's thoughts as the speaking expert even though he did not de facto declare himself as such.

May I, therefore, propose to the editors of The Villanovan the following: if an administrator's or faculty member's interview or statement is published relative to a weighty or controversial subject, the identification of the person as an expert or merely as one offering an opinion should be briefly indicated.

Our students — and I am sure that the editors agree — do not deserve to be influenced by anyone innocently accepted by them as an expert.

No Joy in Decision

To the Editor:

With debate continuing in the world community on President Carter's call to boycott the Summer Games, the Olympics have become a center of attention. Strong opinions exist both for and against a boycott. An article which appeared in the Lake Placid News, recently came to my attention. It outlines the implications of participating or not participating in Moscow so competently that I thought I should bring it to your attention.

Jimmy Carter has faced some of the hardest decisions of his presidency in the past few weeks, and now he is asking for support for another tough decision, boycotting the Summer Games in Moscow.

But Mr. Carter, who is also an idealist at heart, has come up hard against the political realities of 1980, and he finds that his idealism must give way to other considerations.

With the Russians displaying their cynicism and crass disregard for world opinion by marching into Afghanistan, how can we as a nation lend more credence to their system by going to Moscow?

But sports should be above politics, the idealistic will say.

But in the Olympic Games, with all their noble trappings, the national flags flutter above the athletes' heads, the printed results come divided by country, and most of the fans are cheering out of patriotism, and not caring much about individual excellence.

It sometimes seems that instead of bringing the nations of the world closer together, the Olympics have become another reason for heightening their differences. The ideal is there, but it has gotten so lost behind curtains of commercialism and nationalism that it is nearly obscured.

And so the President finds himself faced with another cold war, seeking a lever he can use, short of military action, to "get tough" with the Soviets. Close at hand he finds the Olympics, a likely choice, since a boycott will bring real embarrassment to the Russians, particularly if it is joined by many free world nations. As a political tool, it is probably one of the best ones within his grasp.

Hitler's Games of 1936 are a common example of an Olympics we should have boycotted. Our participation helped to justify the Nazi regime, and added fuel to Germany's furnace, the logic goes.

But we will never know if boycotting those Olympics would have made one whit of difference in the horror of World War II. And the feats of Jesse Owens, one of our true heroes, and other athletes would never have occurred.

And so there is no joy in the decision, however justified. There is only regret that the world has once again reached the stage where such measures are necessary.

There is also sadness, not because the Olympics have lost their innocence, that was lost long ago. It is sadness for the athletes, whose aspirations must yield to a reality that hardly seems to make sense.

And there is fear for the time when the Olympic Games no longer exist to be used as political leverage. What will be the lever then?

Sincerely,
Mike Fagan

On Beaming II

Dear Ed,

We have provided the following in hope that it might end any further controversy concerning beaming.

Spock here.

CAPTAIN'S LOG: STARDATE 0215-80
LT. COMMANDER SPOCK REPORTING

Captain Kirk has been unavoidably detained at a class M university, where a controversy has arisen over the correct manner in which one should be beamed. Personally, I find the whole matter fascinating. The entire sequence of events delineated from an incident in which a "BASIC JASEK" became locked in a closet. The entire matter is most illogical. First of all I would never have said, "Dammit, Kirk, I'm not a homosexual," since such an action could only have been the result of the emotions which plague the human race. A request to Mr. Scott in the manner prescribed would, however, have elicited the response desired. I therefore submitted excerpts from transmissions to and from the U.S.S. ENTERPRISE, for comparison with statements made concerning the controversy which detains the Captain. They are as follows:

Doctor McCoy — "Dammit Jim, I'm a doctor, not a homosexual."

Captain Kirk — "three to beam up . . ."

Mr. Spock — "Spock here."

Rosemont Village

Dear Member of the Villanova Community:

I have placed an ad in this issue to urge you to join me in boycotting the Rosemont Village mall businesses including Gullifty's and C.R. Lange Real Estate. I want you to know the details of a very disburbing incident which causes me to seek your support.

On Monday evening December 17 at approximately 10:30 p.m. I arrived at the door of Gullifty's, having made plans to meet six friends for a late supper. Being informed that the restaurant was closed for an employee Christmas party, I returned to my 1976 Buick Century to find that it would not restart. A couple of people tried to help with a "jump" but we were unable to start the car. By now it was 12:30 a.m., bitter cold, and I decided to wait until the morning when I could get a service truck to aid me. I left a note on the windshield about my mechanical problems. I returned to the parking lot at 10:35 a.m. Tuesday, December 18, with a car repairman only to find my car gone. No one in the Mall, nor even the police, knew that my car had been ordered towed to the Radnor Garage by one Mr. C.R. Lange, co-owner and mall manager. It took me until 2:30 p.m. to track down my car and find the garage. I was forced to pay $40 in order to retrieve my car. Further, my front bumper was damaged and weakened and the fiberglass front panel was cracked.

It is particularly disconcerting to me that if a patron would want to leave his/her car because of an "extra" drink, and pick up the car the next morning, he/she should drive inebriated for fear of a costly towing, is ludicrous and clearly counter to L.C.B. practice and policy. Whatever the reason, it is so very aggravating to find that the mall management and lessees are so insensitive to their business patrons.

When I attempted to logically and rationally discuss this matter with the mall manager, I met with utter indifference and insensitivity. In a two-page letter dated December 20 and hand-delivered to all mall businesses, I detailed the circumstances and promised that if I were not reimbursed my costs, I would urge this boycott. Six weeks have elapsed and neither the mall manager nor any lessee has contacted me. I guess they thought I was bluffing.

The only way left to bring the message home to such individuals is via the cash register. I've already been joined in this boycott by students, faculty, and alumni friends who became personally aware of the frustration and agitation caused me.

I hope that I can count on your support. Let's take our business to local establishments where we are treated as valued customers and not as trespassers. If you need one, I have prepared a list of local establishments which provide services and products as an alternative to those offered in the Rosemont Village Mall. Contact me at 527-2100, ext. 324 or stop by Room 322 Bartley Hall for a copy of this list.

Sincerely yours,

By VINCENT HAUSMANN

Presidential hopeful Senator Edward Kennedy recently lost the Maine primary to President Carter in what some experts believe to be an indication of Kennedy's declining popularity in the eyes of the American public. On Campus asked Villanova students to provide possible reasons for the senator's decline. We also asked the students if they felt the senator would regain his momentum and clinch the democratic nomination and whether they would vote for him — Why or why not?

I feel Kennedy only became popular because of his name and people are tired of that name. He doesn't have as much charisma as his brothers.

No, I don't think he'll regain his popularity because Carter is handling the Iranian and Afghanistan situations well. People are backing Carter.

Mary Jude Fanelli, junior

He's lost popularity because everyone throws up Chappaquidick. I don't think he'll win the nomination but I would vote for him if he did. My main reason being the limited choice of candidates.

Lisa Smith, sophomore

People are reflecting too much on the past. They are thinking too much of other Kennedy family members and Chappaquidick. I don't think he'll regain his popularity. Yes, I would vote for him. I feel the past has nothing to do with his ability to be president.

Colleen Cochran, freshmen

He lost the primary because of Chappaquidick. New publicity hasn't been in his favor and it has hurt him. I don't think he will pick up. I wouldn't vote for him. The Chappaquidick incident and the Harvard scandal has influenced my opinion. I don't think he's capable of running the country.

Sean Daly, freshman

No, he won't regain popularity. I would not vote for him. He doesn't have the qualifications his other family members had. His comments about Iran irritated the situation. Just because he is a Kennedy doesn't mean he can sweep the United States because of past history.

Marissa Amorrisa, sophomore
Theresa Ruddick, sophomore

I think Kennedy is slipping because of Carter's handling of foreign policy. It is more that Carter is in the limelight than Kennedy really slipping.

No, I don't think he'll regain his popularity. Carter is in a favorable position. I wouldn't vote for Kennedy. I'd sooner vote for Reagan.

Regina Maehler, junior

I think that Chappaquidick is the main reason for his decline in popularity. No, I don't think that he'll win the nomination because the public is fully aware of that incident.

I wouldn't vote for him. He seems to be changing his views constantly.

VU Singers to Tour Europe

Berlin, Warsaw Stops Planned

By DREW MERRICK

For the first time in its twenty-six year history, the Villanova Singers will travel to Europe, and embark on a three week tour through Poland and West Germany, spreading their message of brotherhood through song along the way.

The idea for the trip was conceived after a concert featuring the Villanova Singers and the Ladycliff College Chorale of Highland Falls, New York, in April of 1978. The choral directors of these two groups, Mrs. Dorothy Ann Davis and Rev. Denis G. Wilde, O.S.A. discussed the possibilities of a joint venture abroad in 1980. Under the auspices of the Friendship Ambassadors Foundation in New York, a concert tour for both clubs has been planned and will take them to cities of Poland which include Warsaw, Krakow, Lublin, Poznan, and others. After two weeks in Poland, both groups will travel again jointly to Berlin, where they will be guest performers for the U.S. Military in West Berlin and later Heidelberg.

In all, over twenty-five

One of the sights in Poland that the singers will be visiting.

Villanova Singers and twenty Ladycliff Chorale members will be making the journey, of "friendship through music."

Father Wilde sees many positive advantages in Villanova's participation. "For one thing," he says, "this is an opportunity to travel within the lands of peoples of another culture. But, in addition, through the contagious quality of song, friendships spring up and national prejudices melt away. The participants have an opportunity to learn more about other peoples and ourselves through such an interrelationship of music, the universal language." Rev. Wilde believes that the trip will add spirit to the group, and closely knit the members of the Singers.

The cost of the tour is just under $1000 for each student. Many efforts continue to be made to raise money including a successful T.V. raffle, and school contests, including the Valentine's Day "singing telegram" marathon. The Singers gladly accept any contributions made on behalf of their trip. The Villanova Singers meet twice a week in John Barry Hall, Room 204 for rehearsal, and will admit any Villanova male student who has the ability to sing.

The Villanova Singers and Chorales from Ladycliff College will be performing in a number of concerts prior to the date of departure, May 20, 1980. The first concert will be Feb. 17, at St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York. A second performance is scheduled for Washington, D.C. at the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception on April 27. Lastly, a "bon voyage" appearance at the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Concert Hall in New York City on May 19.

Fr. Denis Wilde, choral director of the Villanova Singers.

Performance sites in Europe include courts, cathedrals, music conservatories, etc. Each club has its own carefully selected repertoire of both sacred (Latin and English) and secular music. The combined chorus of both men and women will feature selections such as Mozart's Coronation Mass, Bach's Lobet deh Herran, and the final chorus from Messiah by Handel ("Worthy is the Lamb"). Spirituals and songs from Oklahoma will also be offered. "Brothers in Song, Sing On!"

WKVU Pilot Missing

By CHRIS CHERRY

At 7:45 a.m. on Friday, February 8, 1980, WKVU flying ace Fred Warner was giving his morning traffic report on the "Jeff Page Show." According to Jeff Page, "The report was going on as it normally does, when all of a sudden Fred commented that a plane of WW II vintage was in his airspace. We heard what sounded like gun shots. After that, . . . we lost contact with Fred." Page, Fred's closest friend, was so upset that he was unable to continue with his show, and newsman Jeff Connor took Page's place for the remainder of the show.

Throughout the morning, it looked as though Fred had been shot down. When no report as to what had happened to Fred Warner surfaced, an emotional Jeff Page made a plea with the WKVU listeners, urging them to call in if they had any knowledge as to the whereabouts of Warner. Later that afternoon, Station-Manager Joseph Jasek, along with Page, offered a reward for any information leading to the recovery of Fred Warner or his helicopter.

Throughout the day, WKVU received many phone calls concerning Fred and the reward. Some of the reports are as follows:

1- A spokesperson for SEPTA claimed that as the 8:30 train from Paoli pulled into Penn Center, workmen noticed a helicopter on top of the third car.

2- An anonymous caller claimed that the copter exploded in midair and Fred was hanging from the spires of the chapel.

3- A Mr. Schabbol, claiming to be from Villanova maintenance, said that the copter exploded by the smoke stacks and that Warner fell into one. He claimed that Warner was being served in the "Pit" for dinner. A food service spokesperson denied this rumor.

4- Two calls were received from Harcum Jr. College. One person claimed to be the Assistant Dean of Women, and the other caller said she was just a student. Both had virtually the same story: At about 8:00, a man parachuted on to the Harcum campus. A bunch of girls gathered around him and headed over to the cafeteria, which had to be closed for lunch. This was due to the fact that the girls barricaded themselves in with the man.

5- A Miss Lila Lewis claimed that she had found a New York Yankees baseball cap and a three-piece suit (Fred's usual attire) and that a man was running around stark naked on Roberts Road in Bryn Mawr. She wanted the reward, but was told she would have to wait until this story was confirmed.

6- A man claiming to be from the S.L.A. said that they had taken Warner hostage, and that they were going to call back with their terms.

7- A Mr. Marvin Morrison called from the F.B.I. and said that they had been notified about the case. He continued that agents from the Wilmington and Philadelphia offices were now working on the case.

8- Dr. Kowalski, from the Haverford State Mental Hospital, said that they had brought in a Japanese fighter pilot early this morning. After intense questioning, they found out that the pilot had lived in the woods behind Bryn Mawr for over 35 years. When they brought him in, he kept mumbling something about wanting them to paint a little helicopter on the side of his plane.

9- A man who lives in the area between Villanova and Harcum, stated that at 7:45, a helicopter crashed on his front lawn. He said that the crash woke him and his wife, and it killed their dog. When questioned further, he said that WKVU had better pay for the damages because a man with a baseball cap and a three-piece suit got out and the letters 'K V U" were painted on his back.

Anne Marie Fox, Warner's girlfriend, was informed that her "Freddie" was missing-in-action. She cried.

If anyone has any information about Fred Warner, please report it in the WKVU office.

ASSOCIATE PROFESSOR OF EDUCATION

Unfortunately, few periods of our history have given less attention than the present to our maritime heritage and its construction the nation's development.

Perhaps the fact that the maritime enterprise has been so ingrained into our tradition that the Americans rarely give it a second thought.

Music, art architecture, literature, handicrafts, industry, politics, finance, leisure all carry the mark of the sea. This romantic and colorful heritage, encompassing everything from lighthouses to seascapes and surfing has escaped the reflection of most Americans.

Partial explanation of the absence of knowledge about and respect for the importance of the sea in America's development can be found in U.S. history books. The topic receives little if any attention. Undoubtedly this accounts for the decline of many aspects of nautical life.

One of the first industries of the young nation, shipbuilding has shown a drastic decline since World War II. From a fleet of over 6,000 ships in 1945 to presently just over 500 gives the impression that the country has not only declined as a maritime power but will quickly disappear.

Inability to compete with foreign yards and labor-management difficulties have significantly contributed to this attrition which has not only hit commercial shipbuilding but naval as well. From 1969 to the present, the number of naval vessels has dropped from 976 to just below 500.

Both a cause and effect of this decline has been the decrease in foreign trade carried in U.S. flagships. Presently, the percentage, in tonnage terms, to American foreign trade is below 6 percent!

The immediate past situation in the fishing industry shows almost as dismal a picture. The recent controversy over the 200-mile limit has somewhat enlightened public opinion as to the status of commercial and recreational fishing.

Following World War II, many naval crafts were converted to fishing vessels enabling the U.S. to remain second to Japan in tonnage. Since 1957 our position has declined steadily, placing us sixth presently.

Our naval superiority has greatly contributed to the survival of the nation in times of military crises. Additionally, the frequently ignored peacetime activities of the Navy not only sustain the nation's position as a superpower but have contributed to the improvement of the quality of life of the citizenry.

Consider the following few examples — fiberglass development, nuclear and lasar technology, shark behavior, long-range navigation (Loran-Omega), ship development, weather prediction, undersea habitat research, space exploration, water pollution prevention, evacuation (home and abroad) and disaster relief.

Two observations are apparent — our nation has a true maritime heritage and that tradition shows signs of terminating. However, while the situation clearly seems dismal, some trends portend a better day.

Much as Sputnik catapulted the U.S. into a frantic catch-up in space science, the dramatic growth of Soviet seapower launched a new interst in maritime and naval ship expansion. After years of stagnation, the U.S. commercial shipbuilding industry, stimulated by the Merchant Marine Act of 1970, seems to be entering a new era of re-

Activists Gear Up for Elections

By SHARON WINTERS

Political thought on campus is not merely relegated to curricular enterprises. Some University students have chosen to express their views beyond the classroom. Democratic and Republican organizations exist on campus to serve the interests of group members.

Don Gibson, a law student living in Delurey Hall, is a member of a committee organized to support the Presidential aspirations of Ted Kennedy. The group is comprised of three committees: Executive, Undergraduate and Charter. The Charter Committee is in direct communication with the official Kennedy Campaign Headquarters in Washington D.C. One of the efforts of the committee has been to secure a commitment from Kennedy, contingent on the Senator's primary results, to appear on campus.

The Kennedy group considers their efforts to be three-pronged. They want to encourage political debate on campus; "American college campuses are far too quiet," stated Gibson. The organization also wants to aid in student registration and spread Ted Kennedy's views. Gibson feels that once people find out how forceful Kennedy is on the major issues they will support him.

Another Kennedy group has recently been formed by Drew Merrick from Stanford Hall. Drew feels that raising funds for the Kennedy campaign is of primary importance. The strategy so far has been to personally request monies from students and local businesses. Merrick has contacted the Kennedy organization in Washington for campaign literature, posters and stickers.

The Republicans on campus are a political and social organization. Meetings are held every three weeks, and often a guest speaker attends. The scope of the club includes local and national issues and candidates.

The Republican Club is currently gearing its efforts toward the Bob McMahon State Senatorial campaign. A telephone drive has been implemented to create awareness of McMahon's candidacy. Registered Republicans and Independents are the target of the drive; opinions of the voters are also being sought via telephone.

Joe Quinn, co-chair of the Republicans, views the club's future efforts as polling students' feelings on issues and encouraging student political motivation. The

Whiskey Company Marches On

By CRAIG BARUK

What is the Whiskey Company? No, it's not what you think. The Whiskey Company is a volunteer drill team, a side of the navy which is publicly seen.

Villanova's Whiskey Company see themselves as a quasi fraternity. They consist of 22 people who pay attention to detail. All members in the whiskey platoon are dedicated to precision within their drill skill. The platoon's usual policy is an intense practice schedule, including 8-10 hours every Sunday.

February 12 is a big day for Villanova's Whiskey Company. The company will be hosting a competition drill meet at Valley Forge Military Academy, consisting of participation from other east coast platoons. Among those schools participating will be Ohio, Boston, Notre Dame, Rochester and Seton Hall. Judges come from all areas of the military including the army, navy, green berets and Villanova Whiskey Company alumni. Judging in the competition stresses difficulty of the trick drill and rifle exchanges, precision, military bearing and the use of individual space.

Because of the small amount of money allotted to the Whiskey Company, a raffle will be sponsored in order to help pay for the competition drill meet.

The Whiskey platoon boasts a tremendous record, and they have the trophies to prove it. Since the twenty-first annual competition drill meet is open to the public it might prove to be a worthwhile event to witness.

Frank DiGregorio, leader of Villanova's Whiskey platoon summed up the company well by stating," We try to establish a standard of excellence for others to follow."

Blue, Blue, My World Is Blue

By DEIRDRE FLANAGAN

Roses are red, violets are blue, it's February 15, are you blue too? Did Valentine's Day leave you feeling unloved and disheartened? Are you depressed because Cupid didn't make a personal appearance in your neighborhood? Didn't you know he and his cherub chums were busy posing for Hallmark greeting cards? Oh, you didn't receive too many of those this year? Maybe the bookstore ran out before your friends got a chance to buy yours. Besides, who really wants oversized hearts cluttering their mailbox when you're expecting more important things like phone bills and — care packages? Did mom pull through?

once again and send you your favorite ... vitamins and prunes??? (It's the thought that counts).

Hey, at least you got a Valentine Personal in the Villanovan — too bad they didn't get your initials right though. And just because your seven dozen roses didn't arrive, it doesn't mean you were forgotten — obviously they were delivered to the wrong room, or maybe the FTD man doesn't make house calls.

As for singing telegrams . . . you know the obscene phone-calls you've been getting could top those mushy melodies any day. Who needs sentimental sing-songs when one can have body-language?

Speaking of bodies, it's a good thing you didn't get confectionary edibles this year. Candy is such a frivolous affair of giving one unwanted lbs. and zits. Honestly, who wants chocolate covered calories coming from "the bottom of one's heart" to the outer layer of your hips?

When you come down to it, Valentine's Day is simply a commercial conspiracy against us "broken hearts." So, how can you mend one? Elmer's glue isn't bad for starters . . .

Communicate in the Key of C

By IRENE SHALLOW

Do you have any problems telling people what you really mean? Can't you find the right words? Are you afraid to ask that cute guy in your embryology class to your formal? Shelly Stein of Villanova's Class of 1977 will help you with all your communication problems.

Shelly Stein is the founder and coordinator of the Singing Telegram Company in Overbrook Hills, Pennsylvania. Stein, a former accounting major, landed her career in the Singing Telegram Company purely by a fluke. When a friend had told her that the Western Union had ceased their sing-o-grams, she decided to put her musical ability and natural creativity to work. Stein's gift to write, sing and play the piano enabled her to establish Shelly Stein's sing a message to you.

When an interested client calls Shelly for a singing telegram, Stein makes sure to get to know the receiver of the telegram as much as possible. She asks her client for certain character traits and even a physical description. Stein likes to make her telegrams as personalized as possible because this is very important to her and her company. She then calls, or to accomplish an even more personalized touch, she will show up herself to deliver the telegram. With her white tux and bow tie, Stein easily becomes the hit of any party. She has no reservations as to where she will go or where she will call. Stein has made long distance phone calls and has even travelled to Florida. Any occasion is okay with Shelly; birthdays, invitations, anniversaries, and she has even helped people with their dates. For example, one telegram was for a guy who wanted to ask a girl out. He tried Stein's business and it worked!

Shelly's motto is "for any reason and no reason." She'll write whatever is on your mind and your singing telegram will be as personalized as they come with a lot of thought behind it. So if you have a message to send to someone special, say it with a song. Contact: Shelly Stein's SING A MESSAGE TO YOU, 642-4555.

vitalization and an extensive House of Representatives report has suggested, "the Navy enter the 1980's with an absolute minimum of 600 ships."

These signs stimulate modern optimism; continued progress in information dissemination will result in an expanded appreciation for the nation's maritime tradition and its future.

In order to stimulate further interest in our maritime heritage, I believe there is a clear need for the creation of a Cabinet-level position which would incorporate several of the now-existing areas of maritime affairs under one roof, and that could speak for the maritime industry as one voice.

Ma Bell Has Competition

By SHARON WINTERS

Sprint Limited is a young, growing company specializing in long distance telephone service for individual consumers. The company, a competitor of Bell Telephone, provides its customers with an inexpensive usage rate. Subscribers save approximately fifty percent on toll calls.

The system requires only a code number provided by the company and a Touch-Tone telephone; a Touch-Tone adaptor can be obtained readily and inexpensively for rotary telephones. The user calls Sprint, waits for a dial tone, punches the code and finally dials the long distance number. This same procedure can be used at home, in a telephone booth or in someone else's house eliminating expensive credit card and operator-assisted calls.

Sprint's billing varies from its competitor, Bell. Instead of charging for full minutes, Sprint bills in six-second increments. Rather than calling at person-to-person rates, a Sprint customer can call direct and risk a nominal one-tenth of a minute charge.

In 1979, Sprint was spawned as a result of SPCommunications realization that their business-oriented service was not utilizing the system sufficiently during standard non-business hours. Sprint was opened to individuals from 5:00 p.m. to 8:00 a.m, on weekdays and from 5:00 p.m. Friday to 8:00 a.m. Monday over the weekend.

Irvin G. Schorsch, a 1977 Villanova graduate with honors, is currently employed by SPCommunications as a sales representative and communications consultant. He recounted that the Supreme Court ruled in favor of his company's type of service in a suit between AT&T and OCC (Other Common Carriers). SPC is "fully legal and FCC approved" stated Schorsch.

Student Government Association

Budget Rally Planned

February 14, 1974 is a day that is unfamiliar to most students. It was a day in which a group of students stood up for what they believed in and paid severe consequences for. It was a day the voice of the student was heard by every faction of this University. It was the day Tolentine Hall was taken over by students to exhibit their frustrations towards the pre-historic visitation policy in effect at the time. It was not the action but the cause which lead these students to fight for their belief.

Today, we still face many of the same problems that confronted those students in Tolentine Hall in 1974. Today there are students who are willing to stand up and face the consequences for the rights of every student. Are you willing to become one of these students?

On February 21, 1980, the student caucus and Student Government Association will sponsor a rally to bring to the student's attention the proposed increases in this year's budget. There will be student and faculty speakers on hand to inform the students why a 9.4% or $350.00 increase in tuition is not desirable. With student tuition and related fees providing 95-97% of the Budget for a number of years it is once again time the students voice is HEARD!

Mark Zappy — Arts Senator

Why Attend?

Do you often get the opinion that Villanova University is totally unattentive to your needs?

Are you upset with the fact that your educational costs are constantly rising and you fail to read any additional return on your investment?

Does the fact that the student body provides 97% of Villanova's operating revenue annoy you?

If you answer "NO" to any of the above questions, go back into your hole and vegetate. If you answer "YES", show your concern and participate.

Committee Progress Report

As reported in last week's Villanovan, the formation of a "Senior Week" committee has been implemented. The first organizational meeting of this committee was held on Thursday, February 14th in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

A few of the topics discussed were the programming of the major events to be held during the week before commencement exercises, housing accommodations for the senior residents, and alternative meal plan preparations for this week.

All Interested Seniors are asked to submit their suggestions to either Vickie Colonna or Tony Cofone in room 204 Dougherty Hall, extension 539.

Vickie Colonna
Student Body Vice President

Arts & Sciences Council

Last Friday, the newly formed Arts and Sciences Student Council held its first event of the semester: a social among faculty chairmen and student representatives. The informal gathering was designed to allow for free discussion between the participants to air their views regarding the unique situations faced by students in the College of Arts and Sciences.

Significant problems, such as career and academic advisement, were pondered; suggestions for improvements were made. In the area of academic advisement, a forum to aid freshmen and sophomores in choosing their majors was recommended and will be held on Tuesday, February 19th in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall from 11:30 a.m. until 2:00 p.m.

The Council and Dean O'Malley feel confident that student input is a key to problem recognition and remedy in the College of Arts and Sciences. Contact can be made with the Council through department representatives.

Nothing to Do?

Walking around the Villanova campus, you might tend to think that it is a bit dead. There is nothing to do. The problem is that you either haven't looked hard enough, or don't know where to look. Here are some suggestions.

First of all, there are parties. Yes Virginia, the party life still exists at Villanova. It exists though, in an altered state. There are no alcoholic beverages served at these parties. That doesn't mean you can't have a good time. You don't need it to have a good time with good people.

For the athletically inclined there are places you can put this ability to good use. There are tennis courts at St. Mary's and behind Kennedy Hall. You don't have to look like Bjorn Borg or Martina Navratilova to use them. There are also basketball courts and gymnasiums all over campus. Don't forget the swimming pool in the field house. For Racquetball fantics there is an outdoor court behind Kennedy Hall.

The Villanova Union sponsors movies and special events on campus. These are advertised all over campus and also in the Villanovan. They are always a lot of fun to watch and participate in.

For those of you that want to get in clubs and organizations, there are many way to get started. If you want to get involved with something relative to your major, your department head can steer you in the right direction. The Villanovan is also another source. The F.Y.I. section always had announcements pertaining to club activities. You can also stop up in the student activities office for information. They will be glad to steer you in the right direction.

If you just feel like kicking off you shoes, laying back, and listening to a good album, try the audio-visual room in the basement of the library. All you need to pick from there large selection is your i.d. card.

Next time you feel bored, try using these facilities. You are, after all, paying for them.

Housing Lottery

It is that time of year again when campus residency is left to the fate of the numbers game! Due to the limited number of dorms at Villanova, residents who wish to remain on campus must draw in the lottery to determine eligibility. For women, the first phase of this process will begin next week.

Every woman who wishes to remain on campus must pick a number in the first round of the lottery in order of class and alphabet. This number will determine further eligibility. In the second phase, which begins the week of the 24th, those who picked a number below the cutoff point — determined by the number of entrants in the first round and posted by the Dean — can choose a room in order of class and lottery number.

Please read all of the information provided by the Dean of Women before going to draw in the lottery. If you still have questions ask your RA. The housing lottery for male residents will take place after Spring Break.

Good luck!

Resident Services

It has come to the attention of this organization that quality and service in the area of resident dining facilities is proving inadequate. It has become increasingly apparent that utensils are haphazardly cleaned, glasses are sometimes filmy, and food is of grade 'C' quality. As a result, food is blatantly wasted and digested in the cavities of garbage disposals rather than the cavities of our stomachs. We recognize that the discarding of food is often due to immature fancies rather than discretionary taste but overall we must agree with the decaying quality of the University's Food Services.

We are uncertain of the cognizance of Food Services as to these matters, and it is therefore necessary for an open discussion to resolve these issues.

Prep vs Disco: The Battle Rages On

By BARBARA ANNE HIGGINS

There once was a fresh named Hicks, who found prep and disco don't mix,
Sassoon jeans, red rouge, and docksider shoes
just got her expelled from both cliques.

(This is a true story, about a certain young freshman who underwent a severe identity crisis upon entering Villanova last semester. Only the names have been changed to protect the innocent).

Molly Hicks was your typical freshman. She was an attractive, personable young lady who always dreamed of that day when she would finally step foot in the rapturous world of college life. She had finally arrived. Her first few days were spent in utter effervescence, as she toured the university, settled into her room at Sheehan Hall, and exchanged credentials with her newly-found friends.

Upon entering the infamous Day Hop for the first time, she felt keenly aware of the stares she was receiving. "It's your clothes, Molly," whispered her roommate gently, "You need to change your style. You're in college now, sweety, so dress the part and you'll fit in just fine." Molly knew she was right. Her blue knit pants may have been okay for Sagaway High, but now she was in college, and she must update her wardrobe in order to be accepted. No one noticed the shades of mortification come across her face as she slithered out of the cafeteria.

The next day she humbly asked her roommate to help her choose the proper campus costume. A day-long shopping spree down Lancaster Pike left her drained, both physically and financially. But she was ready. Prepped to the max.

As she triumphantly threw herself into the whirling currents of the Mainline social scene in the next couple weeks, a feeling of security comforted and reassured her. Her glowing countenance almost managed to outshine her fluorescent garb.

But soon the frat parties and corner taverns began to bore her. She was restless and itchy for a more exhilerating atmosphere.

Later that week she overheard a few girls talking about a new club down in Philly. How exciting she thought, as she envisioned the flashing lights, pulsating music and rhythmic gyration of the dance floor. After hours of coaxing, Molly finally convinced her roomate to join her in a trip down to the "Library."

The morning after was painful . . . Her head was pounding, her stomach still revolting against the seven whiskey sours she consumed, and her ego was shattered. It was a humiliating experience. She had dressed in her best khakis, her favorite initial sweater and the beautiful tweed blazer she had just purchased, only to be sneered and scoffed at by the satin-sassy clientele at the disco. Again, it was her clothes that had alienated her.

Torn between the two havens of acceptance, her self-image began

Schorsch feels that his company has "much potential for growth." He sought employment with SPC over a year ago because he felt that the communications network was an "exciting, innovative concept." Interested students are welcome to call Irvin Schorsch personally for further information at 568-4338.

SPCommunications, a division of Southern Pacific, orginally began their network as a private line between company divisions in 1970. They have expanded their services to cover 70 major metropolitan areas as well as the suburban areas surrounding the cities for a 30 to 40 mile radius. The company utilizes microwave, cable and satellite as transmitters in their operations. They currently have over $200 million invested in equipment. SPC services 40,000 customers including Provident Mutual Life Insurance, Morris-Feder Dental Laboratories and the University of Pennsylvania. Customers range from individuals who spent as little as $20 a month on long distance calls with Bell to businesses who spent over $100,000.

to splinter. She wanted the best of both worlds; why couldn't she have them?

She began to lead a double life. At night she would squeeze into her designer pants and satin blouses, painted her face with colors of proud defiance and sneak downtown for a dose of disco. During the day she remained quietly reserved and conservatively dressed in cords and docksiders.

But she knew it wouldn't last; a confrontation of both worlds was inevitable.

It came one afternoon while she was lounging in the A.V. room, secretly listening to Donna Summers crooning through the earphones. A young man who she had met at Winston's approached her. As he glanced down at the turntable a look of repulsion crept over his face. "Disco!," he spat out vehemently, "And I thought you were okay, Molly." He turned on his heels and left her, wallowing in humility. He would tell everyone, she was ruined. What would she do?

She gathered up her things quickly and retreated to her room. On the way, she passed by some girls she had seen at fraternities the night before. "Hey Molly, going sailing in the dark or something? They won't need any dock lights with you on the deck." It was the final blow. Their vicious giggles boomeranged in her brain. As she stumbled through the quad, she heard Pure Prairie League blasting from a Sullivan stereo, intermingled with the screeching taunts of a disco melody being blared from a sound system in Sheehan. She was caught in a revoltion of music and culture which permeated the air surrounding her and pierced her identity. She collapsed.

club plans to begin their student-oriented efforts on April 22, the state primary date.

As a group, the Republicans have not yet endorsed a Presidential candidate. Members of the club are free to individually support their own choices for the highly publicized battle for the Republican nomination. Reagan would be the best choice as the next President and has extended an invitation to the candidate to come to Villanova.

A committee for Democratic Club once existed on campus; however, this organization is now defunct.

The various political groups at the University seem to consider involvement an important facet of life. They view the future involvement of others in politics as equally important and desirable. This year, the Presidential race should inspire student concern.

Ask Harvey

Q. How often should I replace the cartridge stylus on my turntable?

A. Certainly this depends on individual usage. However, we recommend changing stylii every 100 hours of record play. The cost of packaging the total cartridge is almost totally based on the stylus. It's usually as economical to purchase an entire cartridge. Picking a better cartridge can give you exceptional fidelity and incredible channel separation.

Harvey's Warehouse started back in 1974 in a metal quonset hut in Richmond, Virginia, previously used to store tires! Talk about "bare bones"! Anyone who came in just knew we had the lowest prices on stereo in Richmond. Our philosophy has never changed from those days. Each of our 43 stores embodies that same "no-frills, low overhead" credo that enables us to keep our prices low. On top of that, we felt giving a free five-year guarantee on all home stereo was just the kind of "insurance" the stereo buyer really wants. Especially if it's free. Quite simply, that's the Harvey's Warehouse story.

I Have Lusted In My Heart

By VICKY PARENTE

American Gigolo, a film by Paul Shrader, reveals to its audience that men as well as women can be members in good standing of the world's oldest profession. However, what promises to be an intriguing and insightful look into the world of male prostitution slowly deteriorates into a sub-par murder mystery. What a disappointment for all the rabid females who came to the theatre in search of celluloid stimulation.

The American gigolo is Julian Kay. Julian lives in a world of opulence, decadence, fast cars and faster women. (yawn!) He is a man who has perfected his ability to give physical love, yet is incapable of accepting emotional love — that is, until he meets Michelle Stratton, the lonely and frustrated wife of a U.S. senator who is also, of course, a jealous husband. However, tragedy intrudes on this tender interlude when Julian is framed for the murder of one of his "clients." The duration of the film revolves around Julian's efforts to clear himself of the crime and find the real murderer.

If you think this sounds like a story line from All My Children, you're close. This flick is strictly soap opera stuff, folks. The credits inform the audience that the film was written by director Paul Shrader, but halfway through the movie, one begins to wonder if Paul Shrader isn't a pseudonym for Agnes Nixon. Incidentally, the dialogue is as inane as the plot.

If there is one good reason to see this movie — and there is only one — it is to see Richard Gere, who plays Julian. You will have to excuse my feminine bias, but — he is tremendous. On the level, ladies, he alone is worth the $3.75 admission price. Gere is magnetic, dynamic and sexy, very sexy. I mean this man is so alluring that women were leaving the theatre and forgetting to take their boyfriends and husbands with them. And his performance is unquestionably the best in the movie. We feel sorry for Gere, not because he is being framed, but rather because he is doing his best to salvage this miserable film.

The last sixty minutes of the movie drag on interminably; however, as long as Gere is on the screen I'm sure that most women will be willing to sit there forever. I'm sorry to say that the men in the audience are not as fortunate since their only relief from boredom is Lauren Hutton and she is incredibly boring herself. Nina Van Pallandt and Bill Duke turn in truly forgettable performances as Julian's pimps. Hector Elizondo, on the other hand, is notable as the sleazy L.A. detective.

But perhaps I am being too hard on this film — it does have some highlights. For instance, the background music is excellent, especially "Blondie's rendition of the theme song entitled "Call Me" (not the old standard that some of you may be thinking of). Also, Richard Gere's wardrobe of Giorgio Armani suits is gorgeous, but let's remember that this man could wear a Hefty trash bag and still look appealing!

On a more serious note, director of photography John Bailey and visual consultant Ferdinando Scarfiotti should be commended for some truly spectacular photography. There are some breath-taking panoramas of Los Angeles at dusk; and their use of stop-action photography during the more "romantic" moments of the film add a haunting, dreamlike quality to the sequence. Film analysts will appreciate Julian's preoccupation with the many picture frames scattered about the floor and walls of his apartment, obviously foreshadowing things to come.

The ad for American Gigolo asks the question, "Is giving pleasure a crime?" If it is Richard Gere giving the pleasure I feel most women would look upon it as more of a public service. If there is a criminal here it is Paul Shrader. The man should be locked up for making this movie.

American Gigolo — a classic man, a mediocre movie.

Sellers Shines in "Being There"

By MARY JANE GAVENDA

Being There is an offbeat, unusual comedy about the chance happenings of a naive, T.V.-addicted gardener (symbolically named Chance) who can neither read nor write, yet who suddenly finds himself in the upper echelon of Washington society.

This may sound like an improbable tale — and it is, but director Hal Ashby — who directed Coming Home) with the help of the enormously talented Peter Sellers (who plays Chance) turns the comic fable into a highly entertaining look at human nature.

The tale starts with a day in the life of Chance the gardener. Working for a wealthy man all his life, Chance has done nothing but work in his neat garden, and indulge in his one and only pastime — watching television. Being an illiterate and never having seen the outside world, he is content to imitate the actions of the video images.

His stable life is suddenly disrupted when his employer dies and Chance is evicted from the house. Stepping outside for the first time, Chance wanders aimlessly through the contrasting slum life of Washington, D.C., when accidentally he is hit in the leg by a limousine backing into a parking space. The wealthy occupant of the limousine (Shirley MacLaine) ever-so apologetic, invites him back to her huge mansion where she resides with her dying, wealthy financier-husband (portrayed by Melvyn Douglas). The couple are so taken by Chance that they let him stay on at the house.

It is at this point that Chance's innocence and simple-mindedness are mistaken for some sort of genius which escalates him into higher social positions, until ultimately he is advising the President of the United States on economic growth by comparing it to a garden, and appearing on a T.V. talk show.

Although Chance never claims to be more than he is, his totally bland and malleable personality makes him anything anyone wants him to be. People find him refreshingly honest instead of naive, humorous and easy to get along with instead of realizing he is just confirming their own views. His own limited, simplistic view of life is his key to success, and the ultimate irony comes when he is entrusted with an entire business empire and is even considered to run for President!

The movie is backed by a fine supporting cast, but it's Seller's show all the way — even though he hardly utters a word. The role is a

"Last Married Couple" Funny but Shallow

By MARK LAPADULA

The Last Married Couple in America could be classified as a tame comedy. Its several humorous moments, spaced evenly throughout, allow the film little time to drag. The casting of George Segal and Natalie Wood in the starring roles is very intriguing. They find themselves the only couple still together as all their close friends, whom they thought were happily married, get either separated or divorced. Neither Segal nor Wood's parts call upon them to utilize their acting abilities to any great extreme; however, their performances clearly measure up to the expectations of John Herman Shanes' script.

The Last Married Couple in America is directed by Gilbert Cates. If it has one severe flaw, it is surely that the scenes leading up to the climax of the film are too predictable. The audience is ahead of the action before it takes place on the screen.

Segal and Wood are backed up by Richard Benjamin, Valerie Harper, and Dom DeLuise — all of whom pose threats to the success of their marriage.

Maureen McGovern sings "We Could Have It All." It is quite apparent that few in the movie know what that means, but after much experimentation, some conclusions are reached. The rest of the music is handled by Charles Fox.

All in all on an entertainment level, many will find The Last Married Couple in America enjoyable. But that is about the extent of its range. If you as a movie-goer demand more then that from the films you see, you had better take your four dollars somewhere else.

Kanpai Steakhouse

By JEANNE SALVATORE

Looking for an interesting alternative to the mundane routine of college life? Try an evening in Philadelphia's Society Hill at Kanpai Japanese Steak House. It is located in the quaint, restored area of New Market at Head House Square. The physical structure of the building is extremely enticing. Although the building is modern, it captures the style and grace of the Japanese.

Before dinner, many people like to relax in the restaurant's panaramic cocktail lounge. The lounge gives a wonderful view of Head House Square, but the drinks are expensive, mediocre and two to three dollars.

For dinner, each person is seated at a wooden, rectangular table with a huge metal sheet, in the middle, used for the preparation and cooking of the meal. The tables are built for 10 people, so any party less than that will be seated with other small groups. Yet it can be fun to mingle with the other people, and see the various dishes they ordered.

The meal begins with Japanese onion soup, a clear broth decorated with fresh scallions and onions. Everyone is served a small, green salad with an unusual, but delicious onion dressing.

For the main entree, you can pick from a variety of tempora, chicken, steak, shrimp or lobster. Each of these entrees is cooked, right at your table, by a Japanese chef. Every main entree is accompanied by stir fried shrimp, stir fried onions and zucchini, beansprouts, a bowl of white rice and a cup of green Japanese tea. Everyone receives two cold sauces of ginger and onion. Personally, I loved the onion sauce, yet found the ginger a little too sweet for my taste. Everyone uses chop sticks and most people found it entertaining to eat with them. Dessert consisted of sherbert or ice cream.

I recommend this restaurant, if you are looking for a fun and unique eating experience rather than a great meal. The atmosphere is comfortable and the service is quite good. The food is fresh and probably quite healthy, yet this type of cuisine seemed to be pretty bland.

Prices range from $2.25 to $6.95 for lunch and $6.95 to $13.95 for dinner. For reservations and information call Kanpai Japanese Steak House at 925-1532.

Vasey Excels in 'Glass Menagerie'

By ROBERT E. WILKINSON

Tennessee Williams' play The Glass Menagerie, sensitively performed by the Villanova Theatre Department, is a memory play in which Tom Wingfield tries to forget his mother and sister by running away from the responsibility that they represent, only to find their ghosts, and particularly that of his sister Laura, haunting him wherever he goes.

Set in St. Louis in the '30s, the play covers about three weeks in the life of the Wingfield family deserted years ago by a father "who fell in love with long distances." Tom, the son, longs to follow in his path but not, as his mother demands, before he finds a husband for his sister, a shy, plain young woman with a limp, whom they love and protect too much. Torn between his revulsion for his mother's scheme for entrapment and the desire to see his sister secure, Tom brings home for dinner a fellow worker from the warehouse, a Gentleman Caller, whom by coincidence Laura had had a crush on in high school. The evening is a fiasco. Tom, desperate and ashamed, bolts for the sea, abandoning his sister and mother to whatever fate comes along. But their images follow wherever he goes.

Brilliantly played by Lorrain Spritzer as Amanda, by Jeffrey Musmanno as Tom, and by Terri Fimiano as Laura, The Glass Menagerie, even after the many years of professional and amateur productions, comes alive on the set designed by David Hearn and his associates. Williams' play has a timelessness about it that poignantly shines in all its fragility. Miss Spritzer as Amanda — wistful, foolish, but still undaunted; Miss Fimiano as Laura — dowdy, backward, but still undismayed; Mr. Musmanno as Tom — caged, rebellious, but still unrepentant, make the most of this insubstantial world of the murmurous South, their performances not too loud, not too muted.

In some ways the most difficult role in the play is that of the Gentleman Caller, the stranger on whom so many hopes are pinned. He has to blend, to merge, with exactly the right amount of delicacy to slip unobtrusively into this home. John Corrozza plays the part beautifully. Overplayed, the part would be out of focus; underplayed, it would be overshadowed. A splendid performance, Mr. Corrozza! In the brief time he is on stage, he makes his presence felt.

With The Glass Menagerie the Vasey Theatre players continue their distinguished work. We are fortunate to have in this area such a fine theater group of the caliber of our Graduate Theatre Department.

Tis the Season for Love

By NANCY ROONEY

With candy hearts, flowers, and Cupid's arrows fresh in our minds, the Philadelphia Drama Guild could not have chosen a better season to stage their newest production, Twelfth Night, a romantic comedy by William Shakespeare.

Under the direction of Michael Montel, this offering is especially well-acted, spirited, and enjoyable. The production, performed upon a stage structured after the one used at the Globe Theater, and recited with a well-practiced Shakesperean dialect, remains faithful to its origin and reinforces the timelessness of the work. It chronicles the twisting, turoul it, and tumultuous course of ron tic love.

Twelfth Night opens with a love-sick Duke Orsino (played by Nicholas Pennell) bemoaning the anguish of unrequited love. The object of his affection, the Countess Olivia (Valerie von Volz), in turn, is in love with the Count's messenger. The plot is further complicated since the messenger is actually a young maid only disguised as a page to win the Count who she loves.

Love needs be more strategic than romantic to resolve these tangled matches. All the traditional romantic ploys — setups to provoke jealousy, battles to prove valour, and eloquent speeches to sway emotions — are employed.

Though love may be manipulated, it can never be subordinated. The character Malvolio (Paxton Whitehead), a steward deceptively led to believe that the Countess loves him, stands as the most obvious manifestation of the power of love. His dour, timid, and proper character is radically transformed into a smiling, colorful, and assertive figure as a concession to the desires of his love. In his explanation of his untypical behavior, Malvolio summarizes the motivation for the entire play: "For my lady loves me."

The theme of this work occasions foolishness and frivolity and the play never fails to deliver it. Beneath the many laughs, however, lurk twinges of recognition and haunting memories of previous romances on the part of the viewer. Several especially touching scenes enhanced by the performance of beautiful lyrical music leave the audience as starry-eyed as the actors.

Twelfth Night runs through March 2 at the Walnut Street Theatre with performances at 8 p.m. Student discount tickets are available at the door for $3.50 until 10 minutes before curtain time.

The Babys

Union Jacks

By MICHAEL BRODE

Sometimes you can tell when a band has "arrived" by the way its record company has packaged the product. In case of The Babys Union Jacks, however, the music is ample testimony to the group's development. The packaging is merely a means to hype a new image for a band which has yet to match its critical acceptance with substantial commercial popularity.

You see, The Babys broke onto the contemporary rock scene in 1979 with a highly-polished and promising album. They were introduced/promoted to the American music public as four rather ordinary Anglo lads who could kick it out with energy and style. Four years and three albums later, The Babys have yet to establish their niche in the complex framework of rock 'n roll's hierarchy. They are a band which continues to impress on vinyl but remains without a significant commercial identity.

And so Chrysalis Records has released Union Jacks, the fourth and finest Babys album to date, by presenting the boys on the album as angry punks replete with menacing scowls and leather garb. This facade is obviously an attempt by the record company to cash in on the present new wave boom. However, the band's apparent change of attitude is not at all consistent with the state of their sound. Your ey. may tell you that The Babys have made a drastic musical transition, but your ears will disagree.

So what does all this jibberish imply? Well first, The Babys are a damn good rock band, one which seems quite capable of using their art form, rather than an artificial image, as a vehicle to popularity. Second, how can these record companies be so shortsighted? You can't expect meaningful identities to be established by basing yours on a fashionable stance which is bound to eventually contradict your music. Third, . . . ah, forget it. Let's talk about the record.

Union Jacks is a fine album, showcasing The Babys refreshing brand of rock 'n roll, with touches of orchestration, synthesized interludes and powerful yet melodic vocals. Lead singer John Waite stands out as usual, providing the band's heart and soul in much the same way as Lou Gramm does with Foreigner. Newcomers Jonathan Cain (keyboards) and

Concerts You'll Never Hear

Stranger Than Truth Dept.

By JOHN T. COOK

Playing before a packed house at Atlantic City's hottest new rock club, My Mother's Mustache, the punk rock super group The Visual Cortex put on a show to remember.

The crowd went wild as the house lights dimmed and Peter Precious, the Cortex's albino lead singer came out on stage. Always the showman, Precious was wearing a studded dog collar and a pink chiffon leotard top as he sat down to play the steel tubes he has made so famous. He sang the opening song of the evening, "Won't You Share a Safety Pin With Me," a cappella and without accompaniment. As the rest of the group stumbled on stage Precious nearly brought the roof down as he ripped the silver safety pin from his own left cheek and offered it to the bass guitarist Roberta Guario.

Roberta, a midget, and Leroy captured the audience and there wasn't a dry eye in the place as they sang, "The abusable bear, You can tear out his hair, You can rip out his heart, You can kick him apart."

While the stage crew mopped up the lambs blood and chicken entrails Leroy, one of the few blacks in Punk and the only drummer compared regularly to the immortal Eric Clapton delighted the crowd with a 12 minute solo.

Following a brief intermission the band returned to do the poignant and soul searing "Love in the VD Clinic." Precious did the autobiographical "It's Methadone For Me." Then, in a performance reminiscent of Hendrix at the Monterey Pop Festival, Precious lit his tubes on fire as the crowd went wild.

As the paramedics worked on a number of people in the first several rows the group finished their set with an equally searing version of a new song entitled "Forget the Pill, We'll Use the Cuisinart." Peter shouted out, "This one's for you" and walked off the stage.

As the house lights came up the crowd went wild. They knew the band couldn't leave without doing their AmericanTop 40 hit, "You've Blackened My Blue Eyes For The Last Time." A demonstrative crowd, they lit the curtains on fire and one tall, grey haired young man was seen calmly shooting out the lights.

After about 10 more minutes of bedlam several of the larger members of the audience ran backstage and dragged Precious, kicking and screaming, back on stage. Realizing that they were hopelessly outnumbered the band came back on stage and, after propping up the wheezing, hemorrhaging Precious, played my favorite, "Hermaphroditic Hitman." This seemed to anesthetize the audience and the band made their escape through a rear window.

Ricky Phillips (bass) both contribute significantly, and Wally Stocker (guitar) and Tony Brock (percussion) remain extremely potent studio musicians.

The majestic "Back On My Feet Again", "Anytime" and the driving "Midnight Rendezvous" appear to be the album's most likely hit-bound candidates. Other impressive tracks include "Jesus Are You There?", an infectious hymn-rocker, "Turn Around in Tokyo," a no-frills power rocker with Cain on lead vocals, and "True Love, True Confessions", a rousing number which shifts gears with authority and style.

The Babys is a band with character. They are consistently improving their music, introducing effective synthesizer melodies, refining their orchestral sound and broadening their musical horizons. By gradually exploring new musical areas while maintaining the basis of their distinctive sound, The Babys seem destined to succeed in establishing themselves as a band which can stand on their won laurels. But don't expect their record company to believe it.

radical departure from the Clousseau character, who was known for his slapstick comedy and strange dialect. Here, Sellers goes through the movie with a marvelously understated, blank stare as if he was eternally looking at a T.V. test pattern.

Being There is one of the movies to see this winter. Its odd humor and subtle characterization make this an intriguing film for all to enjoy. Don't miss it!

This upcoming Wednesday nite, a fine acoustic rock band will be performing at the completely refurnished Main Point. Beginning at 8 p.m., Daniels, Mason and Gallagher will take the stage with their own musical compositions. The band is a unique blend of acoustic guitars, upright bass, drums, and 3 part harmonies. Having played at Villanova on numerous occasions, they have gathered a following which seems to grow with every performance. Don't miss your chance to catch a band that will definitely be going places this February 20 at the Main Point. Tickets are now available at the C.I.C. and at the door. Icecats Split Pair

By BOB CONWAY

The Villanova Icecats displayed two fine qualities last weekend. With scheduled back-to-back games against Penn State and Drexel, the team proved it had enough endurance to play well in both contests. Secondly, after suffering an emotional loss to Penn State, the team showed the determination that all good teams must have by rebounding from a tough loss as they defeated Drexel 5-4.

Last Saturday the Icecats travelled to Mechanicsburg to take on Penn State. Even though this game did not include a Dick Harter-versus-Rollie Massimino confrontation to liven up the contest, it was exciting nonetheless.

Penn State jumped out to an early lead and appeared to be breezing along. Going into the third period, Villanova was trailing 3-1. The lone Villanova goal was tallied by Chris Mancuso. During the third period, though, things changed. The Icecats, who were playing hard all night long, finally were rewarded. John Lammers and Tom Curran each turned the red light on to tie the game at three goals each.

Penn State regrouped after the score was tied and they were not to be denied as they notched one last goal, despite the fine goaltending by Villanova's Tom Margiotti.

The next afternoon's outcome was much more enjoyable. Not to infer that the game was an easy victory, but rather, a see-saw battle all the way which saw the Icecats prevail, 5-4. It was a much deserved win for Coach Skip Probst and his squad.

Steve Carr played a superb game as he came up with the hat trick. Tom Curran and Chris Mancuso each notched a goal, just as they had done the previous night.

The Goal scorers were not the only ones who played well over the weekend. Jim Femia, Paul LaFond and Pat Fitzgerald played sound games.

The next home game is against Wagner, to be played February 23rd.

can receive a $100 monthly subsistance, have their books provided for, and go on a cruise on a Navy vessel for four to six weeks during the summer.

Summers said that the Navy spends $32,668 to send a scholarship student through four years at Villanova. This figure includes the cost of tuition, fees, books, subsistance, uniforms, cruises, and travel expenses.

Corporations actively recruit young naval officers for jobs in the civilian world. The companies look for the Navy officer because he or she is educated and has management experience, the colonel said.

Wildcats Whip Mount St. Mary's

Ortlip Powers 25 Points and 20 Rebounds

By SUSIE STROUD

Mount St. Mary's women's basketball coach Freddie Carter, a former Philadelphia 76er, pleaded with his players, "Don't let her get the ball inside!" But it was impossible for the Mountaineers (14-8) to keep the ball from Villanova's sophomore center Lisa Ortlip, who powered to the hoop for 25 points to lead the Wildcats (18-1) past host St. Mary's 67-56 on Tuesday. Ortlip aided her squad to two and three shots per possession, while usually allowing the Mountaineers only one attempt per trip down the court by grabbing 20 rebounds and blocking three shots.

Freshman Kathie Beisel, who is largely responsible for the hoopster's catapult into national prominence with a 17th ranking in its first year in Division I, continued to "do it all," according to Head Coach Harry Perretta. "She's strong enough to go the whole 40 minutes — she has to," boasted Perretta. Beisel's 19 points, 16 rebounds, six assists and non-stop hustle devastated the Mount St. Mary's game plan.

With 9:38 remaining in the game the Mountaineers were within striking distance, 46-39, when Beisel took charge as quarterback under the Mount St. Mary's basket. The St. Hubert's graduate uncorked three full-court bombs to Mary Beth Gibson for six points in two layups and two foul shots to put the Wildcats up 52-39.

Typifying the determination which has brought this team well-deserved recognition, Villanova's current career scoring leader, Karen Hiznay, dove across mid-court with 1:20 left, shoved the ball to Kathie Beisel, who rifled it back to Hiznay on the baseline for a stunning 20-foot swish to put the contest out of reach, 62-52.

The Wildcats are headed west for a five-day road trip against Edinboro State on Thursday, Pittsburgh on Saturday and West Virginia on Sunday.

Women Crush Immaculata

By T.J. FITZPATRICK

The sign of a truly great team is one which is able to bounce back from adversity. The Wildcats did just that with a convincing 64-48 victory over Immaculata College, Thursday night at the Field House.

They showed little side effect from their heartbreaking loss to Cheyney State the previous night, by jumping to a quick 4-0 lead just seconds into the game. "The girls' attitude (in the locker room) before game time was good," commented Head Coach Harry Parretta. "They knew they had to come back strong," he added.

The Wildcats did just that by employing a trapping full-court press, causing numerous Immaculata turnovers in the first half. That press, coupled with a stingy zone defense, prevented the Macs from scoring their first basket until well over five minutes had elapsed. By that time, Villanova had already established the tempo of the game. Relying on Kathie Beisel's fine outside shooting and the tenacious rebounding of Stephanie Vanderslice, the Wildcats built a 15-6 lead with 8:29 left in the first half.

Unfortunately, however, their offense bogged down in the next few minutes as the players simply couldn't hit their open shots. Immaculata capitalized on that fact by cutting the lead to 21-17, mostly through the benefit of free throws. With three minutes left in the first half, Coach Perretta called a time out to instruct his players to go back to their patient "spread" offense and look for the good shot. Timely jumpers by Rosemarie Burke and Karen Hinzay gave the Wildcats a 29-23 lead at halftime.

It is often said that the most important part of a basketball game is the start of the second half. This proved true as Villanova scored three quick baskets to build on their lead. More importantly, they took the Macs completely out of the game by steadily forcing a faster-paced tempo. Before Immaculata realized what was happening, they were trailing 46-29 with 10:28 left in the game.

That's when Coach Perretta decided to call off his charges and substitute freely. Bess McGinn and Courtney Vanderslice ran the offense nicely and benefited from Immaculta's aggressive defense by canning five free throws. It was a tribute to the great team defense employed by the Wildcats that every member of the squad played extensively from that point on. Kathleen O'Malley's jumper ended the game with Villanova on top, 64-48. Offensively, they were led by Kathie Beisel's sixteen points and Lisa Ortlip's fourteen rebounds. In addition, Karen Hiznay handed out a team high five assists to pace the Wildcats to victory.

Cats Recruit QB

The 1979 edition of Wildcat football was very optimistic and loaded with talent at the begining of last season. Although the year didn't end on the winning side of the ledger, Coach Bedesem looked at the new season with optimism. Within the last two weeks, the coaching staff has come up with two local standouts who will attend Villanova next year and hopefully give the Cats what they need to become an Eastern powerhouse.

Kevin Igram, an All-Scholastic Quarterback from Dobbins Tech, was recently named as the Philadelphia Daily News' "Public League Quarterback of the Decade." This past season, Ingram accounted for over 1800 yards in total offense while leading his Dobbins team to their first Public League playoff berth in 10 years.

According to Coach Bedesem Ingram was the "most exciting and talented player we've seen." Although Dobbins runs a veer offense, Ingram is familiar with the option and has good instincts.

A surprising fact about the All-City, All-Public competitor is that he never played organized football before he started tenth grade. After being recruited by Syracuse and Temple, Ingram was pleased to be coming to Wildcat's Country. "To go from inexperience to a scholarship at a school like Villanova, yes, that sure is surprising," explained Ingram.

Villanova also announced that Glen LeGrande of West Catholic High will be a member of the "Class of '84." The 6-1, 185-pound

UPI Poll Results Debatable

By PAT FLYNN

Every Monday night we wait and listen. The results are treated with as much reverence as election returns in November. Step right up, ladies and gents, the wire-service basketball polls are out again.

Whoooppee.

Now, don't get me wrong. I relish the polls as much as the next guy (okay, a little more, if you want to be picky about it). But lately I've been having my doubts, for a lot of reasons.

Take this week, for example. In the UPI coaches' poll, 40 voters cast their support to undefeated DePaul. The other guy voted for LSU. No offense to the Tigers, a very talented bunch of cagers. But they've lost four games, and counting, and can do no better than sixth overall. And one guy out there can honestly claim them as the finest team in the land. That guy deserves the saliva test, or at least a polygraph test.

There are so many inaccuracies in the voting that it becomes frustrating. Teams are treated in different ways. First, there are the "untouchable." These teams can do everything short of losing to their own cheerleaders before dropping out of sight. For example, this year, Indiana and Virginia had to drop seven games apiece before losing their respective notches.

Then there are the "penance" teams. When Notre Dame loses a game, for instance, they drop a few places for a week or two, fatten up on some pitiful independents, and return. Currently, at 17-4 (1-1 in the Big Five), they rate No. 13. If nobody played for the next two weeks they'd still jump into the Top Ten again.

Finally, there are the "Final Analysis" teams. These are the hard-working groups that do nothing except win game-in and game-out. They reel off great records, but since nobody expected them to be a factor in the pre-season predictions, the voters refuse to acknowledge them. "In the final analysis" they tell us, these teams will fold. Indiana State went all the way to the NCAA finals last year before being beaten, and if they had won that game there would have been a lot of red-faced sports writers wondering where the Sycamores came from.

It's all a popularity contest, a talent show, a battle between Sports Information Directors and publicity departments. But the most disturbing factor is the meaninglessness of it all. This year there will be 48 teams represented in the NCAA Tournament, each with a chance at the National Championship and chances are that more than 20 of those teams will have journeyed throughout the entire season without cracking the Top 20.

All complaints aside, there is one thing to be said about the weekly polls, one indisputable benefit that they give to the game. The polls are a source of interest. They keep college basketball in the limelight. Moreover, they give the teams and the fans of every major college something to shoot for in December, as well as in March, a current goal which is much easier to grasp than is the distant objective of an NCAA championship.

One of these weeks, we're going to look at the list and see the name "Villanova" in there. Then, I guess, we'll have nothing to gripe about.

Cooperation and Class on the Courts

By AL OXENREITER
WKVU Sports Director

I think the basketball team should be commended. They have once again proved themselves one of the East's top teams, and are well on their way to their third twenty-win season in the last four years. But they are more than just a good basketball team. Much more!

First, there is Head Coach Rollie Massimino, a personable man with a pleasant sense of humor, who also happens to be a great basketball coach. He is surrounded by four very talented assistants: Pete Gillian, Mitch Buonoguoro, Mike Mucci and Marty Marbach. All are quick to help with any team problems, both on and off the court.

Then there is Jake Nevin, the quick-witted head trainer who has been a part of the best and worst in Villanova sports for the past fifty years.

But the biggest part of this organization are the players. They are the ones who are always capable, always confident, but never cocky. Without question, they deserve every bit of credit they receive, but most of them shy away from any publicity. They prefer to do their talking on the basketball court and they always represent Villanova in a respectable fashion.

Yes, the entire basketball organization at Villanova should be commended, for they truly put definition to the word class. Other major universities can only wish to emulate this admirable style.

I wish them luck in the upcoming tournament, but as far as I'm concerned, the season's over, and they're the Champions.

Lifters Experience Transition

By JERRY VENTRESCA

Coach Joseph Slabinski's weightlifting teams have always ranked high among the powerhouses on the East Coast and nationally. This year however, Coach Slabinski thinks Villanova will be sending the fewest representatives in the team's history to the Nationals, to be held at Texas Christian, just four weeks away. Although the Wildcats' performance in the Pennsylvania Collegiate State Powerlifting Championships at Kutztown last Sunday "didn't please" Slabinski, the coach was nonetheless optimistic that "in another year or so we'll be the team to beat." He supported this by adding that powerful eastern rival Kutztown is loaded with seniors that will be lost to graduation.

Another reason why Slabinski should face the future optimistically is Dan Capece. The freshman placed first in his weight class at Kutztown. Among the 132-pounders, Capece lifted a total of 980 pounds (330 in the squat category, 265 on the bench and 385 in the deadlift). Capece's 330 in the squat was 20 pounds shy of a Villanova record set by Terry Mulroy in 1971, the year both Mulroy and Slabinski claimed National Championships. He was also 10 pounds away from another Villanova record in the bench category.

Other notable finishes were recorded by Co-Captain Vince Sferra, who claimed second place in the 181-pound weight class with a total of 1360 pounds and just five pounds short of first; Joe Jocono, finishing third among 242-pounders with a total of 1450 pounds; and Brian McKenna, placing fourth in the 198-pound weight class with a total of 1270 pounds. Although Jocono was tied at second place with 1450 pounds, he was awarded third because of a weight difference. Senior Co-Captain Nick Stagliano was forced to miss the meet due to illness.

Overall, Kutztown claimed first place, Temple University second, Lafayette third and Villanova fourth. Fifteen schools, involving 120 lifters, competed in Sunday's meet at Kutztown. Kutztown will probably host the meet next year again because of their facilities. However, a two-day meet seems likely due to the large number of competitors.

Record-Setting Swimmers Remain Undefeated

By KERRY LYNCH

Victory in both their dual meets with La Salle and Widener this week was anti-climactical for the Villanova women's swim team. Last week's win over previously undefeated Drexel was, in the words of Coach Jane Ackerman, "a major victory for such a young team."

The girls are assured of an undefeated season after their 75-65 win on January 31 over Drexel, in which six school records were broken. The Drexel team was 2nd in the AIAW Nationals last year.

Rita Edge's three victories, in the 100-yard freestyle, the 100 yard butterfly and the 200-freestyle scored high for the Wildcats and established three new school records. Edge also anchored the winning Villanova 200-yard freestyle relay.

Another strong Villanova performer in the meet against Drexel was Jenni Franks. She placed 1st in the 500-freestyle and the individual 100-yard medley in which she broke the school record. Franks swam on both the wining relay teams.

On Friday, February 8, the Wildcats competed against La Salle, achieving an easy victory with the final score standing at 84-56. Audrey St. Germain qualified for the Nationals in the 50 yard backstroke. According to Coach Ackerman, Rita Edge's 1st place in the 500-yard freestyle, a personal best in 5:09.3, was "an outstanding swim."

In Tuesday's meet against Widener, Villanova, despite the loss of three swimmers to illness, won 74-30. Tara Baroody qualified for another event in the Nationals when she won the 200-yard backstroke. The swim team record is 10-0.

Villanovans Dominate Wanamaker Mile

By DAVE COSKEY
and RAY ENGLER

It was billed as the Wanamaker Mile, but they should have called it the Villanova Mile.

The largest crowd ever to see an indoor track meet crammed Madison Square Garden last Friday night to watch 1977 Villanova graduate Eamonn Coghlan outlast a strong kick by senior Don Paige to win the John Wanamaker Millrose Games Mile in 3:58.3, beating Paige by one-tenth of a second.

> "Twenty Meters Is an Awful Lot to Make up on Eamonn. . . He's a Great Runner."
> Don Paige

"Twenty meters is an awful lot to make up on Eamonn," Paige said after the race, referring to the lead he had to try to narrow. "I wouldn't take anything away from him; he's a great runner. But I ran a dumb race.

"I ran very dumb," he repeated. "Jumbo will be very upset with me."

Coach Jumbo Elliott's runners dominated the Wanamaker Mile before the race as well as during the running. Early publicity for the meet focused on the possibilities of Coghlan bettering his own world record for the indoor mile.

Villanova's Sydney Maree was scheduled to join the field of nine, but was forced to withdraw with hip problems. Following Maree's move, both Paige and 1978 Villanova graduate Mark Belger moved up to the mile from the 1000 meter run.

"He's where I was in 1976," Coghlan said about Paige. "He will be one of the finest."

Belger, who normally doesn't run the mile, knew his only chance of winning the race was to set a blistering pace, a 2:55 through three-quarters of a mile. He had been training distances and believed that with a quick pace to drain the kicks, he could outlast Paige and Coghlan.

Belger, however, came down with the flu and had to withdraw from the mile Friday afternoon. Meet Director Fred Schmertz offered Coghlan another 'pacer,' but the native of Ireland, now running for the New York Athletic Club, declined.

That left the two Wildcats to battle it out. Coghlan is ranked second on the list of sub-four-minute milers at 3:52.5, while Paige is ranked fourth at 3:54.6. Paige defeated Coghlan in their first meeting last May at the Freedom Games Dream Mile.

The expectations, however, far exceeded the actual event. The pace was interminably slow (a 63-second first-quarter pace) and the favorites (Coghlan and Paige) were pulling up the rear of the pack. By the half-mile mark, the pace was 2:05, but Coghlan and Paige were still the last 2 places.

With approximately 3 laps to go, Coghlin made his "big move," taking over first place and retaining it until the end. Paige then made his move on the final lap, using the kick that he is so famous for. He closed in on Coghlan, but was unable to catch him. Coghlan cut the tape in a time of 3:58.2, just nosing out Paige (3:58.3). Masback of Princeton took third in 3:59.8 and Flynn came across fourth in 4 minutes flat.

"If the race ended at the end of the straight instead of the middle, it probably would have been a deadheat," Paige said.

Coghlan will journey to Moscow this summer since Ireland has decided to go to the Summer Games. Paige, however, is still training for the mile, although the status of the United States in the Summer Olympics is very uncertain.

"Of course I want to go; it has always been the dream of my life," Paige said. "On the other hand, I'm an American citizen and we must respect the decision of our President, since it's for the good of everyone.

"I can always drop down if I'm not ready for it (the mile) to the 800. I always train higher, because you can always drop down. It's much harder to move up."

The real highlight of the meet was not the mile but the women's 1500 meter run, where 20-year-old Mary Decker set a new world indoor record of 4:00.8 to beat the previous record by 3 seconds. Another world record was set in the women's 60 yard hurdles, where Stephanie Hightower beat world record holder Candy Young's time of 7.50 with a sterling time of 7.47, while Young also beat her own record, with a 7.48.

In the men's 60 yard hurdles, Villanova's Rod Wilson managed to hold his own with a 7.31 to finish fifth, while in the 1000 yard run Amos Korir ran 2:09.4, also finishing fifth.

Villanova's mile relay team, with Willie Sydnor leading off, Tim Robinson and Carlton Young running the middle legs, and Keith Brown on the anchor leg, finished third in their race, behind the teams of Morgan State and East Carolina.

Villanova's 2-mile relay team, consisting of Kevin Dillon, Dean Childs, John Hunter and Mike England on the anchor, finished a tight second behind the stellar performances of the Harvard team, who set a new meet record, 7:31.2, with the Wildcats running 7:31.5.

Although the Wilcats have not "torn up the circuit" this year in indoor track, they have had some strong individual performances, and once the lingering injuries to All-Americans Anthony Tufariello and Sydney Maree heal, they still will be a solid force at the NCAA's in Detroit on March 14 and 15.

The Wildcats' next indoor meet is tonight in Houston's Astrodome at the Houston Invitational.

Limited Playoff Tickets On Sale

A special allotment of 700 tickets will go on sale for students ONLY for Villanova's first round Eastern Eight playoff game at the Field House, to be played on Tuesday, February 26 at 8:00 p.m.

Because of the nature of the playoff format, these will be the only tickets to be offered at the student rate of $2.50. All other tickets sold to adults, faculty, staff and children will be $5.00. There will be no exceptions.

Tickets will go on sale this coming Monday at 10:00 a.m. at the Field House Ticket Office and student identification will be required for all purchases.

Hoopsters Squeak By Knights

Cats Clinch Home-Court Advantage

By ROBERT L.P. WALSH

The Villanova basketball team collected two more Eastern 8 wins this week which raised their league record to 7-2, dispatching Massachusetts 79-64 at Amherst on Saturday and nipping the Scarlet Knights of Rutgers 70-68 in Tuesday night's squeaker at the Palestra. Although the Cats did not play overpowering basketball, the wins did assure them of a homecourt advantage in the opening round of the Eastern 8 playoffs.

The Wildcats were paced by 16 points from Tom Sienkiewicz at Massachusetts and placed four players in double figures. Rory Sparrow connected on all of his 14 points in the first half to give Villanova a 38-31 halftime lead. In the second half, Massachusetts (1-17) rallied to close the gap to four, but eventually succumbed to the stronger Cats.

Although the Rutgers game was not played at the Field House, it contained all of the intensity of the Villanova-Rutgers rivalry. Kelvin Troy came out smoking for the Knights, working inside and hitting the boards well. For the Cats, Sparrow hit several early baskets to spark the offense and Aaron Howard had three spectacular scores on offensive rebounds. Darius Griffin converted two three-point plays with 6:50 remaining in the half and if not for key steals by Stewart Granger and strong rebounding from Alex Bradley, the Cats' halftime deficit could have been greater than 39-34.

In the second half, Sienkiewicz began sinking his shots to pull Villanova into the lead and finish high scorer for the Wildcats with 19 points. For most of the half, Villanova and Rutgers exchanged the lead with Troy providing much of Rutgers' offense as he finished with 27 points and 11 rebounds. With 27 seconds left in the game, the score was tied at 68 and Villanova had possession, the stage was set for another dazzling, game winning shot by Rory Sparrow. A missed shot by Granger with nearly no time left kicked out to Sparrow, who wheeled and banked in a turnaround jumper at the buzzer for a 70-68 win.

"He's Mr. Clutch when it comes to that kind of stuff," commented Coach Rollie Massimino on Sparrow's last second heroics. Massimino was especially pleased because the Cats' 18-5 mark is tied with the school's best record set in '71 and also because he is one step closer to realizing his three goals for this season; to win twenty games, to win the Big 5 Championship, and to win the Eastern 8 Championship.

Wildcats Conquer Colonials

By BETH WHITE

"Rory Sparrow. He's the one that kills us." Brian Magid, George Washington's star guard, disappointed and drained after a 74-72 loss to the Wildcats, complimented Villanova's senior guard in the last regular season matchup between the two rivals. Magid has had to face Sparrow for four years of Eastern Eight league play, and it has been Sparrow that has brought considerable disappointment to the Colonials. Last Wednesday Sparrow picked up a deflected pass and connected on a 22-foot jumper to put Villanova ahead a basket with only two seconds remaining in the game. The pass, thrown by senior Marty Caron and intended for Aaron Howard, was defected by GW inside the key and picked up by Sparrow for the victory.

Junior forward Alex Bradley has showed a resurgence of the style and poise that made him the leading scorer for the Wildcats last year. Bradley added 18 points and four rebounds. Center John Pinone was influential off the boards, nabbing eight rebounds and tallying ten points, while holding Colonials center Mike Zagardo to 15 points (just below his season average). Forward Tom Gleason put in an impressive performance for George Washington, grabbing 13 rebounds and totaling 19 points. Junior guard Curtis Jeffries pulled out of a scoring slump and contributed 14, while senior Magid added 12 points, most of which were long bombers. Villanova's own bomber, junior guard Tom Sienkiewicz, had 12 points and sophomore Aaron Howard rounded out the Wildcat scoring with eight points.

The vocal crowd at the Smith Center (GW's home court) seemed to intimidate the Cats at first, causing them to fall behind on their scoring and trail by five points most of the first half. The Colonials led 43-33 with a minute remaining until intermission, but Stewart Granger narrowed the gap to eight with a steal and layup just before half-time.

Sienkiewicz narrowed the margin to two five minutes into the second half with a fast-breaking layup after a steal by Howard. After exchanging baskets, Sienkiewicz tied the game at 57-all with another layup.

The Colonials led through the next ten minutes, until freshman Tom Bethea put the Cats ahead by one, helped by a steal from Bradley and an assist from forward Aaron Howard. Center John Pinone committed a costly foul against GW center Zagardo, causing Pinone to foul out (with 5 personal fouls) and giving the Colonials the chance to go ahead by two. Fortunately for the Cats, Zagardo hit only the first of his one-and-one free throws, tying the score again at 72-72. Sparrow's last second jumper clinched the win for the Cats. Senior Marty Caron was passing across the key to Howard when the ball was tipped by a GW player inside the key and into the hands of Sparrow. "It makes a nice assist," concludes Caron.

Head Coach Rollie Massimino felt that "the big difference between this game and the GW game at the Field House last month, aside from a 10-point victory margin, is that one was home and one's away. A win on the road is always a great win," continues Massimino, "and I think that this win showed the character of the team."

"We changed our defense against Brian Magid, alternating from a man-to-man to a zone. He shot great, but they (GW) just lost the tempo of the game," added a gratified Massimino.

"Mike Zagardo played an excellent game, too, but every time he got the ball, we dug it out from him."

New Grading Plan Defeated by Senate

By BILL CLARK

The Villanova University Senate's first meeting of the Spring Semester, on Friday, February 15, concerned itself with academic matters, the highlight being a proposal to change the present grading system.

A motion from the Academic Policy Committee proposed that Villanova incorporate the use of "minuses" into its grading policy along with the "pluses" already in use. The motion, which was defeated, called for the establishment of an A+ grade which would be converted into a 4.0. As a result, the GPA conversions would have been as follows:

A+	4.0	A-	3.33	B	2.67
A	3.67	B+	3.0	B-	2.33
C+	2.0	C-	1.33	D	0.67
C	1.67	D+	1.0	D-	0.33
			F 0

Many Senators questioned the rationale and application of this proposal. Senator Amorosa asked if these grades would be retroactive or just apply to incoming Freshmen. Senator Cleary, vice-president for academic affairs, said that if the system was retroactive, he would "have pity on the Registrar's Office."

There were also questions on the intention of this motion. When discussing the possibility that this was an attempt to cut at "grade inflation," Cleary said that Villanova should not solve the problems of the present grading system by changing the system itself.

Even though there was some support for the idea of "minuses," the motion did not carry because of the difficulties of its implementation.

Union Voting Date Near

Elections for Villanova faculty collective bargaining will be held Feb. 27 and 28, until 2 p.m. on Feb. 28, with the polling place in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

The election is the result of a petition, filed with the National Labor Relations Board by the Villanova chapter of the American Association of University Professors, January 3, 1980.

Petitioning procedures for collective bargaining began last April, when cards designating the AAUP as faculty bargaining agent were distributed to the faculty.

Nearly 58 percent of the faculty signed and returned the cards to the AAUP before the petitioning. Faculty members who signed the cards did not pledge votes for collective bargaining, or for the AAUP as agent, but merely indicated they would like to see a vote on unionization held on campus. Only a 30 percent respondant rate is necessary before petitioning the NLRB.

"Within three days of the mailing of the cards, the 30 percent number was achieved," said chapter president Dr. James Berquist in an interview with the Villanovan, last fall. The purpose of collective bargaining would be to give the faculty a say in the decision making of the University, through the agent of the AAUP.

In the interview last fall, Berquist commented that "the liberal arts and sciences element is the most strongly in favor of collective bargaining.

"The engineering school is fairly evenly divided, though since five years ago, many have come around to the idea.

"The commerce and finance school, as we expected, is in a majority against it," he said.

The last time an election for collective bargaining was held at Villanova was November 15 and 16 of 1973. It was defeated by 40 votes.

In the upcoming election, teachers may vote for the AAUP as bargaining agent, or they may vote "no agent." In the 1973 election, faculty could also vote for the American Federation of Teachers as agent.

Out of 400 eligible voters in that election, 356 went to the polls. The AAUP was selected bargaining agent for 134, the AFT received 23 votes, and 199 faculty members voted no agent.

One of the reasons for this year's vote is the complaint of faculty salaries not keeping pace with the cost of living. The average faculty salary increase last year was 7 percent, while the cost of living increase was about 9 percent.

The faculty salary increase in this year's proposed budget is 10 percent

Maree Addresses Union on South African Sanctions

By KIM RUSHTON

Last Monday evening the Villanova Political Union hosted Sydney Maree, Villanova track star and citizen of South Africa.

The resolution read, "This House favors economic and sports sanctions against South Africa."

Sydney Maree opened his remarks by saying that the situation in South Africa is grave, and that most people are uninformed. He stated that even though blacks are the majority in South Africa, they own only 13% of the land. In addition, they are not allowed to vote.

Maree then explained how no less than 5,000 people had been unjustly killed by the South African government.

He asserted that the United States must take some of the blame for the present situation in South Africa since one-sixth of capital investment in South Africa is from United States based corporations.

The American based companies operating in South Africa include Mobil, General Motors, ITT, General Electric, and IBM. A surprised audience was told squarely by Maree that IBM computers were used by the South African Defense Department.

Maree said that South Africa had recently exploded an atomic bomb. He said this would have been impossible without technical and financial aid from American companies.

Pat O'Neill, chairman of the moderate party spoke in favor of the resolution. He commented on the problems of policing international corporations. He thought the United States should put pressure on its companies. He also thought the United Nations should enforce a complete trade embargo. He warned of the inevitability of a bloodbath, especially for whites in South Africa, if action is not taken.

Jeffrey Markowitz was the speaker for the Liberal Party. He observed that actions against South Africa may gain the United States some important Third World country support. He suggested tax penalties and loss of government contracts to firms who deal in South Africa.

Ken Fody spoke for the Conservative Party. He was against the resolution. He felt that the United States should use its economic influences in South Africa positively rather than negatively.

Maree concluded with the thought that the crisis has to be solved somehow. He reminded the audience that as he stood speaking, people were being murdered by machines possibly supplied by the United States.

"Should the United States not help South Africa, there would be no choice but to turn to Communist countries for help," Maree implored.

Sydney Maree addresses Political Union last Monday.

Connelly Center Jobs

The Villanova Union is looking for work study students to fill office clerk positions in their Connelly Center office. Job responsibilities include typing, filing and receptionist duties. The job will require approximately fifteen hours per week beginning after Easter break through the 1980-1981 year. For full job description and applications contact Lucy Gorski, Program Director, Dougherty Hall-Room 207 or call 527-2100-Exchange 398.

Summer Jobs

The Student Activities Office is looking for three individuals to work with the Program Director and Assistant Program Director in planning and supervising summer programs during the three summer sessions. Qualifications include prior programming experience, familiarity with the campus and creativity.

Responsibilities include planning events, showing films, setting up and cleaning up program sites, and supervising off campus trips. Period of employment is May 21-August 8, 1980 with on-campus housing and meals provided from May 28-July 31. Filing deadline is February 25, 1980. For full job descriptions and applications contact Lucy Gorski, Program Director, Dougherty Hall-Room 207 or call 527-2100-Ext. 398.

Psychology Symposium

The Boston State College Chapter of the Psi Chi Honor Society in Psychology will host a symposium, "Psychology's Second 100 Years," on April 11-12, 1980, at Boston State College Tower Building. Two-year, four-year and graduate colleges and universities from nine states (all of New England, New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania) have been invited to participate and attend.

All undergraduate and graduate students, and faculty and professionals are encouraged to submit one- to two page abstracts on their research (including theses) OR discursive papers on what they believe will become of the field of psychology over the next century. Any student or professional is welcome to enter a paper competition in which three of the most innovative 8-10 page essays on the projected role of space psychologists and/or behavioral changes in a space colony will be awarded $25 savings bond. Abstracts and competitive papers are due February 29, 1980 at: Psi Chi Chapter 222, Psychology Department, Boston State College, 625 Huntington Avenue, Boston, Mass., 02115.

Pre-registration is encouraged. Student registration is $2.50; registration for non-students and professionals is $5.00. Information on lodging, entertainment, sightseeing and special activities are available on request. Pre-register by April 2, 1980; registration is also available at the door.

Women's Lacrosse

All interested in being on the Women's Lacrosse team should report to the first day of practice on Monday, February 25, at 4:00, at St. Mary's field. Come dressed for outdoor practice. All are welcome, and no experience is necessary.

Sigma Xi Lecture

Dr. Ed McAssey will talk about Thermographic Nondestructive Testing of Composites Using Externally Applied Thermal Fields at the Sigma Xi seminar on Thursday, Feb. 28, at 12:20, in Rm. 302, Tolentine Hall. All interested faculty and students are invited to attend. Refreshments provided.

Lynx Magazine

The Lynx Magazine is now accepting any poetry, prose, one-act plays, etc. for the Spring, 1980 issue. The deadline for all submissions is February 29. Please drop off any submissions at Tolentine 444 or in the Student Activities Office.

Accounting Society

The Accounting Society invites all those who are interested to attend a meeting on February 28, at 12:45 in Bartley room 110. The guest speaker will be a representative from Dupont and the topic is "Opportunities in Industrial Accounting."

History Club

The History Club is sponsoring a trip to the Cloisters in New York on Saturday, April 12, 1980. Round trip transportation by bus will be provided from Villanova. Approximate cost of the trip is $12.00. We will be leaving at 8:00 a.m. and expect to return by 6:00 p.m. A luncheon in New York City is also planned.

The trip is open to all students and faculty members. A sign-up sheet will be posted in the History Department — Vasey 101. More detailed information will be given at a future date.

WCLA

Ms. Sharon Armstrong, a representative of The Washington Center for Learning Alternatives, will be on campus on Wednesday, February 27, at 2:30 p.m., in the West Lounge, to discuss internship opportunities for students in Washington, D.C.

According to Dr. Dorley, of the Internship Program, internships are available in Congressional offices, Executive agencies, Public Interest organizations, and Judicial agencies as well as in many other areas of interest such as the environment, consumer affairs, journalism, communications, the arts and business, to mention only a few.

College Work-Study

Any student wanting an increase in C.W.S. awards, contact the financial aid office between 9-5, Monday through Friday.

Gamma Phi Honor Society

Gamma Phi Honor Society will hold its second general membership meeting on Tuesday, February 26, at 12:45 in Bartley 209. All new members are reminded that dues ($3.00) will be collected.

Softball Tryouts

All interested in trying out for the Women's Varsity Softball Team should meet on Monday, February 25, at 4:00, in St. Mary's gym. Come dressed for indoor practice which will follow the meeting.

New SCOD Member Chosen

The Student Committee for Organizational Development is pleased to announce the selection of Richard A. Driscoll as a member of the Student Committee for Organizational Development.

S.C.O.D. would like to take this opportunity to remind the leaders of student organizations, who attended the special budget meeting two weeks ago, to turn in their skills checklists. This information will be extremely important to the planning of S.C.O.D.'s spring leadership training programs.

Jazz Course Offered In Fall

Many students on campus have an interest and talent in Jazz, an enduring musical contribution of America. An elective offered to all undergraduates this coming Fall semester by Father Wilde, O.S.A. of the Art and Art History Department will delve into the history of both Jazz and Popular Music in America. When considering this 3-credit course, look at AAH 3000, as the course will not be listed according to its specific title. There are no pre-requisites needed. Only your interest.

Phi Kappa Phi Lecture

Phi Kappa Phi, the honor society will sponsor Claude Lewis, a Bulletin columnist, in a lecture on Freedom of the Press and Government Restraint on February 26 at 3:00 in 215 Tolentine.

A.C.S.

There will be a general meeting of the Association of Commuting Students on Tuesday, Feb. 26, at 12:45, in Bartley 110. New members are welcome.

Whiskey Company

The Villanova University Naval Reserve Officers Training Corps (NROTC) Drill Team, "Whiskey Company," will host the Twenty-first Annual Villanova University Invitational Drill Meet on Saturday, February 23. The Drill Meet will be held in Price Hall and Thomas Hall of Valley Forge Military Academy, located in Wayne, PA.

There are two categories of competition: basic drill, which will begin at 8:00 a.m., and trick or exhibition drill, which will begin at 11:00 a.m. The trick drill involves rifle spins, throws, and marching manuals.

"Whiskey Company" traditionally opens the drill meet season, which will continue to the end of April. "Whiskey Company" is noted as one of the top teams in the country, having won the Cherry Blossom National Championship in 1967, and the Pershing Rifles National Championship in 1976.

Faculty Unionization Debated

Dean Envisions Problems

By BILL ROCK

Dean Alvin A. Clay of the College of Commerce and Finance opposes unionization of the Villanova faculty because it would remove the possibility of reward by merit.

According to Clay, unionization would remove a large part of the incentive for teachers to do a little extra for the school and the students.

"You must understand that unionization is a great leveling force," he explained. "As is true in any field, professors have different talents. Those that are more proficient or do more for the school are financially rewarded for it.

"Unionization would change all that. Increases in salaries would have little to do with achievement. It would tend to discourage the more proficient and hardworking from being so."

"I am not claiming that the better teachers at Villanova are only better because they want to earn more money, but if they were not rewarded for their achievements, somewhere along the line they would have to begin to question the point to it all. Unionization could lead to mediocrity."

Clay also believes that an unnecessary tension between faculty and administration would be established.

"No matter how you try to avoid it, unionization automatically sets up an adversary relationship," he continued. "Perhaps the extreme bitterness that exists between some unions and employers would not be present, but some bad feeling has to exist."

Clay does not believe that Villanova has shirked its responsibility to provide for its faculty. He believes the University has tried to improve their financial status.

He stated, "The school has made efforts to help the financial situation of the faculty. Last year's Christmas bonus is a good example.

"The increases in salary which our faculty have received do not compare that badly to other places in the Philadelphia area.

"Furthermore, it is a known fact that the teaching profession has lagged somewhat behind in salary increases. That is true all over."

Clay does not see an acceptable place from which the additional money to pay teachers can come.

"Funds must come from tuition," he declared. "Yet, how high can tuition be raised? Tuition beyond a competitive point will hurt enrollment, especially of commuter students. We are competing with quality schools in this area that are state-aided.

"The other possibility is to transfer funds from somewhere else, but there are not that many areas from which money can come. Faculty often do not appreciate the importance of areas other than their own.

Clay concluded by pointing out the many non-monetary advantages of working at Villanova.

"We have things to offer here that cannot go in a pay envelope. The location is one very obvious thing. Many of the teachers seem to want all the benefits of working at Villanova, but want the extra money too.

"I do not think we should throw out all the nice things just to get more money."

Professor Stresses Benefits

By KATHI IANNACONE

According to Dr. James Berquist, president of the Villanova chapter of the American Association of University Professors, the main purpose for unionization is "to gain greater bargaining power. The teachers want the University to give them higher priority than they presently have."

Some of the benefits that unionization may supply to the faculty include more force with the concerns for personal economic matters, a better understanding by the administration for the needs of the faculty, thus lessening the remote feelings between them, and a means of communications to settle the many issues that must be discussed until the problems are resolved.

"It is important that nobody sees this as changing everything in the University," said Berguist. "This collective bargaining is not a replacement for all of the concerns that have been given already, its purpose is to strengthen existing committees."

Students probably won't see any drastic change in the University because of the faculty unionization. Problems will be dealt with immediately and directly instead of being prolonged and

Fraternity Suspended for Hazing

By BRIAN R. QUINN

The executive members of Tau Kappa Epsilon were informed on February 11 that the Dean of Student Activities Fr. Robert J. Martin, and the Interfraternity Council (I.F.C.), had temporarily suspended the fraternity because they had found its conduct to be in conflict with administrative guidelines which define proper pledging activities.

All fraternities and sororities agree to follow written administrative guidelines which prohibit "Any undue mental or physical stress known as hazing," stated Leslie Palmer, president of the interfraternity council.

A four-page document ratified by the Interfraternity Council states that "Hazing is forbidden as being inconsistent with an association of equals and scholars. No pledge shall be subjected to unnecessary or excessive physical exhaustion, deprivation of normal sleep, any form of actual or simulated jeopardy."

"The original cause of probation was a kidnapping incident which occurred in October of 1978, we consider kidnapping to be hazing," stated Martin. In this case, two pledges were taken to the Washington D.C. area, and one of the pledges was hesitant to return to Villanova with the fraternity members, apparently because he had a test the next day, he added.

The pledge's roommate was "furious," stated Dean Martin. The incident was reported because the roommate was requested to return the pledge to the Villanova campus quickly enough to allow the pledge to take the test on time. This brought the episode to my attention and to the attention of the IFC (an organization composed of fraternity and sorority members which Dean Martin describes as a "Self governing liaison between the administration and the fraternities").

"When I was in the frat, everyone broke the rules. Why Fr. Martin should pick out one fraternity as an example is beyond me," stated graduate member of TKE Curtis Sauer. "What about all the other things that have gone on over the years?" he added.

The final decision to suspend the fraternity was based upon this incident, and the president's inability to present an adequately revised policy of fraternity structure, stated Dean Martin.

"They need to look at things on a realistic basis, they need to do what they were told to do. Their basic reorganizational requirements are to attend IFC meetings — they didn't," added President Leslie Palmer. "Their leadership is not what it should have been," she added.

Referring to Donald Liddy, the current president of TKE, Steve Baer an active member of the fraternity, said that "Liddy alienated the senior class," and this resulted in the breakup of the feeling of brotherhood — the basis of all fraternities. "If they had sent Kurt Gordon and I over to speak to Fr. Martin the frat would still be going," he added.

Trustees Approve Athletic Fields

By JERRY DOUGHERTY

The establishment of new athletic fields on the west campus was conditionally approved by the University Board of Trustees at a meeting February 12.

Final authorization for the new fields, to serve mainly as intramural facilities and be located behind St. Mary's Hall on the Morris Estates land, lies with the Radnor Township Commissioners.

Tuesday's board meeting also took up the subject of improvements to the football stadium and a new indoor athletic center. But, according to Rev. John M. Driscoll. O.S.A., University president, "no decision has yet been made on the stadium or the indoor center."

Driscoll said that University attorneys will be approaching Radnor Township officials regarding the prospective zoning change.

Grading Policies

In two other academic matters, the Senate approved the formulation of two Master's programs at Villanova, those being an M.A. in Human Organization Science and a M.S. in Nursing. Dean Fitzpatrick of the Nursing School said that Villanova has applied for and received assurances of funding from the U.S. Dept. of Health, Education, and Welfare for the Masters program.

The next Senate meeting will take place today, Feb. 22. At this meeting, the Senate Budget Committee will submit its evaluation of the proposed budget for 1980-81.

Senator Clay, chairman of the Budget Committee, said that the Committee had analyzed the budget to see that the set University priorities had been met.

In analyzing the budget in relation to the University's priorities, Clay said that "each member of the Budget Committee was assigned a certain priority to investigate. These people actually interviewed those involved with each priority to see that it was being met."

SGA President Attends White House Conference

By BARBARA ANNE HIGGINS

On Friday, February 15, P.J. Winterhalter, president of Student Government, attended a conference in Washington, D.C. centering on the Carter Administration's Domestic and Foreign Policy. Winterhalter was one of the 300 students invited to attend the convention, which was held at the White House.

Each state, including Alaska and Hawaii, was represented in the group, with several students from the Philadelphia area attending.

The Conference commenced at 9:30 a.m., and most of the morning was taken up by lectures given by such prominent administrative officials as Dr. Zbigniew Brzezinski, assistant to the President for National Security Affairs and Mr. Stuart Eisenstat, assistant to the President for Domestic Affairs. Both speakers gave a brief overview of the administration stance in their respective areas, and responded to questions raised by the students.

After lunch in the New Executive Office Building, Winterhalter attended a round table discussion with several members of the Carter staff including Bert Carp, deputy to the President on Domestic Policy, Madeline Wright, member of the National Security Council, plus the Director of the Peace Corps, and the Deputy Secretary for the Selective Service System. During this session, such subjects as the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, the Iran situation and the administration's position on the Selective Service were discussed amongst the students and speakers.

At 2:45, the group gathered in the East Room of the White House to meet with President Carter. After a speech primarily geared towards such issues as draft registration, and the Iranian crisis, the president met with each of the 300 students. Since the draft question was thoroughly covered in the day's discussions, Winterhalter expressed Villanova's concern for the Olympic situation in his brief encounter

Theater Major Approved

By FRANK J. DOHERTY

The University Board of Trustees has passed a proposal to initiate an undergraduate major in theater arts, according to Dr. James J. Christy, chairman of the theater department.

Chairman of the theater department, Dr. James Christy.

Christy stated that one or two students could be graduated from the program as early as Spring, 1981. He said that the program would be "pretty well embarked" by the end of the 1982 school year.

Currently, Villanova offers only graduate degrees in theater. "Being a Masters program without a Bachelors program is a very strange situation to be in," remarked Christy. "You have this high level program, and you have the faculty for it, and you're doing the activities, but since it's a predominantly undergraduate university, you feel isolated. I think that the undergraduate major will be the cement that's going to bind the program more fully into the life of the university."

Christy hopes to start four or five freshmen on their way to a theater major this fall. The maximum number of students to be accepted into the major is ten for each year. This makes the total number of Villanova theater majors as high as forty.

Christy prefers to work with a that theater, being an art, involves an awful lot of personal attention and focuses both on the artistic and intellecutal growth of the individual," he stated.

"You really can't pacify the numbers or the IBM cards," Christy explained, "you have to get to know each student, try to find out what their needs are, and how they can advance and in which way. I think that smallness will be good."

Christy went on the say that the smallness will be somewhat deceptive since the program is being done as a cooperative with Rosemont College. Up to five Rosemont students from each year will be able to major in theater at Villanova.

Christy described the selection process for students seeking the major. "It will have to be individually tailored. I'll have to find out who are the students who would really like the degree, what their background is, what their interests are, and probably have an audition and an interview.

College Marks 75th Year

By STEVE HAGGERTY

Villanova University's College of Engineering will celebrate its 75th anniversary with a public ceremony on April 15.

Originally, the engineering program was called the School of Technology but became the College of Engineering in 1905. A four-year course in civil engineering and a two year program in electrical engineering were all that was initially offered by the school.

By 1919 mechanical and chemical engineering had been added to the curriculum. When Villanova became a university in 1954, the program was expanded to include graduate programs in the four major engineering areas, as well as Water Resources Engineering and Transportation Studies.

Dr. Robert D. Lynch, dean of engineering, will be among those speaking at the anniversary ceremonies. Lynch believes that the greatest changes in the School of Engineering have occurred in the areas of equipment and techniques.

"The pocket calculator, the computer, microprocessors; the tremendous growth in technology in the past 10 or 12 years has made a great difference in the kinds of laboratories and facilities that we have and need," Lynch explained.

Lynch stated that the educational programs of the college will continue to emphasize the humanities and professional ethics. "Villanova has always focused on developing the total man in intellect, body and spirit."

Looking ahead, Lynch expects to see continued excellence in Villanova's College of Engineering.

"Our program will continue to be centered on turning out excellent professional engineers, while preparing others to go on to graduate school, perform research and teach," stated Lynch.

University Gets Grant To Test Solar Heating

By LORI MADDEN

Villanova University received a $26,255 grant from the U.S. Department of Energy for the testing and construction of a new solar heating system.

Dr. William J. Price, a Chemical Engineering professor, was awarded the DOE grant in Villanova's name on September 26, 1979. Dr. Rice is the recipient of the fourth largest grant awarded for his proposal to "design and build a self-insulating, passive solar heating system, using a heat pipe and phase change material." Rice is one of 30 state inventors to receive funding through the Appropiate Technology Small Grant Program, which is open to all individuals interested in energy related problems.

The "passive solar heating system" proposal was sent to Washington in early April, 1979. Before any funding was allocated, Rice's design was critically evaluated by a panel of scientific experts. Impact on community needs, expected energy savings, impact on the environment, and likelihood of commercialization were a few of the considerations weighed by the panel.

Although the award came late in September, work on the project had begun earlier in that month. At present the system is in the design stages. The construction date is set for the summer of 1980, and testing and demonstrations will run through the fall and winter of 1980-81.

Three Villanova engineering students, under the supervision of Dr. Rice, are working on the design aspects of the new solar heating system. Seniors Phillip Brochu, Vincent Marano, and Gerald Sexton each spend nine hours per week on the project, which will be the major theme of their senior theses.

The completed "passive solar heating system" is to be found in a large, south-facing window of the original Chemical Engineering building. Radiant energy from the sun will heat specially insulated pipes made of polyethylene and carbon. The heat will transfer to tubes filled with experimental salts, which store heat at a constant temperature.

Unlike a solar heating system which employs glass panel collectors, and plumbing for heat circulation, Dr. Rice's combination collection and heat storage system uses a fan to blow warm air from the tubes to the area which requires heat. Dr. Rice refers to his heating system as being "passive." It is "passive" because it automatically reacts to the sun's heat, and circulates that heat without the use of plumbing.

The design, assembly and lab scale test system will determine the feasibility and practical use of Dr. Rice's promising invention. The University will hold demonstrations late this summer for contractors and developers who would be interested in installing a system once it has been patented. Dr. Rice enthusiastically hopes that, "devices of this type will have a major impact in solving the energy problem in the not too distant future."

Black Workshop Views Politics

By SHARON WINTERS

"Politics in the '80's" was the topic of Black History Week's February 14 workshop in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall. Florence Walker, newly elected co-chairperson of the Black United Front was the guest speaker for the evening.

"Make politicians accountable to you," was the main point of Walker's talk. She went on to explain some of the plain truths concerning political power. "Old money" was deemed more powerful than "new money." Families and groups of people that have had money for years have bought education from the better schools; old money has also bought years of influence that new money can't seem to obtain. Muhammad Ali was cited as an example of a new rich man who was not influential to any degree in today's power structure.

Walker viewed welfare as a continuing institution because it is cheaper to keep people on relief than it is to give them jobs. This was not a black-white issue to Walker. She noted that poor people, no matter what their heritage, have the same problems. These individuals are living under the same system and the same kind of conditions, she said.

Ms. Walker felt that an integral part of a solution to the problems of the poor is unity. Group efforts were viewed as a method not only for political power but also for community development. People should not educate themselves to leave their old neighborhood behind; they should return to help others in the area.

Black efforts should reach all levels, according to Walker. The family should teach their younger members about politics. People should take a stand for their beliefs. Making politicians accountable for their campaign promises was a point that Walker brought up on several occasions. Voters should call representatives and question their actions in office, she suggested.

The politician was not necessarily seen as an insensitive leader. Walker felt that voters could join with politicians to accomplish goals. Sometimes a representative may find that "his hands are honestly tied;" he or she might need community support to trim the red tape in politics. Some representatives do what is within the limits of the current laws to help their constituencies; they might need community action to create awareness for changes in the law.

Walker was earnest in her lecture on the topic of values. Children should be taught to share, to be concerned about the welfare of others. She also stressed principles, honesty and taking a stand on issues or beliefs.

Black History Week consisted of various workshops and lectures during the week of February 11. One of the events was a fair on February 16; another was a discussion on crime.

The Black Cultural Society sponsored the events on campus. The President of the Society is Stefan Roots; moderators are Theresa Nance and Father Cedric. The program director is Judy Wood.

Pro-Unionization Meeting Held

By MARK STIEBER

While the election for collective bargaining grows closer, Villanova employee union supporters are trying to win over their colleagues.

In this vein, a pro-union meeting was held, February 19, attended by many faculty and staff members.

Speakers included representatives from the faculty unions of Temple University and St. John's University in New York City. Both organizations are local chapters of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP).

Dr. Sam Wilson, outgoing president of the Temple AAUP, feels that collective bargaining is basic to the university community. "A union of professors enhances continued individual development and increases personal interest," Wilson stated.

Though individualism and personal freedom may be hindered Wilson feels it is worth the trade-off for extra clout. Since the union's inception, professors' salaries have risen at rates of 7 and 8 percent per year.

Unionization at Temple has added teacher input to personnel administration and recruitment, tenure, and promotion, on a much more formal basis. Members have the legal right to participate in the policy decisions of the university.

"To this date we have never had to use the last resort of the strike nor have there been any arrests," Wilson remarked.

St. John's University was a pioneer in collective bargaining when an AAUP chapter was established there in 1969.

"Collective bargaining has fulfilled all of our expectations and none of our fears," stated Professor Frederick Heuppe, president of the St. John union. "It has put the faculty on an equal footing with the administration in determining wages, hours, and standards of education."

"Working together we can attain a wage in keeping with the dignity of the profession," Heuppe theorized.

Through unionization, St. John employees have gained considerable say in the workings of the university, Heuppe said. They are able to voice their views on the academic and fiscal priorities of the institution.

In this way, union members participate in the planning of new buildings, athletic budgets, and so on.

In addition, collective bargaining insures a formal grievance procedure: employees are free to argue in a legal way. And under the union contract, the employer is obliged to listen and answer.

Under the University's present contract, the faculty has control over curriculum and subject matter, class size and "everything that goes into the working of the institution."

Salaries have risen by 85 percent since the union's inception ten years ago. "For next year we are not planning on accepting anything less than an 8-1/2 percent cost of living increase," Heuppe continued.

Since the union began at St. John's there has never been the need for arbitration. A few minor disputes have been solved at the lower levels.

Union supporters hope that professors will take these positive aspects of collective bargaining into account when they cast their votes February 27-28.

Professor Urges Women's Rights

By MELISSA ARAYA

Equality for women in all fields including the military and the Church — is an ideal of Dr. Virginia Ratigan of the Religious Studies Department. Ratigan, who teaches an undergraduate course titled "Women in Judaeo-Christian Tradition," does not consider herself an overzealous feminist, but a woman who believes that all women should have the opportunity to prove their equality and choose freely, whether it be in the service of one's country or one's Church.

On her views of women and the draft, Ratigan commented, "The question of women and the draft is complex; there is a need to question whether or not a draft is necessary at this time — there are overarching questions concerning the military and how it operates. What are the implications globally of a third World War at this point in history?" She added, I feel that women are responsible citizens in every way and should serve their country accordingly; of course, room must be left for individual conscience in every case."

Ratigan condemned the fact that, although the Equal Rights Amendment was not passed nationally, women may still be required to register for the draft, "There is so much evidence that women have to have a legal stand in order to achieve their rights. They need a clout of authority, which ERA would provide. We cannot ignore the facts: women are proving their competency in every field today: law, medicine, education . . . I just do not think that the potential of women can be questioned today in the same way that it was 10, 20 even 50 years ago!"

The course taught by Ratigan at Villanova deals with the development of the roles of women in the Church. A supporter of women in the priesthood, she feels that, "there are many needs that haven't been met in the area of women and ministry," and, "there has been significant change in both theological thinking as well as grass roots Catholicism. Vast numbers of Catholic scholars and theologians have written in support of women's ordination."

She cites a 1977 Gallup poll which indicates that at least 41 percent of American Catholics are in favor of women priests.

Regarding her feelings on personally being drafted, Ratigan stated, "That's a theoretical question that hasn't come into my mind. I feel there are so many injustices perpetrated by the military and I feel critical of the system as a whole. However, my conscience would lead me to serve."

Budget Figures Disputed

By FRANK J. DOHERTY

The Development Office, responsible for raising funds from a variety of sources, claims that it raises more than the two percent of the university budget for which they are given credit by the administration.

Edward V. Murray, assistant to the president, said that the two percent of the budget accredited to the Development Office is known as unrestricted funds raised by that office. Unrestricted funds are those which can be put to any use by the University. Restricted funds are donated to the University for a specific purpose only. The administration does not include restricted donations as part of the total operational income.

Edward A. Morosky, assistant vice president for Universety Relations and head of the Development Office, said that restricted donations should be included in the University budget. If these funds were to be included, the Development Office would have raised 18.12% of last year's income.

Morosky said that the reports that his office raises only two percent of the budget imply that the remaining 98% of the budget comes from the students' pocketbooks. "The 98% figure only antagonizes the students," he said.

Murray said the 98% is "student related sources, which include tuition and fees, room and board, athletics, the bookstore, and all other sources of revenue."

Dr. William W. Baker of the Senate Budget Committee feels that the Development Office could be doing a better job of bringing money into the school. He suggested that the office might be able to do better if they had a bigger staff or a bigger budget. The Villanova University Development Office operates with a staff one half the size of that of a comparable institution of the same size.

Rev. George F. Riley, O.S.A. vice president for University relations said that of 240 Catholic colleges, Villanova will be one of the top ten fund raisers for this year. Riley also noted that his department's budget has never run at a deficit.

Murray said, "You see only in the budget, unrestricted funds where applied towards the current year's operations. The Development Office has a job of raising endowments, restricted gifts, and government grants also."

Morosky stated that $7,651,253 in cash and stocks has been received toward the $8 million goal of the Covenant Campaign. $8.4 million has been pledged.

Rev. George F. Burnell, O.S.A., vice president for financial affairs said that the Development Office is "doing a fine job. Could they do better? Sure, everybody could."

Union President Elected

By BILL DWYER

Chris Arendt was elected the new president of the Villanova Union in an election held last week.

A junior accounting major, Arendt has been a member of the union for over three years. Just prior to his election as president, he held the position of Secretary-Treasurer. Arendt is also a member of Villanova's N.R.O.T.C. unit.

Arendt is looking forward to the moving of the union offices from Dougherty to the new Connelly Center. "I think that the move will give us more room to spread out and through that better serve the students," said Arendt. "I just hope that the move will not cut us off from the other organizations in Dougherty," he said.

Arendt hopes to increase programming since there will be more space available in the new center. "We have been having a little bit of trouble in our room assignments," he stated, "but I hope to develop a good working relationship with the center staff in order to maximize our programming efforts."

"We will continue to run coffee houses in the new center utilizing the rathskeller until the University is able to secure a liquor license," said Arendt. He feels that the new facilities will encourage a better turnout at activities since it will lend a nicer atmosphere. Since Arendt is on the University Alcohol Policy Committee, he hopes to lend a hand in deciding the uses of the new rathskeller. He thinks that the L.C.B. has to let up on the pressure before the University can make steps towards a more liberal alcohol policy.

Arendt feels that Jack O'Brien and Lucy Gorski should be a great help in his acclaimation to the new position. "They are a constant source in input and advice," states Arendt. They help us with new ideas from their background in programming and act as our go-between with the administration."

"I feel that they really save us a lot of time by showing us the most efficient way to get something done," said Arendt.

"My main goal is to promote a new unity between campus organizations." "It seems as though people have a negative attitude toward the Union and I'd like to change that," said Arendt. He feels that the Union can only be what the students make it. "I extend an open invitation to all students to come share their ideas with us," concluded Arendt.

Union

detoured and therefore improving Villanova, Berquist stated.

An automatic tuition increase will not necessarily follow from the move, Berquist commented, saying that "tuition may rise but high inflation and decline in enrollment will have a major effect on the increase. It is not the faculty's purpose to burden the University or the students because of this move."

Stated Dr. Berquist, "this new policy is intended to be viewed as a modest reorganization of the University's priorities. It shouldn't produce any unrest because the faculty's ultimate concern is to be reasonable and provide interest in the University. We hope that this unionization would only act as a strengthener for Villanova."

Faculty Collective Bargaining

A Right to Participate

Next Thursday and Friday, Villanova's faculty will decide whether to use collective bargaining as a means of negotiating salaries and fringe benefits with the University.

Some, including the student body president, have expressed negative views on the subject. They claim that collective bargaining, by giving faculty power to negotiate their salaries, will mean a worsened financial condition for the University and the students.

Envisioning picket lines, and group repression, they claim that university professors do not belong in a union, of all things.

The editors of The Villanovan feel, however, that the faculty having a right to participate in the decision making processes of the university would be beneficial.

First, faculty and students share a mutual vested interest in maintaining a quality education at this university. The faculty's jobs, and our educations could be improved if we had more power in decision making processes. We can only speculate that if faculty members are assured of receiving commensurate pay and benefits for their work, their work and as educators will improve accordingly.

The argument that spiraling tuition would be the result of increases in faculty salaries needs substantiation. What is a fact is that tuition has risen each year, as faculty salaries have dropped. These two problems do not make for a vis-a-vis conflict between students and faculty. The root of the two problems is one in the same. The fund-raising and money management practices of the university need greatly to be renovated.

This will never happen unless there is some representation, some force shown from the elements that make this a school: the faculty and the students.

One method of representation we have is the University Senate. With its composition of faculty, students, and administration, it possesses a great potential; and we are fortunate to have this forum where our voices may be heard.

But year after year, the Senate recommendations on the budget are revised or ignored by the Board of Trustees. Last year, the Senate never approved the budget. This year, the Senate never approved priority recommendations for the making up of the budget. And all in all, the Senate can only make recommendations.

Collective bargaining would force real negotiation with the administration, and real action in the areas of finance and development.

Collective bargaining for the faculty would force some real negotiation with the administration, and real action in the areas of finance and development. This could only be beneficial to the students.

The faculty should have a voice in the university decision making processes. After all, their goals are not wholly contrary to ours.

Writer Responds

Dear Editor:

There seems to be a lack of understanding about the article I wrote on the draft (the Villanovan, February 8). For those who can't see the meaning of my article (and there seem to be a great many) I will try to clarify it for you now.

First of all, the title of the column that the article appeared in was "Campus Comedy" in the features section; it was not an editorial. Anything written should make people think, and one of their first thoughts should be "why was this written?" Articles such as mine are presented in such a way as to facilitate the thought process. The article showed a viewpoint on an upcoming war. The absurdity in my article (drafting senior citizens, for example) was meant to reflect the absurdity of another war. I do not see how this can be considered a lax attitude on the subject.

I enjoy listening to the opinions of others, but Andrew A. King seems to imply that I have no right expressing my opinion in the United States and should leave. How is this any better than Russia? The right to free speech is guaranteed in the Bill of Rights, and I intend to express mine now.

I have worked every summer in two jobs and held down a part time job through three years of college. I have paid taxes on the money I earned, taxes that pay in part for the NROTC's education. I pay for my own education and books. I can't afford to travel. My taxes pay for the ROTC'S vacations in Fort Lauderdale and Europe. All they have to do is "wear a uniform for two hours a week and get a haircut." I have paid for my right to an opinion.

The fervor over the draft came about with Russia's move toward the Persian Gulf. This is disadvantageous to us because of our self imposed dependency on oil. A war would be fought for the oil companies, not for ideals. Russia knows they have us over a barrel and that the draft won't have any short term effect on their actions. They have 1600 warships in the Persian Gulf; we have 500. They have upwards of 100,000 troops in Afghanistan; we have 1800 marines in the area on a ship. We have backed ourselves into a nuclear war. Even is a war started as a conventional war, one conventional bomb dropped on a nuclear power plant would cause massive destruction in the United States. We'd all be dead. There wouldn't be any future generations to pick up the pieces. One last question: Russians are not the only ones capable of looting and raping. Have we that easily forgotten My Lai?

Sincerely yours,
Brian Bulnewicz

Editorial Reaction

Dear Editor:

In reference to the editorial in the February 15 issue of the Villanovan titled "Only Then Will Women Serve" I would like to make a few comments.

The author of this article proposes that women should not serve in the armed forces because women are not properly represented in the government. Although it is true that there has never been a female president, nor is one likely in the near future; there are no laws to prevent it. It has been traditional that men have held this office. This has been accepted by men as well as women. After all, women hold over 50% of the voting power in this country. Passage of ERA would have no effect on this. Even so, it has been shown that more men are in favor of ERA than women.

The statement was made in this article that women should not take part in "man's historically consistent means of resolving conflict: violence." I object to this, men do not want war any more than women do. "War is hell" and men know it. I do not believe that women with positions of authority in these times would have had better results.

As far as applying political force on the world for peace, fine, but don't exclude men and don't push too hard, you might find yourself at war.

Respectfully,
Ken Giurlando

ROTC's React

Dear Editor:

I astonished at the statement that William Durland made in your February 8 issue (Christian Perspective, page 7) claiming that the ROTC shouldn't be on campus any more than an abortion clinic or a death chamber. As a Villanova student and NROTC Midshipman I feel that his was an unwarranted and irresponsible action. Just because I am in the program doesn't mean I have a desire to go to war as Mr. Durland seemed to suggest. The ROTC is a professional program designed to train successful naval officers. It doesn't by any means turn out a bunch of militant rowdies.

Furthermore the Unit's participation in the blood drive and the Toys For Tots program showed its concern for the University and the surrounding communities. Mr. Durland's statements showed a lack of insight and understanding. I think he should check his facts before cutting down a good program.

Respectfully,
Steven A. Dreiss
Midshipman 4th class

Dear Editor:

Looking on page 3 of the February 1st issue I was unable to find the "lethal Villanovans" Dr. Durland was referring to. In fact, after reading the rest of Dr. Durland's letter the only "lethal Villanovan" on campus I could think of was the letter's author. It is lethal thinking, such as that of Dr. Durland, that in this century has allowed for the rise of totalitarian governments and slaughter house masters like Hitler and Stalin. One should note that these leaders and their governments did not "make reference to Christianity as a motivating influence" when drafting their national policies.

How can there be a "Christian perspective" to removing ROTC from campus on the basis of its association with killing and death, when probably more people have died in the name of Christianity than for any other cause? If I recall correctly wasn't Christianity a "motivating influence" behind the Crusades?

Yes war is horrible, and we should strive for peace and harmony on earth. However, to reach the ideal we must admit to the reality and work with it. The reality of today is well illustrated in "The Shifting Balance of Military Power."

The road to peace has never been through appeasement, unilateral disarmament or negotiation from weakness. The entire history of mankind is precisely to the contrary. In light of this, the reinstatement of the draft can only be judged on the basis of its feasibility in an age of push-button warfare.

M. Woolley, '80

Dear Editor:

After reading two articles in the Villanovan expressing what I consider extreme viewpoints on current political issues; specifically, the question of the draft and the possible use of military force to protect American interests, I felt it necessary to present some type of analysis of these opinions. The first opinion was apparent in a column giving the views of a Villanova history professor, Dr. Reilly, while the second was a poor attempt of a religious studies teacher to argue the military is, by its nature, anti-Christian.

In analyzing Dr. Reilly's opinion about the draft I must admit that I have only those quotes which appeared in the newspaper to examine. However, I am not only questioning the statements themselves but I am also disturbed as to how any professor of history can reduce into a few absolute statements what appear to be rather complex international questions. The statement that "a war with the Soviet Union would necessarily be nuclear" assumes a conflict with the Soviet Union would be full scale and also that a conflict with the U.S.S.R. would result in war. Clearly the Cuban missile crisis (if the study of history has any worth) opposes this second assumption.

The statement also assumes that in an armed conflict with the U.S.S.R. one country would try to subjugate the other country. I will not argue (although I think it could be argued) that if this were the case the Soviet Union or U.S. would resort to nuclear weapons. However, would either side face the possiblity of nuclear extermination over control of the Persian Gulf? I don't think this question can be answered simply. Moreover is it necessarily true that a nuclear war would result in total mutual destruction? We (the U.S.) obviously believe this to be true with little or no civil defense. The Russians on the other hand are planning underground cities to protect large quantities of their population from such a war. Would the Russians sacrifice part of their population to destroy all of ours? I don't know but I think it's entirely possible. Also isn't it true that both sides in WWII were afraid of the consequences of using chemical and biological warfare? Couldn't this be the same with nuclear weapons today, resulting in a limited conventional war. I think all these are legitimate questions which cannot be resolved with oversimplified statements. Dr. Reilly's statement that the Russians would never go into Iran when they could buy the oil seems rather naive when Soviet views on expansions are brought into the picture. Also it seems just possible that the Soviets might go into Iran to prevent the U.S. from getting vital oil. When the possibility for a conventional war with the U.S.S.R. is accepted then I think there can be little doubt about the necessity for the draft in a strained international situation. Also whether nuclear or not, can it be doubted that increased defense spending (civilian defense and new technology) is not necessary. I don't pretend to have answers to complicated political questions because in most cases people can make only educated guesses. At least I do not have to resort to the age old scapegoat, oversimplification.

The second article which I wish to discuss deserves less consideration. The statement that all military are anti-Christian seems to imply that the United States which is predominately Christian should have let Hitler exterminate the Jews. If Dr. Durland is a true pacifist and believes we should allow the Russians to overrun us then I can disagree but cannot argue with him. If he is not, however, I am forced to the conclusion that his beliefs have blinded him to reality.

If either of these individuals have been misquoted or misrepresented by the Villanovan then I must apologize. If however these individuals truly believe what is apparent in the articles then I think they are both guilty of oversimplification of which I believe the dangers to be self-evident. Dr. Reilly oversimplifies politics while Dr. Durland oversimplifies Christian doctrine.

Strength Not Un-Christian

To the Editor:

I am deeply troubled that a member of the Villanova Religious Studies faculty has seen fit to castigate the Villanova Naval ROTC Unit and put them in the same category as "abortion clinics and death chambers." (letter 2/8/80) I think this puts a heavy burden of guilt on a group of fine young men and women who do not deserve it. These young people are no more killers than anyone else on campus. They are making a personal sacrifice which they hope will preserve peace. They want to do violence to no one. To condemn them as a group makes no more sense than to condemn all religionists for the crimes of Jim Jones.

It doesn't take a very extensive knowledge of history to be aware of what has happened to nations and entire civilizations which became too weak to defend themselves. The last time western nations allowed their self defense capabilities to reach a very low level, a barbaric force arose and subjected us to a terrible world war. This war caused tens of millions of combat related deaths and caused more than twleve million non-combatants to be executed.

I can only conclude with sadness that to have world peace it is necessary for some generous individuals to spend their time and efforts in our defense. As long as American youth are needed to defend us, I see it as being entirely appropriate that Villanova try to help these individuals by offering to them our unique Christian intellectual and moral perspective. Such an experience can only help them avoid some of the tragic excesses which occurred in Southeast Asia.

Let us all work and pray that we as a nation become worthy of the efforts of these young people. Rather than making unjustified accusations about each other, let's try to expend our talents and energies avoiding mistakes like those made in Vietnam. It is not un-Christian to be strong. The use of our strength is what needs moral control.

Sincerely yours,
W.J. Barnhurst

War Possibility

To the Editor:

Recently much has been written in your paper about the draft, NROTC, and the possibility of a "Nuclear War" between the United States and the Union of Soviet Socialists Republics. I would like to make a few brief comments on these.

The chance of a nuclear war seems impractical because one of the basic goals of the Soviet Union has been to make the entire world Communist. A nuclear war with the United States would appear to be a major deterrence in the goal.

Secondly, the NROTC programs are NOT designed to train Officers to make war. The NROTC program is designed to provide officers to fulfill the Navy's missions, of which there are four. These are Strategic Deterrence, Sea Control, Naval Presence, and Projection of Power. We do not have a mission to make war. Strategic deterrence is being powerful enough to keep enemies from attacking. Sea control is keeping the sea lanes open for our merchant fleet. Naval presence is to show our flag in foreign waters. Projection of power is the ability to defend the interest of the United States and her allies.

Thank you for your time.

Yours in Peace,
Midshipman 3/c Sean A. McGuckin USNR

Graduation

To the Editor:

Come May, a senior will graduate with honors. As a freshman, however, he was scatterbrained and happy-go-lucky. He wasted his first year at Villanova on privately organized social studies. Hardly ever did he open a book. After final exams, he received a letter from the dean who said: "You have failed every course. You may declare academic bankruptcy and in September, if you return here, it will be as a freshman." Moral: Those who do not learn from History are condemned to repeat it. And Philosophy, English, Spanish, and Mathematics.

Sincerely,
Rev. John P. O'Malley, O.S.A.
Dean of Arts and Sciences

Dead Hawk?

To the Editor,

In 1973 the Villanova Wildcat costume was kidnapped by a group from St. Joseph's College. Realizing this to be in the spirit of intercollegiate sport, Villanova acted maturely and responsibly. The Villanova Mascot went on anyway without his costume, but in a tuxedo, and turned in a stellar performance. Needless to say Villanova prevailed in the Big Five mismatch, 79-72.

It seems, however, that our city line counterparts have lost the meaning of that collegiate spirit and are unable to swallow a dose of their own medicine. After we relieved the St. Joe's Mascot of the burden of wearing such a monstrosity last week, the St. Joseph's students responded in the same immature and thoughtless manner that we have come to know and hate. We deeply regret the vandalism that has occurred for two reasons: First, innocent students have been made victims of a battle they were not even involved in, and secondly, this destruction indicates a distortion of the true Big Five rivalry.

We know that Villanova will once again rise to the occasion. Of course the team will win. And the students have sold out our allotment of tickets for the game. We are making the arrangements to return the Hawk in a manner so as to confirm what all Villanova students should already know: compared to the Wildcat, the Hawk will always be dead.

Signed,
The Hawk-Kidnappers

On January 3, a petition was filed with the National Labor Relations Board, requesting that they hold an election among the faculty at Villanova, to determine whether they supported the unionization of teachers in the University.

The petition was filed by the school chapter of the American Association of University Professors. They maintain that it would be beneficial to the school if the faculty could present its concerns through collective bargaining.

We asked some students and members of the faculty how they felt about the unionization of teachers at Villanova. Here are some of the responses:

I feel they do need the unionization in order to get better benefits, generally with fewer college students coming around they're going to need some better representation. But I think they should have to owe something too, in terms of teacher evaluations.

Robert McGowan, soph.

I don't think professionals should unionize. There's no reason for it. If there was a teachers union here on campus, I feel it would have to be coupled with a teacher's evaluation system.

Dick Kenney, senior

I feel that the teachers should be getting more from what they put into their jobs. Teacher's salaries are too low. They should be able to unionize in order to get more recognition.

Ann Stracquatonio, senior

I think it's good for them; I think they deserve the money, but I'm a little concerned with my tuition going up. If they do unionize, I hope they make some kind of allowance for teacher review.

Patrick O'Neill, junior

I think it depends on what their goals are going to be, when they do unionize. First of all, I think there is a little too much power in a union. But I think it is necessary, especially when they try to acquire better money and security.

Ava Guerra, senior

This is a pluralistic society and its good to have checks and balances. Maybe if it was a liable thing to have, maybe it would help offset any abuses by the administration and vice-versa.

Mr. Fred Magner nutrition teacher

Faculty

I don't think there is an advisary position sufficient to demand a union. Second of all, I think that if you're good at what you do, you can get as much as you possibly can get on your own. Thirdly, I guess I'm opposed to it because I'm old-fashioned. If I was a carpenter, I would want a union. But I'm a college teacher and I don't think it is necessary.

Mr. Dan Regan, philosophy

I'm definitely in favor of collective bargaining. I think there is a need to de-centralize power from the Board of Trustees and those who administer policy here. I think the faculty should be able to play a role, as it should be with the students, also. Collective bargaining is not just a question of salaries, but also a question of priorities in the university. So I think we should be able to take responsibility by participating in these decisions, and in order for a faculty voice to be effective, it has to be unified. An administration is so succeptable to economic considerations and this can be detrimental to the academic atmosphere. Therefore, I think the faculty should gain some power over the priorities of the university.

Dr. Fred Carrier, modern european history
professor

I think we should be represented by a union because I feel the faculty has important things to contribute to the policies of the administration, and I feel a union would be a step in the right direction.

Dr. Joseph DeCrema,
English professor

I feel that unions have not been designed for a private academic institution. It would be a different thing if we were a state-run institution, then the union is going to put pressure on the legislature, and the legislature would bid for increased allocations, which would come from the taxpayers money. The students would not have to pay for the consequences of increased allocations, as it would be in the case of Villanova. And besides that I am very satisfied with the way that the administration has dealt with the problems of salaries and free benefits for the faculty.

Dr. Jose R. de la Vega
professor of chemistry

As far as the position of unionization on campus, I'm not really sure. I think in some cases it can be good; some groups have definitely benefitted. Whether or not this university is ready for it, I can't be sure.

Dr. John Friede, biology teacher

I am opposed to it. I think it would result in a barrier between the administration and the faculty.

PERSONALITIES ON CAMPUS

Professor Tells Experience

By MELISSA ARAYA
and BRIAN BUINEWICZ

Dear Sir:
Just a few lines wondering how you are feeling and to let you know that I am thinking of you . . . It really hurt when you got it. The whole platoon felt so bad when we got back in. This platoon will always be the best. You made this platoon and I'm only proud to say I was among the men of 3rd platoon H-2-5. Your platoon sir! It will always be yours . . .

These are the words of former platoon sergeant Thomas Hoole, written in a letter to former Marine captain James Kirschke, now Dr. Kirschke of the Villanova English Department.

He grew up in South Philadelphia, so he's not a stranger to the area, a fact that would help save his life in the future. Kirschke attended LaSalle College in the Marines P.L.C. program and graduated in 1964. After college, he completed basic training at Fort Lejeune and travelled for the Marine Corps on goodwill cruises, seeing such places as the Caribbean and Europe until he was sent to Vietnam. At this time he was a first lieutenant in the Special Landing Force, a reserve unit for Vietnam. As a platoon commander, he completed four landings with the third and second fifth Marine division. He had just started another operation when he tripped a booby trap. In 80 days he would have finished his 13-month tour.

"...then on the 15 minute flight to DaNang Hospital my heart stopped beating for a minute or so and I could hear the doctor saying, 'stay with us, don't go to sleep.'"

A hand grenade, with the delay mechanism removed, was planted in the ground with a green monofilament line connected to the firing mechanism. Also planted in the ground was a 3.5 rocket round, which would detonate when the grenade was tripped.

Kirschke, who is currently writing a book about his experience entitled, "Not Going Home Alone," gave this account; "Ronald Hoole, who was with me when I was wounded, carried me off the battlefield. The two men closest to me, a radio operator and platoon corpsman, were killed. Fortunately, there were helicopters nearby with a doctor on board. The company corpsman administered two bottles of blood plasma before the copter came. Then on the 15 minute flight to DaNang Hospital my heart stopped beating for a minute or so and I could hear the doctor saying, 'Stay with us, don't go to sleep . . .' The doctor performed CPR. I must stress the fact that I never could have gotten through the experience without all the help I received from others."

Surgery to amputate his legs was delayed because he contracted double pneumonia but he had to undergo it or he would die of gangrene. Kirschke related, "There was a period when it seemed like the end of the world. I was aware that I was really close to death. If I hadn't received expert attention I might not have made it. I had multiple fractures on my legs — they amputated 17 days after I was wounded. I was really sick at the time, with double pneumonia, so they couldn't operate right away. As soon as the pneumonia cleared, the doctor came in to tell me they would have to amputate or I'd die of gangrene. That day I received 2 dozen letters from my troops. I was really high — my spirits had never been higher — and right then the doctor came in. Right at that time I felt I could take anything."

Kirschke's hospitalization continued at Philadelphia Naval Hospital, where many friends came to help him through his rehabilitation. While visiting other members of his outfit also at the hospital, he met his wife, a nurse at that time.

Sir, if you are going to be shipped to one of the hospitals in the states, wherever you are I'll go and see you. I never met an officer like you before. You would talk to me about your future just like I was one of you, an officer . . .

After spending 13 months in the hospital, Kirschke retired from the Marine Corps as a captain and resumed his studies, receiving his masters degree from Temple in 1970 and his PhD. in English in 1977. During this time, he began working on a book on Henry James, which is to be published this spring. This fall, Kirschke will begin teaching full time in the Villanova English Department. Some of his projected courses will be two freshman English courses and an upper level literature course.

Teaching has been immediately rewarding to me," states Kirschke. "Students on this campus are a pleasure to teach. Their friendliness to me is not surpassed anywhere else."

When questioned on his views concerning women and the draft, the crisis in Afghanistan, and the idea of registration, Kirschke was positive. "Basically, I think if we're going to have a draft that women should be drafted. In combat arms, I think that men would be more effective but at the same time I know that a number of women who are in better physical condition than some men I know. I think it should be an equal responsibility between the sexes."

He feels that Americans should have had some sense of the coming Soviet invasion of Afghanistan long before it actually occurred. "I think we may have known ahead of time that they would be invading — if you read books on Afghanistan, you can see that the Russians were investing and placing more and more posts of power in Afghanistan, slowly but consistently."

Concerning President Carter's proposal of draft registration, Kirschke commented, "I still think that as far as it goes, ours is the best country to live in. We don't need barbed wire to keep citizens in. The fact that we have freedom to come and go tells us a lot about our system."

"I personally feel that it's the prudent thing to do at this time. (registration). If the people in a country don't want to defend it, then it's not worth defending. The Russians have twice as many soldiers in Afghanistan right now than we had in the Marine Corps when I was in the service."

Kirschke is a low-key man with a great spirit of understanding and sensitivity. He continually stresses the role of others in helping him get through his ordeal. He has overcome many obstacles, and when questioned on his feelings, he smiles and says, "I'm thankful for a second chance on life."

Graduate Conducts Solar Tests

By SHARON WINTERS

Gerard F. Jones, a 1972 graduate of Villanova, is currently employing two solar energy collectors, which are mounted on the roof of Tolentine Hall, as an educational tool. Students in the mechanical engineering laboratory course are gathering data from the devices. This purpose is the primary function of the system; but, Jones views the collectors as filling a "three-tiered purpose." The data collected can be utilized in the community. The third purpose of the collectors would be to eventually make them available for research by students, faculty and graduate students.

The collectors were purchased and installed approximately six years ago. One collector is made of copper and was obtained from the Revere Company; the other is aluminum from Pittsburgh Plate Glass. When Jones came to Villanova in 1978 he revamped the system so that the collectors could be tested for their thermal performance.

Two devices are being utilized to track the efficiency of the energy system. A pyranometer, an instrument to measure total solar radiation on a horizontal surface, and an ambient temperature sensor are being used to monitor the system on a continuous basis.

The flat plate collectors are approximately three feet wide, six feet long and three inches deep; they appear to be large, shallow boxes. The collectors are covered with a sheet of double strength window glass. Inside the "boxes" are metal tubes placed lengthwise, painted black to absorb solar heat.

A solution of 50 percent water and 50 percent antifreeze is pumped into the bottom of the collors. The heat of the sun causes the fluid to rise in the tubes to the top of the collector; finally, the fluid exits from a tube at the top of the collector.

One of the tests involves the speed at which the fluid is pumped into the collectors. The ideal is to obtain the optimum speed that is the most efficient for heating the most fluid.

Gerald R. Jones explains some of the equipment for the solar panels in Tolentine Hall.

The collectors are movable. Since the sun's rays hit the surface of the earth at various angles depending on the latitude, the devices must be angled to catch the most energy. At this latitude, a 50 degree angle is best for winter and a 30 degree angle should be used for summer.

Inside Tolentine, a room contains monitoring equipment for the sensors (pyranometer and ambient temperature sensor) and several other devices. A pump, a rotometer, a shell-and-tube heat exchanger and a constant temperature bath are utilized to handle the fluid when it is not in the collectors. The pump creates the water measured by the roto-meter through the collectors. The heat exchanger cools the water from the collectors; the system is set up for data collection and not actual use so the heat needs to be siphoned off. The correct entry temperature for the fluid to the collectors is obtained through the use of the constant temperature bath.

Gerard Jones was integral in the designing of the University of Pennsylvania solar house. This project involved a system which provided the energy needs of a house; solar flat plate collectors were used to provide space and water heating. Jones is currently a doctoral candidate at the University of Pennsylvania; he expects to complete his work in June.

Club Corner

Dillinger's Swings

By BETH WHITE

Dillinger's 18 and Over Club really does "have something swinging," just like their T-shirts say, and they swing every week. The group of about 30 Villanova students meets weekly "at a local taproom" to discuss the past week's activities and to properly bring in the weekend. Members explain that the organization was founded in November of last year to honor John Dillinger, an American outlaw who was "always sold short." Dillinger's "shrine" is in Washington D.C., near the Smithsonian Institute, and the group is planning a road trip to the final tribute to their idol.

Dillinger's has also arranged a trip to Fort Lauderdale for their members' recreational pleasure, chartering a flight and hotel exclusively for the group.

But Dillinger's 18 and Over Club has more than just social relevance. "We enjoy the good life and know how to have a good time," says one member, "but we also discuss matters of international importance, especially which imported beer we should order for next week!"

There are also psychological benefits to the Friday afternoon ritual. "Basically it's a good time to blow off steam from the week," explained another member, "and that's called anxiety reduction."

The spirit of Dillinger's 18 and over club invades every part of the University.

The club survives a steady diet of The Doobie Brothers and P.B.R., and their favorite toast is "to the excitable little boy in all of us" from Warren Zevon's Excitable Boy album. And from the looks of their weekly meetings, there's a lot of "excitable little boys" in Dillinger's 18 and Over Club.

Any one can join Dillinger's; the only requirements are a desire for fun and a strong and flexible elbow. The cost is minimal, and all dues are used to provide "refreshments" for club meetings. To join, just look for someone wearing the distinguished red Dillinger's T-shirt for information.

Marathon for MARC

By GINGER FANNON

This past weekend St. Mary's gym was the sight of the SPE Volleyball Marathon. It began Friday night at 7 p.m. and lasted until Saturday night at 7 p.m.

The fraternity raised $500 for the Montgomery Association for Retarded Citizens (MARC). The marathon was supported by many local businesses, including: Dunkin Donuts, Bottle and Can, Wayne Beverage and the Villanova Food Service. It was also backed by many student organizations, fraternities, sororities and various male and female dorms.

According to Phil Brochu and Steve Fuga, both members of SPE, "the students as a whole showed a lot of support, and it was with their help that the marathon was such a success." Brochu and Fuga also gave a lot of credit for its success to Norm Vetter, SPE's activities chairman. "He really made everything come off as planned," they said.

The marathon was well-run with two teams on the court every hour. There was a member of SPE on the court during all 24 hours.

At one point some of the children from MARC came to watch the game. This proved to be all the motivation the players needed to continue and make it all seem worthwhile.

University II Returns

By BETTY RUTKOWSKI

"University II has no grades, no credits, and no one to please but the participants themselves." This description starts off the catalogue for University II, a student run program coordinated by the Villanova Union.

University II, formerly called the Free University, offers informal classes on various subjects ranging from Ballroom Dancing to Macrame to Pharmaceutical Administration.

Classes are taught by Villanova faculty, students, and people from the local community.

Edward Keating is included in the faculty this semester. He is a well-known pharmacist and lecturer from Duquesne University.

According to Rick McNally, coordinator of the program, the classes will begin the first week after Spring Break and continue as long as the individual course finds it necessary, meeting nights and weekends.

The courses are open to all students, faculty and administration of Villanova University.

Tom Shortell, chairperson, says "We're looking for it to be a big success. All who have participated before have gotten a lot out of the program, and really enjoyed it."

Registration is being held on February 25, 26 and 27 in the West Lounge from 10:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. A registration fee of one dollar is required, along with a current Villanova University identification card.

Beth Lieve, recruitment chairperson, is optimistic about the program. "I think anyone that gets involved in University II will not be disappointed."

Senate Elections Upcoming

In the near future it will be election time at Villanova University. Students of the University will be called upon to elect the leaders of their college on the University Senate. Currently there are twelve students on the Senate, all of which will be leaving office on May 1, 1980. This year's students consist of David Blachly and lone junior Henry Amoroso, who represent the College of Commerce and Finance. Mark Zappy, Tony Cofone, and David Dear represent Arts with Paul Reuscher representing Sciences of the Liberal Arts & Sciences College. Marty Badiewitz represents the college of Engineering and Mignon Miller, Nursing College. John McKenna, quite active on the day time undergraduate level, represents the University College. John Sparks, the Law School, and Brian Haggert, Graduate School are also members of the student caucus. The twelfth member of the caucus is P.J. Winterhalter, who represents all students and sits on the Villanova University Senate ex-officio as Student Body President of the University. These students are your representatives to the policy making decisions being conducted at Villanova University this year. All twelve officers will be moving on to bigger and hopefully better things in the near future. Immediately after Spring Break campaigning will commence and new leaders of the University will be born. Are you one of these leaders?

The Senators face perhaps their most important task of this academic year this afternoon in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall. The Villanova University Budget is on the agenda and is seeking the Senate's endorsement. It is highly recommended that all students of the University attend this meeting. The amount that you will pay for tuition, room and board will be discussed. If you would like to be heard — Attend and show your support!

In the next week before Spring Break there will be a survey conducted to question SENIORS as to what they would like to see included in Senior Week at Villanova. If you have any suggestions and do not receive a poll, please share your ideas with us. Stop by the SGA office any time and let Vickie Colonna know what YOU think.

The Legal Information Service available to all students is now open. Its office is temporarily located in the Student Government Association office, Room 204 Dougherty Hall. If you have any legal problems concerning tenant relations perhaps we could help you.

The STUDENT GOVERNMENT ASSOCIATION is here to help you. If you have a problem or complaint, if you would like to see something changed, come and see us. We know where to go, who to see, and if it all is really feasible. We are always willing to try. We are able and willing to help. LET US.

There will be a meeting of the Executive Committee of the SGA on Tuesday, February 26, 1980, at 7 p.m. in the SGA office.

The STUDENT GOVERNMENT ASSOCIATION and the Office of the STUDENT BODY PRESIDENT would like to pause a moment and wish everyone a warm and relaxing Spring Break wherever it may take you.

Cabin Fever

We are about to enter the fourth week of February. At Villanova this means different things to different people. To professors it means mid-terms; to most students it means Cabin Fever.

What is Cabin Fever? It is a strange phenomenon with the following symptoms:

1. Whenever the sun shines it is easier to think of reasons not to go to class than to go.
2. You consider contemplating the life of the sparrow outside your window as having more importance than tomorrow's philosophy test.
3. The library suddenly becomes an abandoned building.
4. Kennedy Mall becomes inexplicably crowded.
5. Designer sweatsuits replace designer jeans as the most popular clothing on campus.
6. R.O.T.C. hair gets shorter.

What, you may ask, is the cure? Modern Science has come up with the answer. Lots of sun and outdoor activity during Spring Break. Good Luck! Have Fun!!

LEO KOLETAS

Ah, Spring!

Spring is coming! Along with Spring, Spring Fever Week is on its way. April 11-17 will be a fun-filled week celebrating one of the best seasons of the year. What do you do during Spring Fever Week? HAVE FUN!! This is a week in which all the organizations on Villanova's campus come together to plan a series of events for ALL students. Of course, the Association of Commuter Students is very interested in being involved in the planning of Spring Fever Week.

Presently, the A.C.S. is tentatively planning to sponsor a concert by a local band. The A.C.S. is also open to any suggestions to other programs or events that you would like to see held during Spring Fever Week. This is a week planned for the enjoyment of EVERY student at Villanova. So, if you have any ideas, tell an A.C.S. member or leave a message in the A.C.S. office. Better still, attend the next Spring Fever Week meeting (look for signs to tell you when and where). C'mon commuters get involved! Don't get shafted again. Catch the Fever and have a blast!

Resident Services

Resident Services

As a follow-up to the article printed in last week's RSA section of the Villanovan, two members of the executive committee, Shawn Sullivan and myself, met with Director of Food Services Mr. Les Gies and the Dietician, Mrs. Nichols, to discuss recent complaints received by the RSA concerning the service and food in the dining halls — particularly Stanford and Dougherty. Mr. Gies was very open, responsive and cooperative in these regards listening to our complaints and allowing us to tour these two cafeterias inspecting silverware and glasses at random. He also took us on a tour of Dougherty cafeteria explaining its operation.

Regarding the quality of the food being served in all cafeterias, Mr. Gies stated that the quality has not changed in the last 15 years. All food served is Grade 'A' quality with most of it being used the day of or the day after delivery. He showed us the purchasing manual used when buying food which states specifications which all food must meet before being purchased. Mrs. Nichols offered to show us menus for three weeks in advance in order for us to make suggestions as to which entrees to serve together and which we thought were bad combinations. She explained that most meals are on a five week rotating basis with the exceptions of steak and roast beef which are served every week. She is willing to accept any suggestions we may have and will try to accommodate them if at all possible.

When the complaint about dirty silverware and glasses was raised, Mr. Gies took us to the cafeterias in order that we might inspect the silver and glasses to be used for that meal. He explained the procedure for dishwashing and when some dirty utensils were found in Stanford cafeteria, he checked into the matter. Most spots on glasses are due to water and handling not to poor washing.

Finally, we toured Dougherty and learned of its operations. Many people with many different jobs that must be performed properly and within a certain time period go into the preparation of each meal for residents. Not until you actually see the kitchens do you appreciate this.

Mr. Gies stated that Food Services is in the business to serve the students. He certainly was very helpful to us and we thank him for his time and concern. If you have any specific complaints or suggestions, please talk to Shawn or myself and we will bring them to the attention of Mr. Gies and or Mrs. Nichols.

The Ongoing Saga of Fred

Warner Joins Terrorists

(JP)-VILLANOVA, PA. — Fred Warner, a traffic reporter for Villanova University's campus radio station, W.K.V.U., has reportedly joined a terrorist group called the Siamese Liberation Army and robbed the Campus Information Center (C.I.C.) of an undisclosed amount of money.

Fred was apparently shot down on Friday, February 8, during one of his regular morning broadcasts from WKVU CHOPPER 1. Late Sunday night, February 10, a messenger dropped off a tape at W.K.V.U. on which Fred said that he had been kidnapped.

There had been no news about Fred from the kidnappers for over a week. But on Monday, February 18, Fred shocked the station when he called. According to one station member, "I could hear that he was on a helicopter — and there was this real radical music in the background." Warner said that he had left the station of his own free will. He went on to say that the station was a dictatorship, and that it was run by "a bunch of two-faced, power hungry, egotistical, fascist pigs." Warner also verbally attacked the other organizations on campus, ranging from the Union to the Villanovans For Life.

But the real shock came on Thursday (yesterday) when a helicopter (with "S.L.A." painted on the side of it) landed on Austin Field at approximately 7:50 a.m. Three people got out of the chopper, ran into Dougherty Hall, and up to the second floor to Jack O'Brien's office.

Jack, the Assistant Program Director of the Villanova Union, told the story of what happened: "Well, I was just sitting there having my morning cup of coffee when these three people kicked my door down, grabbed me, took me down to the C.I.C. on the first floor, and made me open the door. Then this one guy wearing an Orioles batting helmet, a vest, and a tie told me to give him all the money in the cash register. The weird thing was that when he left with the other two, he mumbled something to me about a traffic jam on Rt. 320 — and to avoid it. I don't know." Warner and his partners escaped, via their helicopter, with an undisclosed amount of money.

Now, with the recent developments, some authorities think that Fred has been brainwashed. This would explain why Fred has suddenly "joined" such a radical group as the S.L.A. and his recent appearance wearing a Baltimore Orioles batting helmet (instead of his usual N.Y. Yankees cap) and only a vest and tie (Fred never goes out without wearing a three piece suit). Some sources say that Fred has gone crazy. Whatever the case, stay tuned to 640 a.m., W.K.V.U. for full coverage of this tragedy.

"It was run by a bunch of two-faced, power hungry, egotistical, fascist pigs."

A picture taken by the hidden camera in the C.I.C. yesterday. Fred Warner (radically dressed in a vest, tie, and Orioles batting helmet) held up Jack O'Brien (with coffee) for an undisclosed amount of money.

Center for Concern

Peace and Justice Quiz

One interest of the Center for Concern is the need for peace and justice education on the collegiate level.

Peace and justice education is a process through which students become open and empathetic to other peoples and cultures, develop ordering and analytical skills for making judgments about crucial international issues in the light of ethical values, and express their concerns through effective political and social involvement.

Some questions that promote thought on the issues of peace and justice are these:

1. About what percentage of the persons in the world who cannot read or write are over 15 years old?
   a. 10 percent
   b. 25 percent
   c. 50 percent
   d. 75 percent
2. About what percentage of the world's population are non-white?
   a. 40 percent
   b. 50 percent
   c. 60 percent
   d. 70 percent
3. Of the world's population, about what percentage earn less than $1,000 per year?
   a. 40 percent
   b. 50 percent
   c. 60 percent
   d. 70 percent
4. In the U.S., there is about one doctor for every 620 persons; in Indonesia, here is about one doctor for every
   a. 300
   b. 3,000
   c. 30,000
   d. 300,000
5. The average American annually consumes energy resources about equal to 9,600 kilograms. The world average is
   a. 1,600 kg.
   b. 3,200 kg.
   c. 6,400 kg.
   d. 7,600 kg.
6. About 50 percent of the scientific research being done in the world is related to the military and space exploration. Approximately what percentage is being devoted to problems of food production, health and welfare?
   a. 1 percent
   b. 10 percent
   c. 25 percent
   d. 50 percent

The answers are: 1.-c, 2.-d, 3.-d, 4.-d, 5.-a, 6.-2.

Did you see that P.J. Winterhalter is restructuring the student government organizations to make the SGA "a working, vital organization"... heh, heh, heh... does this mean P.J.'s admitting that in the past the SGA hasn't been working and vital?... the organization that brought us CATCH-19? ... last Friday the Senate voted on a motion to offer a Master of Human Organization Science program here ... the first honorary recipient of this degree will be the registrar's office for those drop-and-add lines ... at the same meeting the Academic Policy Committee motioned for the University to adopt the plus/minus grading system in an attempt to combat grade inflation ... the student senators vetoed the motion, stating they could deflate their grades without any help from the administration ... there was a meeting this past Monday for the Villanovans for Ted Kennedy ... if you missed the meeting, mass cards are still being accepted ... tsk, tsk to Dr. Jim Bean of our psychology department for having suggested something as ludicrous as a benefit concert on our campus ... this has been a big year for P.J. Winterhalter: in October he met the Pope and last week he met President Carter ... now if only he could get in to see Father Driscoll ... by now most people have firmed up their travel plans for spring break ... the nurses will be in Florida ... the religious studies majors will be in Appalachia ... all 19 and 20 year-olds will be in Afghanistan ... the administration will be wherever our tuition can afford to send them ... Lent, that time of fasting and doing corporal works of mercy, is here ... for the resident students, fasting will be a pleasure ... works of mercy might include voting for Dr. Logue ... or attending a Union event ... or listening to WKVU ... or going out with a DKN girl ... "remember man that you are dust and unto dust you shall return" ... top of the morning to you, too, Father ... sounds like a recruiting slogan for ROTC

P.J. Winterhalter plus other invited guests met President Carter last weekend ... They were Dopey, Sleepy, Doc, Grumpy, Happy, Sneezy and Bashful ... NRC claims nuclear energy is safe ... and Orientation won't cause diabetes ... the NROTC unit has received nuclear warheads for their trick rifles ... reported targets are the Villanovan office and the Religious Studies Department ... freshmen and sophomores were seen on campus preparing for the 100 days party ... we're sorry to say we've added two more to the number ... there's 583 on campus now ... don't worry ... the midterms aren't bad ... it's the midterm grades that kill you ... three freshmen showed up for the Senior Week meeting ... we at WKWC were honored recently with a 65c tour of NTH ... from the front door to the back door ... who owns those cute animals with the hairless tails anyway? ... seriously, it's the only place we've seen with blue fuzzy yogurt ... they have all the essentials ... an electric keg cooler and a bar ... why were fourteen Villanovans in the Sleep-E-Hollow motel? ... who knows ... who cares

Moriarity: . . Like Home

By DIANE SWEENEY

When is a dorm not a dorm? When it is a home! In that case, Moriarity Hall is not a dorm, but rather, the home of the forty-six freshmen girls who live there. All the girls seem to agree that they are very close and are more like a family than simply like neighbors.

Originally used by the seminarians, Moriarity was renovated, and last semester was utilized as a dorm for the first time. Although its current residents would love to live there next year, it is reserved for incoming freshmen girls. Virtually every girl from Moriarity feels that being with other freshmen made adjusting to college easier, though some admit that they did not meet as many people as they would have, had they been in another larger dorm.

Composed of double rooms, plus three singles, Moriarity also has a lounge, two study rooms, and a huge backyard, in which the girls held a barbecue last semester.

One of the major events in Moriarity last semester was their hugely successful "crush" party. Each girl invited two crushees (that's a 2 to 1 ratio, girls) and the only "complaint" to be heard was "It was too crowded."

If breaking into college can be this enjoyable, there are going to be quite a few happy incoming freshmen, who are bound to keep up the crush party tradition and the family atmosphere. Just imagine — ninety-two invitations will go out for the next crush party, so don't pass up any opportunity to meet a girl from Moriarity. (Not to neglect Sheehan Hall; we have good parties, too).

with the President.

When asked about the general benefits of the conference for both himself and the Student Government Association, Winterhalter had this remark: "I now know how other universities stand on the draft. I would say 50% are vehemently opposed to it. I feel that the atmosphere here on campus is kind of a complacent opposition. I feel that the students here are better educated to the fact that it is not a draft, but a mere registration, and are therefore not exhibiting the 1960 type movements against the draft."

Winterhalter explained that he felt the Carter administration was interested in getting the point across of what their official stance was on the reindoctrination of the proposed Selective Service, and also how the students felt, not only about the draft, but for all domestic and foreign policy.

He continued, "A lot of good things came out of it. Even though the whole purpose was centered on spurring students behind the President. It was really an enlightening experience for me, the S.G.A. as a whole, and for Villanova University."

fraternity, Dave "Sparky" Lyle stated that "The person responsible for meeting reorganizational guidelines didn't inform the rest of the fraternity" as to the expectations of the administration, and was therefore in effect responsible for the suspension of the fraternity.

"I think the fraternity is looking for disciplined people," said Dean Martin, people like David Lyle who place emphasis on the ability of the brotherhood to involve positive community actions (such as helping the old and disabled) in their pledging requirements. For this reason I have "opted to suspend the group for a period of two years," and thus provide an opportunity for their national chapter to return to the Villanova campus and begin again.

Views on Bargaining

All Things Become Negotiable

By George J. Cherba
Richard E. Keane
John J. Tomlinson
Thomas H. Doyle

We are opposed to a union representing the faculty at Villanova for several reasons.

The obvious conflict with professionalism establishes itself at once. Our duties to our students take precedence over our rights. To suggest that these will never conflict is to ignore the basis of collective bargaining. It is an adverse situation and no where is the student heard.

Economically all data show that Villanova is equal to like schools in salary and benefits paid to the faculty.

There is peer review in faculty appointments and promotions; there is faculty participation in the selection of department chairpersons; the faculty, through existing channels, has a voice in the budget process and in University priorities.

It seems strange that we would be asked to submit these along with other important benefits such as tuition remission for faculty children and spouses, retirement and health plans to the bargaining process. There can be no doubt that this will happen because as the union continues to remind everyone, "all things become negotiable."

Thus, the union or those few in its power heirarchy, would initially be deciding what it is we lose. We would no doubt be given optimistic promises that it would all be gained back in future years along with even greater benefits.

The Obvious Conflict With Professionalism Establishes Itself at Once

It would be ludicrous to place ourselves in such a position. We have gained steadily without the costly bureaucratic burdens of a union.

The stated purposes of the union remain as vague as the reasons given for its adoption. Nor were such made any more clear at the recent Faculty Assembly Meeting; confronted with repeated direct questions, representatives of this group responded only with generalities, "we can do it more effectively if you submit your fate to us."

There is in every group, those to whom the task of directing the affairs of others is sweet indeed. That their direction is unnecessary, unwanted and very likely harmful is of no moment to them. The thought of power is their stimulant. This then, appears to be the only reason for insisting on the unionization of this faculty. Clearly an economic case has not been made; we do participate in the selection, promotion and where necessary, grievances of our colleagues; we are involved in the governing, budgeting and decisions on priorities.

This faculty will not benefit through a union. The students and the University as a whole may very well suffer through the ever present possibility of a strike; the divisiveness that would be engendered within the faculty and the resulting problems of dual allegiance all dictate that we vote against union representation.

AAUP A Union of Professionals

By DR. NEIL BRENNAN ENGLISH DEPARTMENT

"Unions? Unions! I've hated unions all my life," the voice on the other side of the locker-room exclaimed. "Don't the faculty realize they'll be paying union dues next?"

When reporters for the Villanovan speak of the American Association of University Professors as a "union," I shake my head — but with sympathy. Deadlines have to be met, and at 20, a reporter thinks in terms of the familiar, and the AAUP is not yet familiar.

But when a faculty member twice as old speaks of voting "against unionization" — against the implementation of collective bargaining by the AAUP — he displays ignorance so grave as to call in question where he's been in recent years.

Collective bargaining! and the knee jerks to "Closed shop! Outside agitators! Union dues! Union bosses! Corruption! Who wants that?"

Precisely. No one.

The American Association of University Professors does not. It is an organization of professionals, not a trade union. It does not permit closed-shop practices or mandatory union dues. At no college or university where collective bargaining has been placed in its hands has there been a strike or a picket line.

At every university where the AAUP has been given a strong voice it has improved educational standards, working conditions, student-teacher relationships, grievance procedures, hiring policies, retirement programs. And that already includes Villanova.

"The AAUP is an organization of professionals, not a trade union."

When I joined the Villanova community nearly twenty years ago, the big issue was academic freedom. Shall any advocate of "communist" ideas or birth-control, for instance, be permitted to teach at Villanova?

Believing (with Cardinal Newman) that in the long run the University, the Church, and the Truth are best served by freedom of discussion, I joined the AAUP to support that belief. Now threats of dismissal for ideological nonconformity are almost forgotten.

Indeed, Villanova can be proud of having reversed itself, of fostering the conflict of ideas, of hiring Protestant ministers and rabbis to teach in its Department of Religious Studies, for instance, and of its consequently improved status in the world intellectual community.

Seven or eight years later, when the usual pinch made the $20 annual AAUP dues seem an item that could be cut, a new issue arose, that of tenure. The policy had been that six years of service plus promotion to associate professor were pre-conditions for granting tenure.

But the academic marketplace was changing. People with Harvard doctorates were beginning to stand, cap in hand, at every departmental door. Teachers who had served the community for years were threatened with loss of employment.

Though the president of the AAUP had been granted tenure (as I had), the AAUP took up that cause, and again the University came to accept the AAUP position, that tenure be granted to all that had served adequately over an extended period. In adopting the AAUP guidelines on tenure, the University not only rendered justice to many individuals but took a step that seems certain, in the long run, to benefit the community as a whole.

Now a majority of the members of the AAUP believe that the University will, in the long run, be improved by collective bargaining. Maybe they are wrong. Maybe the intermittent good spirit that exists between administration and faculty will be crushed. Maybe Professor X,Y or Z could do better negotiating by himself — better for himself, that is. Who knows?

Most of us care, however. And care for the truth. And do not care for willful ignorance. Nor for cynicism.

"What's in it for them? Money? Aren't they have-nots — wanting more?" On the contrary, the current leaders generally have received more promotions, more salary increases, more research grants than the average teacher at Villanova.

"I do better bargaining for myself?" So do the leaders of the local chapter, but obviously they feel also a collective responsibility, for their colleagues and the future of the university as a community.

"They're just hungry for power?" Look at the reality, for the sake of truth. Any member of the faculty may join the AAUP, it votes for its leaders annually, and if they prove corrupt or incompetent they can "throw the rascals out."

And if the whole experience of collective bargaining proves malodorous, the faculty can — and will — vote to throw it out the AAUP.

But right now the AAUP has a record of service to the community that warrants further trust. And truth in debate.

And part of that truth is that the University administration, having come to see the AAUP as reasonable and responsible, fears it less than some sauve qui peut members of the faculty do.

Believe me.

Power Needed in Crisis

By DR. FRED CARRIER
History Department

Villanova faculty will choose next week between collective power or no power. Students, and some faculty, seem frightened at the prospect that faculty may decide in favor of collective bargaining. It would be well for the campus as a whole to remind itself that the concept of democracy implies the sharing of power, not the concentration of decision-making in one or a few men, such as the Board of Trustees.

Why should Villanova remain aloof from a wider sharing of power? Especially at a university, where the faculty represent collective knowledge and attempt to convey that knowledge to the next generation, the merging of knowledge and power should be welcomed.

Why the need for collective bargaining now? Villanovans are caught in an economic crisis that is not of our making. The U.S. economy faces internal readjustments as a global redistribution of wealth occurs. Third World nations place a higher price on their raw materials, which means inflation for us; and a growing portion of the world is developing its own industry which reduces the demand for U.S. manufactures that seem overpriced. Also, the use of a growing portion of our resources for military purposes adds to inflation.

When this larger economic crisis impinges on us at Villanova, the faculty and staff find themselves in need of annual salary increases in order to maintain their standard of living. Students, in turn, are concerned over their annual tuition and board increases.

While higher salaries and higher tuition capture the limelight, other related problems are also vital. For example, the easiest way to save money would be to reduce the number of faculty. This can easily be done by increasing the size of classes while reducing the variety of offerings, a policy that has already begun of "retrenchment."

Economic gains from retrenchment are easy to measure, but harder to appraise is the "hardening of the arteries" that ensues as the faculty is no longer suffused with new blood. What, in addition, are the consequences to students of a shriveling curriculum? Thus, what might seem for the university to be a gain in economic well-being, could in time prove to be a slow deterioration in intellectual quality.

Villanovans are caught in an economic crisis that is not of our making.

What the economic pressures necessitate is the closer appraisal of priorities. In this regard, the faculty must play an increased role, for the quality of any university ultimately depends on its faculty.

Faculty have legitimate concern over their salaries and security. At the same time, faculty are also occupied in research, writing, offering new courses, and in other intellectual efforts which are a responsibility of their positions. Thus, they have interests beyond narrow economic ones. It is their responsibility to enlarge the intellectual and scholarly life of the campus and of the society in which Villanova exists.

It is a legitimate and effective way of participating in the choices that face the university for the faculty to act collectively. Such a role is implicit in the idea of a University Senate. Collective bargaining is simply a more effective way for a representative process of decision-making to take place.

Students have expressed a fear that faculty power may be used for narrow ends. That seems to place far too much faith that the concentration of power in the Board of Trustees will be wisely and generously used.

It is my hope that the faculty will show enough confidence in themselves to choose a larger responsibility in shaping the university's future. We should not be arrogant about this, for greater power means greater responsibility toward all. I, for one, remain conscious that we must also represent the students, for their best interests are also our interests. This means that economic gains for the faculty must not efface the intellectual goals which are vital to Villanova's future.

"Madwoman"- Too Sweet

By VINCENT HAUSMANN

The Temple University production of The Madwoman of Chaillot at the Tomlinson Theatre is basically a faithful rendition of Jean Giraudoux's 1946 satiric comedy which concerns itself with one woman and her follower's battle against evil oil prospectors and an interlocking board of directors.

The world of the cafe represents the "joi de vivre." It is a world of simple, elemental, colorful figures singing "La Polanaise" and dancing about.

Director Arthur Ketels sets the appropriately light and romantic tone of the play in the opening scene of the Parisienne cafe. A man juggles brightly colored pins, a cyclyst rides through the cafe ringing a bell. Soon, a free spirited woman (seemingly mad) donning scarfs and antiquated clothing makes an entrance — stage left.

Phil Meyer and Rosemary Gaffney in Temple University's production of "The Madwoman of Chaillot".

The main character — the Madwoman, Countess Aurelia (Rosemary Gaffney) and her followers frequent the cafe and revel in the playful atmosphere; however, this refuge is soon disturbed. Beside the juggler sits a cigar smoking board of directors noticeably uncomfortable with the life around them and plotting to level parts of Paris for oil. Soon after the board enters, the juggler loses a pin.

It is the materialistic board, the haters of individuality and play, that Giraudoux is indicting. The prosecutor who will voice her indictment is, of course, the Madwoman.

While the production does depend on the main character, support must be provided by other principal players. Allen Byrne is superb as the Prosecutor with a nose for oil and selective taste buds that can detect oil in the water supply.

Patricia Kalember as the good natured, shy Irma fares well as do the Madwoman's friends, particularly Mme. Gabrielle (Barbara Hipkiss). However, Phil Meyer as Pierre is stiff and would seem to do better in the role of a young board member. His performance is noticeably weak in comparison to the Madwoman's.

Rosemary Gaffney captures the wistful, eccentric nature of Countess Aurelia well. The Madwoman is a frivolous character but this does not stand in the way of her concern for humanity. In fact, her wistfulness is a remarkable asset and provides her with a "practical" (if not ethical) solution for the problem of evil in the world.

The joyous spring atmosphere is superbly captured by Clarence Hundley's set. Flowers, bright streamers, and cubist backdrops give it the decidedly French flavor. The Countess' cellar reflects her carefree spirit with feather boas and wardrobe thrown about. The set in Act II allows for improvisation which is characteristic of the Madwoman and her followers. A step landing becomes a courtroom stand, a writing desk a place where judgment will be passed on the materialistic moguls in the mock trial scene near the end of the play.

The music in the production, however, illustrates the basic problem with the play. The music should be light and French as it is most of the time, but at times it is too sweet and misplaced. It sounds more appropriate for an episode of Love Boat which the play resembles at times. The director, like Giradoux, finds difficulty in restraining emphasis on the sentimental and the happy ending. In all fairness the play is not meant to be serious. Only when it crosses the bridge from fantasy to reality does it seem artificial. Music at these times reinforce this artifically.

The Madwoman of Chaillot will be playing from Feb. 14-23 at Tomlinson Theater, 13th and Norris Sts. For information call 787-1122.

Oedipus at Vasey

As its second production of the spring season, Vasey Theatre of Villanova University will present the Philadelphia premier of a new translation of Sophocles' Oedipus the King. The show will run March 12-15, 19-22 at 8 p.m.

Philadelphia poet Stephen Berg and scholar Diskin Clay have combined their talents in this brilliant translation of the greatest tragedy western culture has known. Suspense, fear, and mystery pervade this ancient world of tribal ritualism and carnal desires. Power, sex, and political responsibility are the vehicles through which the primitive depths of the soul are revealed.

The play is being directed by Daniel Baker, a long time member of the theatre department faculty. Mr. Baker hopes to capture primitivism and ritualism in a manner reflecting the traditional Greek style of production. Major roles will be portrayed by three main actors with the remaining cast members making up the chorus.

Vasey Theatre is located at Lancaster and Ithan Avenues on the Villanova University campus. There is free parking across from the theatre, and group rates are available. For tickets or more information call the box office at 525-6288 or the theatre department office at 527-2100, ext. 340.

Captain Avenger Comes Alive

By JOE KING

Certainly the most damaging thing a person can do prior to viewing Hero at Large, a comedy starring John Ritter and Anne Archer, is to read some of the reviews currently circulating about it in the local tabloids. Speaking from personal experience, it is extremely difficult to enjoy this film if burdened with predisposed negative opinions implanted by these movie critics. (Movie reviewers are, in fact, notoriously untrustworthy people to begin with). True, the film's beginning is an agonizingly feeble attempt at humor, a development that compels the average moviegoer to amuse himself with sleep or meditation for the first 45 minutes or so. Oddly enough, it is likewise true that the remainder of the film is often funny on several levels. If audience reaction is any indicator of the film's impact, I will relate that I was not surprised to observe many members of the audience leave with smiling countenances and praiseworthy adjectives on their lips.

The storyline of Hero at Large revolves around the adventures and tribulations of a struggling young actor aptly portrayed by John Ritter of T.V.'s Three's Company fame. With his all-American looks, Ritter is often too "good" to be believed, but he has an uncanny knack for generating audience empathy and support. In an attempt to break into New York's acting environment, he accepts a promotional job for a movie dealing with the adventures of Captain Avenger (of comic strip fame) which has recently been released. He and 62 other young "actors" must suit up as the Captain and visit local shopping malls in order to sign autographs, impress the kids, and generally plug the new flick.

In one of the movie's funnier sequences, Ritter stops at a local deli for a gallon of milk on the way home from his ludicrous job as Captain Avenger. While he is there, two local delinquents rush in and attempt to rob the elderly couple who operate the store. Acting on impulse, Ritter throws off the trench coat which had been obscuring his Captain Avenger garb, and brazenly orders them to leave. Much to his surprise, the two would-be robbers become instantly flustered and flee in terror. The elated elderly couple subsequently relate this episode to the press, and the bogus Captain Avenger quickly becomes something of a cult-hero to the masses in New York, even though no one knows his true identity.

The capitalistic advertising firm which is promoting the movie eventually discovers that Ritter is the heroic Captain Avenger, and offer him numerous benefits if he will agree to participate in a series of staged "crimes" throughout the city which are designed to increase both the popular adoration of the Captain as well as their projected profit margin. After grappling with his conscience, Ritter compromises himself and agrees to the deception. Unfortunately, the hoax and the Captain's identity are revealed by an inquisitive T.V. reporter, and the city is outraged at the dream-shattering disclosure. Realizing that his name is slandered and his chances of becoming a world renowned actor are nil, Ritter packs his bags, and decides to leave the city in spite of the urgings of the woman he loves, played with biting sarcasm by newcomer Anne Archer. In the film's climactic scene, Ritter finally gets his chance to prove to the people of New York that he is the bona fide hero behind the artificial exterior of Captain Avenger. Granted the ending is thoroughly predictable; it is a happy one, and therefore satisfying nonetheless. In these times when the mainstream of cinema is characterized by a philosophy of unrestrained realism, it is heartening to encounter a film which deals with life in the simplified manner of a child's comic strip. In this sense, the film's appeal focuses on the child in all of its viewers.

John Ritter masquerading as Captian Avenger attempts a daring rescue in "Hero at Large".

Cruising Fails To Deliver

By CHRIS SLAWECKI

Cruising leaves much to be desired. As a concept, it holds awesome potential: a heterosexual policeman goes undercover to solicit the attentions of a sado-masochist homesexual killer, and his exposure to New York's gay world forces him to re-evaluate his own sexuality. I viewed all the controversy around the release of Cruising as inevitable, since a murder mystery about a gay sado-masochist has something in it to offend just about everyone. Now that I've seen the film, I wonder what all the shouting was about.

The development of what could have been a deeply personal, psychosexual drama is uninspired and leaves too many questions unanswered. The film only hints at anguish, which leaves Pacino more confused than tortured and the gay community more faceless than foreboding. The audience, like Pacino's wife, is left in limbo as to what her husband's involvement is in a grisly series of murders. Pacino plays his role quietly, almost whimsically, but the film gives him little opportunity for forcefulness.

There are fleeting instances when ideas and images effectively combine. The scene in which Pacino applies eyeliner and poses the rhetorical question "How would you like to disappear?" to his mirror-image is very meaningful in the context of personality crisis. And, the conversations between Pacino and his boss introduce a personal quality into what is so often portrayed as a dehumanizing relationship. But, as a film, Cruising falls short of the expectations provoked by its theme.

LOOT - Tired Plot; Good Acting

John Carpenter in the Pittsburgh Public Theater production of "Loot" at Annenberg Center.

By FRED PESCATORE

Loot, a British comedy, was very typical of this genre, including jokes that bordered on the ludicrous and ones that only a true Briton would understand.

The story opens on the day of the funeral of Mr. McLeavy's (played by Robert Burr) wife. The plot then unfolds very quickly while taking few unpredictable turns. We soon learn that Mr. McLeavy's son Hal is notorious as a thief, a ladies man and also, that his best friend is the next door undertaker — Dennis. It is then learned that the bank next door to the undertaker's is robbed; hence, the title Loot.

Here the obnoxious detective Truscott makes his appearance. The man's character is enough to grate on anyone's nerves. With the detective snooping around, the two boys need a new hiding place for the money. The windows where it was previously hidden, would no longer do. The next hiding place becomes the coffin. The coffin is loaded onto the hearse which on the way to the cemetery gets involved in an automobile accident. The coffin is brought back to the house where it began to fall apart from so much abuse. Without much more plot, the detective discovers the money in the coffin and it is here that the play takes an interesting turn of events. By this time, Fay was also in on the scheme so the three of them (Hal, Fay, and Dennis) offer a 25 percent share of the money to Truscott. Instead of arresting them on the spot, the detective accepts the money and Mr. McLeavy is charged with the robbery. The curtain closes with Fay and Dennis falling in love.

As you can see, this play has been done countless times under dozens of titles and there is only one reason why you should bother to go see it; and, that is the quality of the acting. The performances of Brenda Curtis; John Seidman; and John Carpenter, playing Fay, Hal, and Truscott respectively were nothing less than superb. Mr. Carpenter has obnoxiousness down to an art, and Ms. Curtis playing a young attractive nurse could seduce practically anyone into doing anything (involving seeing this play). John Seidman is also a very impressive attribute to this play and is worthy enough to keep an eye on.

Loot was written by Joe Orton and presented by the Pittsburgh Public Theater. It has a limited run at the Annenberg School Theater until February 24.

THE JAM

Setting Sons

By JERRY ARTH

There is a certain tendency in this country which leans toward musical snobbery. "If a band doesn't make it big here, then they can't be very good" seems to be the prevailing attitude for many listeners. Well, every once in a while, a band comes along with an album that's too good to ignore, even if it doesn't garner the popular support of America. The new release by The Jam, Setting Sons, is an album which probably won't make it to the charts in the U.S.; however, it is a superior record, and those who discover it will find a real gem.

The Jam is basically what could be termed a "mod" band. Much of their music is reminiscent of one of the greatest of the "mod" groups of the early 1960's, The Who. They are hugely concerned with the everyday problems of modern English society, and perhaps this is why they will have difficulty catching the American listening audience. The Jam is not just some band reviving an earlier style; they draw from other influences as well, including soul and R & B.

The tunes on Setting Sons are scathingly sarcastic criticisms of modern England. The album's single, "Eton Rifles," is already a big hit in the U.K., and deals with the social class war of that country and the frustration of being on the lower class side: "Thought you were smart when you took them on/But you didn't take a peep in their artillery room/All that rugby puts hair on your chest/What chance have you got against a tie and a crest." Most of the other songs on the album are equally pessimistic; "Little Boy Soldiers" is about dying for the "glory" of the now-defunct British Empire, and in a fashion very similar to the Beatles' "A Day in the Life," The Jam do "Smithers-Jones," the mundane life of the Mundane Man.

Setting Sons is a minor masterpiece, grating and raw. However, the fourth release by The Jam may prove to be still too "English" for American tastes. But its messages are universal, and its truly worth listening to.

Train Fare

Two slightly different magazines that you may have overlooked..

Omni

By STEVEN COMBS

The glossy hype that has made Penthouse so successful with those of us who appreciate the female form has now been applied to more technical desires. Omni is a magazine that combines popular mechanics and science fiction in a format that would put Hefner to shame. Omni is comparable to Penthouse not just because it is published by the same people but because the visual and emotional tone of the entire magazine is one of breathtaking discovery in an alluring, dangerous realm of self realization. The pictures and drawings are colorful, exciting and strange. The articles range from intelligent discussions of current scientific discoveries to odd sci-fi stories about future worlds.

"Continuum" is a monthly feature with short articles about research in every imaginable field. In the "Games" section Omni readers match wits on geometric puzzles, riddles, and puns. It is a subtle ego trip to read this magazine because it is obviously geared to smart people and if I'm reading it, I must be smart. This feeling does not arise by accident. Omni is one of the slickest, most enticing magazines around. The combination of stunning visual layout, high brow intellectualism, and mind blowing openness to new ideas makes ordinary reading material obsolete.

It is not the sheer quality of the writing that makes Omni succeed. Some of the stories are not well-written and editorial suggestions such as a raffle of space shuttle tickets, are sometimes down right silly. But the overall product and its packaging makes a fascinating

I don't mean to belittle the writing. Articles are well researched and usually make even the most technical areas interesting and readable. Sometimes the generalizations that are substituted for scientific explanations leave you wondering about the design behind it all. But Omni is very successful in its attempt to highlight explorations in divergent sciences with maximum pleasure and minimum effort.

Soldier of Fortune

By STEVEN COMBS

Remember Vietnam? Korea? World War II? Remember when life had a purpose even if death didn't? Soldier of Fortune remembers. Are you still looking for that last addition to your gun collection? How about a knuckle buster trench knife? Are you interested in the proper technique for silently slitting a sentry's throat? Rafael Lima is, and in Soldier of Fortune he shows you how.

This magazine is for three types of people; the professional soldier/murderer, the hard core paranoid/neurotic, and the morbidly curious. I prefer to think of myself as morbidly curious.

The advice given in Soldier of Fortune is good . . . For example: A German anti-terrorist team uses .38 cal. revolvers as personal point defense, but a S.O.F. author points out that although five .38 slugs will undoubtedly kill a terrorist, they will not knock him off his feet like a .45 magnum. It's this attention to detail that sets the professional killer apart.

There are articles about the Rhodesian army, which recruits members with full page ads challenging you to "Be A Man Among Men — Join The Rhodesian Army." This idea of the killer-macho mystique is evident in most of the advertising

Now don't think this magazine is a joke. It isn't. These writers know their subject. If you're planning a terrorist strike, guerilla warfare, an assassination, or if you're trying to prevent one of the above, the tactics discussed in S.O.F. will be of vital interest to you. This is a magazine for professional warriors that just happens to have a sub-clientele of war mongering sickos.

A typical issue includes Full Auto's review of new guns, Steele on Knives, Combat Pistolcraft, and Fighting for Keeps. It is in Fighting for Keeps that Rafael Lima shows in words and pictures how to cut a sentry's throat from ear to ear.

On the back pages are classified ads for everything from private investigators to Nazi memorabilia and books like Kill Or Be Killed. There are also ads such as: man and wife, both ex-military, bored to death, seek hazardous employment, prefer short term, or merc. vet, expert driver, 4 wheel and cycle. Expert with small arms, sniper, etc. It is ads such as these that make you worry about who these people are going to end up working for.

Soldier of Fortune is not the sort of thing you read in the dentist's office. But some Saturday afternoon when you're feeling real tough and the only thing you have to beat up is a beer can and the beer can is winning, you can sit down with Soldier of Fortune and read about what it's like to be a real man.

Tracksters Improve in Astrodome

By DAVE COSKEY

Coming off a tough loss in last week's Millrose Games, senior Don Paige ran a blistering 3:54.22 in the Houston Invitational Mile last Friday. Steve Scott sustained a tough kick to hold Paige off at the wire, running the distance in 3:54.20.

It didn't seem that Paige would figure in the race until he made his move in the final quarter mile, clocking at 51.2. "It's the fastest I've ever seen," commented Assistant Coach Jack Pyrah.

Paige felt the loss to Eamonn Coghlan was very crucial and hoped to use the Texas meet to redeem himself with "a very fast pace." Paige was quite happy with his finish, despite being edged by Scott. "I didn't mind finishing second by four inches," said Paige. "I got what I wanted: a fast pace and I'm very happy with it."

Solid performances were turned in by the entire Wildcat team. Freshman Rodney Wilson won both the 60-yard hurdles and special hurdles edging out Olympic gold medalist Rod Milburn and Alejandro Casanas of Cuba, rated second in the world in the event.

Carey Pinkowski (4:01.34) and Kevin Dillon (4:05.35) had outstanding efforts in the 5,000 meters. Pacing themselves early on Villanova graduate Marty Liquori kept them back slightly. Liquori, realizing his off-pace, moved to the outside and motioned for the Cats to pass him. "I felt really good, it was real easy," said Pinkowski, "Dillon and I were running behind Liquori and if we had made our move earlier, I feel we could have taken some of them."

A bright glimmer of hope for the IC4As came when junior Anthony Tufariello came back for his first competition since last May to run his personal best and finish second in the 600 yards at 1:09.49.

Villanova's only other first place finish was turned in by Mike England with a 2:08.10 in the 1000 meters. England then came back with Paige, John Hunter and Amos Korir to set a school record in the two mile relay.

The two mile relay was won by Santa Monica Track Club and established a new indoor world record. Villanova's time was the third fastest ever run by a college two mile team.

TRACK NOTES: Carey Pinkowski's time for the 5000 meters was two seconds under the U.S. Olympic qualifying standard . . . Wilson, Tufariello, England, Dillon, Paige, Pinkowski and Childs all set personal bests . . . Tufariello had not run since last May due to a stress fracture and his time was better than his NCAA championship time from last year . . . Don Paige will run this week in the San Francisco Examiner Games to qualify for the 800 in the IC4As . . . IC4A Championship will be at Princeton University March 8 and 9.

City Series Showdown

By PATRICK FLYNN

Big Five fever strikes again and whoever wrote the script for this season deserves our sincerest thanks.

The City Series is all locked away with the exception of one last contest for all the marbles, tomorrow's Villanova-St. Joe's game at the 'dungeon on 34th Street.'

This game is always a classic, but this season's added dimension makes it simply one of the most attractive of the year. The Hawk's feathers have been plucked and rumor has it that they might just be hidden somewhere on this campus, of all places. Undoubtedly, the St. Joe's zealots will retaliate in some fashion. A couple of years ago, some VU fans bounced back from a painting spree in the Lancaster Avenue parking lot by secretly plastering the St. Joe's campus with bumper stickers that read "Pass the word, the Cats are back."

Another time, they tell me, Hawk-lovers subtly painted "Beat Nova" over all of the speed limit signs between here and the Palestra. What will they think of next?

There's one thing for sure — some time near the end of the Penn-Dartmouth game, the Palestra will burst out in a deafening roar, a medley of chants and songs, an array of signs and rollouts, none of which will be accused of being anything but enthusiastic, intense and even insulting. (Continued on page 20)

Cats Outsmart Owls 67 - 59

By T.J. FITZPATRICK

The suitcoat came off with 10:06 left in the first half and his team behind, 13-11. But from that point on, it was relatively smooth sailing for Rollie Massimino and his Wildcats against Temple last Saturday night at the Palestra. Villanova turned in a fine defensive performance to top the Owls 67-59; thereby reversing last year's loss to Temple of an almost identical score (66-58).

The best example of this fine defense was Temple's field goal accuracy in the first half. Excluding junior forward Neal Robinson's five for five shooting, the Owls managed to connect on only two of 18 total shots from the field for a mark percentage of 11%, compared to 48% (10 of 21) for the Wildcats. And yet, Villanova was unable to capitalize on this fact for most of the first half. Neither team showed much offensive action as Temple seemed contented in trying to lull both the Wildcats and the crowd of 7,800 to sleep.

But with 5:30 to go in the first half and the score tied at 20-20, Coach Massimino decided to change the tempo. He sent Stewart Granger and Tommy Bethea into the game to combine with senior captain Rory Sparrow for a three guard offense. The strategy worked beautifully as Villanova built a 12 point lead on Bethea's reverse layup. Foul shooting gave the Wildcats the big edge in the first half as they sank 12 out of 14 tries to lead 32-20 at intermission.

The offensive action picked up a little in the second half as Temple came out with confidence. After that, Villanova settled down offensively and worked for good shots, Aaron Howard netted four of his eight total points in a three minute span to cushion the Wildcats' lead to ten points, 55-45.

Villanova was led offensively by junior forward Alex Bradley, who seems to save his best efforts for Big Five games. Bradley scored 19 points and pulled down 12 rebounds (both team highs), prompting Coach Massimino's statement that, "He (Bradley) has dominated all three Big Five games this year . . . and is one of the top ten players in the Big Five.

Massimino will need the rest of the Wildcats when they face St. Joe's tomorrow night at the Palestra. The game will decide the Big Five championship as both teams have 3-0 records in the league. Of course, most of the Villanova crowd (at the Temple game) couldn't wait that long, as cries of "We want the Hawks" and "The Hawk is Dead" filtered down throughout the Palestra in the waning minutes of the Wildcat triumph.

Two short years ago, the Villanova women's swim team could only hope for a miracle to bail them out of a mediocre 3-6 season. As if they were in a fairy tale, their wish was granted and a world-class swimmer enrolled at Nova. Since then Jennifer Franks, Villanova's MVP last year, has helped the Aquakittens to a 11-2 record in 1979 and an undefeated season so far in 1980.

Swimming has been a part of Jenni's life for a long time, since she began swimming at age 5. Before enrolling at Nova, Franks was the darling of the swimming world while in high school. She won her first National AAU Championship at 15 and has impressive credentials for each year afterwards.

Her honors have ranged from being National Champion for three straight years to being named the Most Outstanding Swimmer at the AIAW Small College National Championships in 1979. Franks has set five American AAU records for women in the individual medley as well as holding ten Villanova school records.

Although the swimming program on the Main Line doesn't measure up to AAU standards, Jenni thinks the competition level is good enough for her. "We have quality swimmers and this year with all the good freshman, we have a lot of competitiveness."

Swimming sensation Jenni Franks springs off the starting blocks on her way to leading the Waterkittens to a winning season.

With Jenni as the backbone, the team has set its sights on an undefeated season. With only two meets left, there is a good chance for their goal to come true. But that only will be part of their expectations. "We'd like to win the Division II Championships and place in the Top 5 in the Easterns," the economics major added.

For herself, Jenni has one of those drives to win every race she's in. Last year she set her sights on winning five national events, but came away short, only gaining three firsts. This year her goals are the same. "My goal is not to lose a race in a dual meet and to win all my events at the Easterns and Nationals."

A highlight of her career came just last year when Jenni was one of 12 nominees for the AIAW's Broderick Sports Award in swimming and diving. Those top athletes chosen were in the running for the Broderick Cup, given to the best collegiate swimmer in the country.

Although swimming is an individual's sport, Jenni is a total team person. According to Jane Ackerman, women's swim coach, "Jenni's not just a swimmer, but a leader. When she's not in the water, she is cheering, encouraging and leading by example."

It is really kind of ironic how some people go along and excel at what they compete in and never really get the exposure they deserve. Jenni Franks is a prime example of this. According to Coach Ackerman, she is one of the best swimmers in the east, as well as, being Villanova's most versatile swimmer.

Jenni Franks is an outstanding swimmer who has a fierce competitiveness. And although she goes out and does her thing without fan fare, the most important thing we can be glad about is that Jenni is part of Wildcats Country.

Swimmers Set New Marks

by ROBERT L.P. WALSH

The winningest team on the Villanova campus is neither Rollie Massimino's nor Harry Perretta's basketball teams, but Coach Jane Ackerman's undefeated women's swimming team. Tuesday night's 92-32 dismantling of Immaculata at home has given the women twelve victories in as many meets. With one meet remaining today at West Chester, the swim team is now preparing for the upcoming Eastern Championships at Penn State and the National Championships.

Bernie McCann and Dawn Doherty are the two latest swimmers to qualify for post-season tournaments. McCann has qualified for the Easterns in both the 50-yd. and 100-yd. butterfly and also the Nationals with an outstanding time of 1:01.2 in the 100-yd. butterfly. Strong performances by Doherty in the 100-yd. and 200-yd. breaststroke have qualified her for those events in the Easterns.

As strong as the swimmers have been; the diving contingent of Co-Captain Ann Levenite and Mary Jarret has enjoyed equal success. "A lot of the meets have come down to the wire and the diving points were there when they were needed," according to diving Coach Ted Klinges. Throughout the year, neither diver has placed less than third in a meet.

Coach Klinges describes the divers as "easy to coach, hard working athletes." Levenite and Jarret enjoy competing against each other and no more than eight points have separated each in a meet. In the recent PIAW Championships at West Chester, Mary Jarret captured sixth place while Ann Levenite placed ninth.

Ann Levenite has been a consistent performer in both the required and optional diving. Currently ranked first in her class with a 3.98 cum, she will graduate after this season. Unless another diver is recruited, junior Mary Jarret will be the sole diver for Coach Klinges. This season, Mary has gained the most points in required diving in every meet.

Watercats Conclude Successful Season

By PETER J. RYAN

The 1979-80 men's varsity swim team powered their way to an impressive 9-5 season mark in a campaign that provided Head Coach Ed Geisz with many pleasant memories.

A minimum of six school records (three varsity and three freshmen) were broken during a season which saw coach Geisz nail down career victory number two hundred. "This team is awesome . . . everybody did their job when they had to," commented coach Geisz.

The season finished on a dissappointing note however, as the Cats dropped a decisive contest at Navy. "The Navy meet would have been much tighter if we didn't have to go back to back against them and Rutgers . . ," explained Geisz. The swimmers had knocked off Rutgers the previous night.

Geisz now has his team practicing in anticipation of the Eastern Collegiate Championships to be held from March 6-8, at West Virginia University. To qualify, swimmers were required to match or better a pre-established time in their particular event. (Divers compete in much the same manner with regards to points.) The goal for the team in the Easterns is to secure one of the top five places. Coach Geisz hints that two of his swimmers; Rob Kownirko and Tod Russell, have a chance to make the Nationals, which will be held at Harvard.

The highlights of this campaign included victories over Penn and Syracuse. "We had 10 tough meets this year and it took a great effort for us to win," reflects Geisz. While individual performances were important in the meets it was the consistency of the relay teams that assured many of the victories. It is no wonder that Villanova's 400-yard medley relay is considered one of the finest in the east. Coach Geisz also expects to establish a new school record in the Easterns for the 800 yard freestyle relay.

While the swim teams are both competitive and successful (at Villanova) there is no telling how far they could go with proper financial support and a modern complex. While teams such as Penn and Drexel have eleven swimmers on full scholarship, Coach Geisz must make do with nine half-scholarships. Now that the St. Mary's pool is being remodeled, the Field House facility must accommodate the entire university. Coach Geisz sized up the situation by saying "Most of the teams we swim against have eight lanes, we need a new larger facility for recreation, intramurals and the swim teams." (Currently, there are committees working towards the building of such a structure.)

Villanova's future hope is Mike Zimmerman, a high school senior attending St. Josepha in New Jersey. Zimmerman recently competed in the National Catholic Championships held at Villanova. The loss of Steve Quindlen to graduation in May will leave coach Geisz with one half-scholarship to award.

Defense Crumbles on Road Trip

By KATHLEEN STICKEL

"It was our defense that won our games for us and our defense was lacking." According to center Lisa Ortlip, this was the basic reason the women's Wildcat basketball team went on the road this past weekend only to suffer three consecutive, heartbreaking losses to Edinboro State, Pittsburgh and West Virginia.

Villanova took to the road with a seventh place ranking in the east and a 17 place slot in the national ranking under their belts. They only had lost to Cheyney State, who is also nationally ranked and the Cats had defeated all other 17 teams. Coach Harry Perretta feels that, "The team was too complacent with what the newspapers said."

Facing Edinboro St. first, the Cats fell for the second time all season, 75-79. Mary Beth Gibson led the team in all three games scoring 23 points in the first match and 11 against West Va. "Mary Beth played probably the best three games of her career this weekend," praised Perretta.

The Pittsburgh Panthers pounded Villanova 70-53. Kathie Beisel put in 11 as the leading scorer.

After losing on Thursday and then Saturday, the Wildcats had to finish the trip on Sunday against West Va. They lost by a four point margin falling to their opponents 77-81. Ortlip tallied 22 points. Stephanie Vanderslice netted 17 and Karen Hiznay added 11.

Mary Anczarski, a junior forward claimed, "We've played better teams and we've beaten better teams. We were in top condition, that's no excuse."

Perretta feels that the losses can only be accounted for because, "There was a lack of hustle and absolutely no defense. Two of the three games were some of our top scores all season."

What's in the future for the 17-4 Wildcats? They went up against Princeton on Wednesday and will face LaSalle at St. Joe's tomorrow. If Villanova can regain their victorious reputation and topple LaSalle, they will clinch the Big Five title. If not, they will be forced to share the honor.

"If we beat both Princeton and LaSalle we'll probably receive a bid to the playoffs. If we don't win then — we won't go," states Perretta.

Returning to practice on Monday night after the road trip, Perretta expressed their goal when he told the team, "Everyone's thinking that those 17 games we won were a fluke. Now we have to prove that those three games we lost were a fluke."

Residence Olympics

By BOB CONWAY

The Residence Hall Olympics has been going extremely well. The first set of statistics will attest to that fact. The standings in the early stages also points out how valuable it is for wings to get as many people as possible to participate.

With the records of basketball, backgammon and foul shooting being used as the basis for the present standings Stanford 3-D is way ahead of the pack. They are the only wing which can boast reaching the 300 point plateau. 3-D is sporting a 6-0 record in basketball and turned out 30 people in the foul shooting contest which was good enough for 150 points.

In second place with 244 total points is Stanford 3-B. They turned out 27 members for the foul shooting contest. Corr Hall 2nd floor is presently in third place with 219 points accumulated up to this date. This team collected 90 points in the backgammon segment. The only other wing which has claimed the 200 point mark is Stanford 5-C, totalling 204 points.

Assistant Dean of Men Tony Martin is anxiously awaiting to pass out awards to the winners of the backgammon segment of the games. The winner should be crowned in the upcoming week. Martin believes that once others see the awards received by the backgammon champions it will help the Olympic concept all the more.

Clarifying the scoring system, which appears on the last page of the brochure distributed to all male residents, each team that enters an event such as basketball receives 20 points. Three additional points are given to a team who participates in a game and five points for a victory.

Regarding individual events such as backgammon, each entry is worth five points. Five additional points are awarded to an individual for each round in which he participates. Lastly, ten points are given to the winners.

Additional points are given to an event champion (75), second place finisher in an event (50), third (25), fourth place (15) and area champion (25). There are four areas on campus: Stanford, Sullivan, St. Mary's and North Campus (Austin, Corr, Delurey, Fedigan and Galberry).

PANTHERS PAW CATS

By BETH WHITE
and DAVE COSKEY

The Sports Illustrated jinx hit Villanova and senior guard Rory Sparrow right where it hurts: on the score sheet. Sparrow had rallied in the last three weeks to carry the Wildcats to a 19-5 record and last Wednesday's contest against the Pittsburgh Panthers was to help Coach Rollie Massimino win his season goal of 20 games. Now the Wildcat head coach will try to realize his twentieth regular-season victory and simultaneously clinch the Big Five Championship in tomorrow night's rivalry with St. Joseph's University at the Palestra.

Unknown to Rory Sparrow until after the Pittsburgh game, the well-known lens of the Sports Illustrated camera was focused on him, since Sparrow has become the hottest thing to hit an Eastern Eight team this season. And if there were ever a market for the qualities that Sparrow displays on the basketball court, it was Wednesday against the Panthers. And if there were ever a time when Sparrow should sparkle, it was against Pitt. And Sports Illustrated knew it. But Sparrow had an unusually lackluster game, shooting only one out of eight from the floor and netting only two points, far below his average of 10 points per game.

"Rory had more turnovers tonight than in the last seven or eight games combined," explains Massimino. Villanova committed 26 turnovers: four by Sparrow, five by senior Marty Caron and six by junior forward Alex Bradley. Bradley, however, was the Cats' leading scorer with 12 points and dominated the boards by nabbing 11 rebounds. Caron contributed nine rebounds and six points. Freshman John Pinone and junior Tom Sienkiewicz tallied ten points each, but the Wildcats fell to the Panthers 62-53.

The Cats led at half-time 31-25 and retained that lead until there were just over ten minutes left in the game. Then the Panthers stalled the Cats into completing only 29% of their shots from the floor in the second half. Senior forward Sam Ellis scored an amazing 23 points to add to the delight of the fans at Pittsburgh's home court.

"Pittsburgh controlled the tempo of the second half," concluded a disappointed Massimino.

But not all was gloomy for the Cats, who held a usually potent Sam Clancy to seven points and a meager five rebounds, half his season average of over ten rebounds per game. Credit for Clancy's low marks goes mainly to center John Pinone. Clancy calls Pinone "a great player and since he's only a freshman, he's gonna be really great in a couple of years."

Since Pittsburgh is also in the Eastern Eight Conference, Villanova's loss threatens their position as Number One in the league. However, if Rutgers beats Pitt Saturday night (while the Cats take on the St. Joe's Hawks), then Villanova could still be in the top slot for the Eastern Eight playoffs. The first round of the playoffs will be held in the Field House on Tuesday, February 26 at 8:00 p.m., then move to Pittsburgh for the finals.

Icecats Wind Down

By JIM FEMIA

The Villanova Icecats battled to two ties this past weekend as they tied Delaware 5-5 and Drexel 3-3. The Cats have only one regular season game remaining when they take on Wagner tomorrow afternoon at 4:15 at the Radnor Rink.

On Thursday the Ice Cats saw an inspired Delaware team streak to a quick 3-0 lead before the Cats got on the board on a goal by defenseman Jim Femia. In the second period Villanova tied up the game 3-3 on goals by Tom Curran and Tom Carson. With only two minutes remaining, the Blue Hens got a costly penalty and the Cats capitalized on their opportunity. Curren gave the Cats a 4-3 lead and thirty seconds later scored again and things looked quite encouraging for the Cats as they led 5-3 with only 1:10 to play. But Delaware pulled their goalie and stormed the Villanova goal and scored two goals in a fifty-five second span.

Forwards Ken Downey, Bill Quinlan, Steve Carr and John Lammers all played outstanding games. Goaltender Tom Margiotti was awesome once again, as he turned away 35 Delaware shots.

On Saturday the Cats traveled to Drexel to take on the much improved Dragons. Goaltender Al Salvato, playing in his final league game, rose to the occasion by stopping threat after Drexel threat. Sophomore forward Kevin Kelly led the Icecat attack scoring two goals. Curran added the other Villanova goal. Defensemen Paul LaFond and Mike Fitzgerald both played inspiring games on defense.

Boxers Remain Optimistic Despite Double Defeats

By JERRY VENTRESCA

"We have a good shot at winning the Easterns, hopefully placing in the top three," commented boxing Co-captain Fran Freeman. Following recent back-to-back meets at West Chester State College though, the Villanova boxing team will have a tough uphill battle to reach their goal.

On February 7, at a novice meet involving eight schools at West Chester, two of the six members representing the Wildcats won their matches (one apiece). One week later, also at West Chester for a dual meet, only two of six boxers, Jack Hoy and Jim Stamateris, won their meets. On the college level each bout consists of three two-minute rounds. "The fighters didn't fight up to their expectations," said Freeman. "Everyone is geared for success in the Easterns," he concluded.

This year the Easterns will be held at Lehigh University on March 14, 15 and 16 and the Nationals are scheduled for April 4 and 5 at the United States Air Force Academy in Colorado. The largest number of boxers one school can send to the Easterns is 12-one for each weight class. The winner of each weight class automatically clinches a spot in the Nationals.

Freeman, the senior co-captain, is 3-1 and atop the 139 weight class at Villanova. Along with Freeman, Brett Miller, Jim Stamateris and Steve Connelly are V U's likely choices to go on to the Nationals. Miller, a 156-pound co-captain, is 5-3 in his bouts; Stamateris, a junior at 172, is 5-2; and Connelly, the 1979 Eastern Champion at 190 lbs., is attempting to recover from a hernia operation in time for the post-season tournaments.

Last year the boxers ended their season ranked 14 in the nation. This year Freeman and Coach Phil Sandmaier think they'll conclude the season "in the top ten." Sandmaier, in his eighth year as coach (he graduated from Villanova in 1976 and coached as a student) leads a group of many underclassmen, which gives him good reasons for successful years in the future.

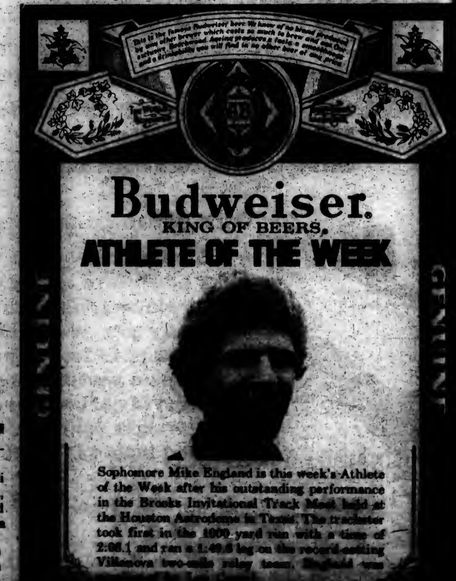
Coach Sandmaier's final comment concerned financial support to the team. "We've been allotted $500 annually for the last three years; we need more money," said the coach.



Sophomore Mike England is this week's Athlete of the Week after his outstanding performance in the Brooks Invitational Track Meet held at the Houston Astrodome in Texas. The trackster took first in the 1000-yard run with a time of 2:08.1 and ran a 1:49.6 leg on the record-setting Villanova two-mile relay team. England was

The bedlam is contagious, especially for those who have been there before.

Remember last year's game? God was a Hawk fan last year. In a game that did more for the sales of Alka-Seltzer than even this weekend's dinner menu (Mystery Meat both nights — no kidding), Villanova refused to score a point in the last ten minutes of regulation time and Jimmy Lynam's team turned its frustrating slowdown tactics into an overtime victory. The intensity was nauseating.

It's a game that could be a classic. It could be a dud, especially if you can't stand St. Joe's stall techniques or, worse yet, if lightning strikes twice and the Hawk, naked though he may be, escapes death for a second consecutive year. We'll know tomorrow.

So save me a seat on the Psoli local. Make that twenty seats, because, after all, this game would be murder if not shared with a score or so of close friends.

And while we're at it, save us twenty hot pretzels, too. Tradition lives on. It's the Silver Anniversary season for Philadelphia's Big Five. What a way for it to end!

Late Ruling Nixes Union Election

By JERRY DOUGHERTY

An eleventh-hour ruling by the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) blocked a faculty collective bargaining vote that was to have taken place February 27 and 28.

Dr. James J. Cleary, academic vice-president.

The decision by the NLRB, which was announced at 6 p.m. the day before the would-be election, was in response to a petition drawn up by the University Board of Trustees. The petition called for the election to be deferred, pending a ruling by the NLRB on the applicability to Villanova of a recent Supreme Court decision.

A last minute attempt by campus officials of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) to save the election failed when the NLRB's national office in Washington refused to overturn the decision rendered by its Philadelphia office.

In question is a decision pertaining to Yeshiva University, a private institution located in New York. The court ruled that since the faculty at Yeshiva played a role in decision-making through, for example, involvement in determination of faculty rank and tenure, it constituted a part of management, and was thus not eligible for representation through a collective bargaining process.

The Yeshiva decision was handed down by the court just one week before Villanova's collective bargaining election was to have been held.

Immediate reaction to the NLRB's decision from faculty advocates of collective bargaining differed widely from that of administration officials.

Dr. James J. Cleary, vice-president for academic affairs, was pleased by the decision to postpone the election. He expressed confidence that the NLRB would rule in favor of the administration in regard to the Yeshiva question.

"We feel very definitely that we do fit under the authority of the Yeshiva decision," Cleary remarked.

The view from the other side of the fence was a blend of frustration and criticism.

Dr. James Bergquist, president of the Villanova chapter of the AAUP, said that the Board's action in drawing up the petition which led to the NLRB ruling was "ill conceived." He added that the decision was "one that will likely provoke a long period of litigation that might otherwise have been avoidable.

Bergquist claims that the Yeshiva ruling does not apply to the faculty here at Villanova.

A step toward resolving the issue of the Yeshiva decision's pertinence to Villanova will be taken March 31. On that day the NLRB's Philadelphia office will conduct a hearing at which both sides, the AAUP and the administration will present arguments on their positions.

Peggy McGovern, the NLRB's agent for the Villanova case, said that the key question to be resolved is whether or not the Villanova faculty union represents in the NLRB's definition an appropriate bargaining unit.

Regardless of which view of the issue is upheld by the NLRB, the March 31 hearing may not serve as a final resolution of the question. The decision of the NLRB's Philadelphia office can be appealed to the Washington headquarters, and appeals beyond that point are not out of the question.

Financial Aid Deadline Nears

By LORI MADDEN

The filing deadline for all Villanova University financial aid applications is March 15.

All applicants must complete the Pennsylvania Higher Education Assistance Agency combined PHEAA Grant/Federal Basic Grant application form, and forward it to the PHEAA office in Harrisburg.

The PHEAA deadline for forms received is March 16. PHEAA determines student need and provides Villanova University with the information through the computerized Uniform Methodology need analysis service.

In previous years students were required to file the Financial Aid Form (FAF) through the College Scholarship Service at Princeton University. A fee is necessary for the FAF to be processed.

Last year the FAF procedure was eliminated from Villanova's financial aid requirements, although New Jersey students applying for state aid still must file the FAF. The PHEAA has become the source for all aid. There is no charge for form processing and this is a saving to the student.

Through PHEAA, students who are Pennsylvania residents can receive state grants and loans. Students not residing in Pennsylvania do not receive state aid. However, their forms are processed, and their financial need eligibility information is then readily accessible to Villanova.

The Villanova financial aid application must be received in the Financial aid office in Kennedy Hall no later than March 15. The students' parents' U.S. Income Tax Return, as well as the students; if one is filed, should accompany the application.

Mr. Switzer, the associate director of financial aid at Villanova, is concerned that many students do not realize that they must file financial aid forms each year if they want financial aid. Both Villanova and PHEAA forms are available to students who request them from the Financial aid office.

Villanova Financial Aid applications will be processed after March 15. Awards are based on the student eligibility as determined by PHEAA, and the Villanova application. Applications received after the March 15 cutoff will be considered only after all other applications are processed. Late applicanta can only be aided if funds remain available, and this is very unlikely according to Switzer.

Rally Informs Students

By JANEMARIE COYLE

"We're mad as hell and we're not going to take it anymore," stated Mark Zappy, Arts and Science Senator, as he and other student leaders addressed approximately 400 students gathered at a tuition-increase protest rally on Thursday, February 21.

The rally, sponsored by the Student Government Association, made students aware of the impending 9.4% increase in tuition and a 9.5% hike in room and board fees. Students were urged to attend the following day's meeting of the University Senate, which was scheduled to vote on the fiscal '80-'81 budget.

In the opening address, Lou Casari, chairman for the student government assembly cited, "The University Blue Book containing rules and regulations provides for the right to assemble. Since the SGA represents the students, we want you to be aware of our endeavors. This rally is an expression of our concern for the future of Villanova."

Student Body President P.J. Winterhalter stated, "We're gathered here today for a reason. Most people don't know that the Senate usually approves the proposed budget. In the past, students have failed to show interest in proposed tuition increases." He continued, "Students can expect to pay a $350 increase in tuition and $250 more to live on campus. Will you give all that up so easily?"

Mark Zappy calculated the cost of attending Villanova in the future. He stated, "With a yearly 9.4% increase in tuition, room and board, in 1990 it will cost about $11,000 to go to Villanova. Most of us couldn't afford that." He continued by citing, "94% of the University's operating budget comes from students' fees. At that rate, Villanova will become a playground for the rich."

Arts and Science Senator David Dear stated, "This is the first time in four years that people have cared about tuition increases." Dear presented the University's list of priorities with the first and second priorities respectively being an increase in faculty salaries and an increase in financial aid. He stated, "The last priority on this list is the increase in room, board and tuition fees." The most dramatic event of the rally came as Dear lit up the list and after some trouble proceeded successfully to burn it.

Commerce and Finance Senator Dave Blachly stated that, "Room, board and tuition has increased about $1,200 since I was a freshman. He said, "The reason for this that the Board of Trustees has consistently failed in their inherent responsibility as fund-raisers. They have refused to take on the role as fund-raisers." He further stated, "The Board of Ceremonies Mark Center Opening

By FRANK J. DOHERTY

The $6.4 million Connelly Center will open Tuesday.

A grand opening program has been formulated for the first four days of the center's operation. Activities scheduled for Tuesday, March 18 include the film "The Jericho Mile," which was written by Dr. Patrick J. Nolan, professor of English at Villanova, and the one-man show, "An Evening with Mark Twain," starring actor Will Stutts.

Also set for Tuesday are a Villanova Union Coffee House, a drill exhibition by Whiskey Company, the NROTC Unit Drill Team, and a classic horror film.

Featured activities during the rest of the week are a harpsichord concert on Wednesday, an all-university concert by the Villanova Singers, the Women's Glee Club, and the Concert Band on Thursday, and an Annual Student Big Band Dance to be followed by a screening of "Animals," starring Bela Lugosi, on Friday.

The Connelly Center consists of two levels, the plaza level and the lower level. The Information Center is located at the rear of the main lobby on the plaza level. Information about all the activities and programs in the building is available at this location. The plaza level is also the home of the Music Listening Lounge, which features custom lounge seats with jacks for headphones, and the Art Gallery. The gallery will exhibit the works of students, faculty, staff and alumni. Additionally, the gallery is a display area for the many pieces of art owned by the university.

The Belle Air Terrace is found on the lower level. The terrace is a five level dining and entertainment area. The assortment of food available in the Belle Air Terrace ranges from pizza and hoagies to steaks and salads. The Gamma Room, also on the lower level, has billiards tables, pinball machines and electronic games. A centralized location for university ticket sales, a 206 seat cinema, and the Villanova Center, the 6,000 square foot multipurpose room, are all on the lower level.

The need for a university center at Villanova was first discussed in 1968. The center has been a priority of the University Senate Building Committee since 1973. In 1975, the Covenant Campaign was started. The goal of this campaign was to raise $40 million over a period of twenty years. The first phase of the Covenant was concerned with the construction of a university center.

In December of 1976, the architectural firm of Vincent Kling Associates was chosen to design the center. At that time, no definite site had been chosen for the facility. The field behind Sullivan H all was being seriously considered as a location.

The area in the vicinity of Kennedy and Dougherty Halls was selected as the site for the building in January, 1977. The selection of this site brought with it the need to reroute pedestrian and vehicular traffic on campus. The location also caused a problem in on-campus parking.

The Radnor Zoning Board approved three variances needed to construct the center on September 22, 1977. The variances allowed the length of the building to exceed 160 feet, the distance between buildings to be less than 35 feet, and the number of parking spaces at the center to be less than the number of auditorium seats.

The Planning Commission of Radnor Township approved the proposal for the university center on October 3, 1977. This approval involved the setting of a construction site and details concerning drainage. A building permit was then issued.

The first step in the university center construction was the relocation of the main entrance to the campus from the former site, south of Bartley Hall, to the north side of the building. This change was made in April of 1978.

In May of that year, construction of the center began. The position of University Center Director was created by the University to coordinate the construction of the building. To fill the position, the University appointed Marc E. Tuchman. At that time, Tuchman said, "The building will be more than concrete, block and steel without proper programming and planned activities."

In October, 1978, the Connelly Foundation of Philadelphia donated a gift of $4.8 million to be used to underwrite the cost of the university center. The principal donors to the Connelly Foundation are John F. Connelly and his wife, Josephine C. Connelly. Connelly, a Board of Trustees member at Villanova, is the president and chairman of the board at Crown, Cork and Seal Co., Philadelphia. It was decided at that time to name the building the Connelly Center.

Senate Votes to Approve Budget

By BILL CLARK

The Villanova University Senate approved the proposed budget for fiscal 1980-81 in an extraordinary meeting on February 22. The final vote of 20-11-in favor of the budget was factionalized, with faculty and administration senators voting in favor of the budget, while student senators voted against it.

As expected, the two main areas of debate on the budget were faculty salary increases and student tuition and room and board hikes. The proposed budget calls for a 10% increase in faculty salaries along with a 9.4% increase in tuition and a 9.5% increase in room and board.

In questioning the need for large tuition increases, Senator Amorosa asked why Development (fund raising), was only Villanova's fifth most important priority. Amorosa claimed "that if Villanova went for the big money, all these arguments would be unecessary. As it stands now, due to cuts in the budget, we are all forced to form special interests."

This argument was given additional strength by the comments of Fr. Burnell, vice-president of financial affairs. After claiming that 89% of Villanova's funds come from student sources, Burnell said "that this figure varies with other institutions. The range is from 78% to some institutions higher than Villanova, but very few."

Senator Winterhalter claimed that because the Senate Budget Committee evaluated the proposed budget with priorities submitted by the Administration, the Committee would have to approve it considering the budget is submitted by the administration. "After all," said Winterhalter," it is not democratic for one faction to rule itself."

The sixteen priorities submitted by Father President Driscoll were ranked according to importance, with salary increase as the number one priority, while preventing tuition increases was eleventh.

Dr. Cleary, Vice-President for Academic Affairs and a member of the Administration Budget Committee, agreed with the arguments of Senators Amorosa and Winterhalter, but declared that the "Development Office will not solve our short range problems."

He continued, "The Administration is not happy with the proposed budget either. But we had a difficult job to do, and worked to the best of our ability to get it done."

Dr. Hahn also expressed his dismay with the budget. "The students would not be correct if they left this meeting with the feeling that the faculty is pleased with the tuition increases."

In relation to student increases, the Senate rejected an amendment that would have changed the percentage increases to only 9% for tuition and 10.4% for room and board. The intent of the motion, proposed by Dr. Zech, was to attract more commuting students and to more equitably charge resident students, who supposedly use University facilities more frequently.

Dr. Zech also made mention of the inflation rate and how it applies to this year's budget. "In real terms, a 9% tuition increase is a tuition decrease, considering that inflation in the Philadelphia area is 11%. Also, a 10% faculty increase is really a salary decrease."

Dr. Hahn also questioned Dr. Cleary on how the 10% salary increase would be apportioned. Dr. Cleary said that there would be no across the board increase in faculty salaries, and that the 10% increase would be distributed according to merit.

Dr. Armenti commented that the apportionment of salary increases was an administrative function, and that salary increases have always been given out according to merit.

NROTC Hosts Drill Meet

By FRANK J. DOHERTY

Pershing Rifle Company K-8 of Seton Hall University was the overall winner of the Twenty-first Annual Villanova University Invitational Drill Meet.

Nineteen teams participated in the meet which was held on Saturday, February 23.

The second place trophy was awarded to the X-Squad of Xavier High School in New York City. The NROTC Unit of Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute took home the third place overall award.

The winner of the first place overall trophy is the team with the highest combined score in the platoon basic and the platoon trick drill competitions. This team is awarded the Dean John J. Gallen Memorial Trophy. Dean Gallen retired as Dean of the College of Engineering in 1975 after 35 years on the Villanova University faculty.

Whiskey Company, the Villanova University NROTC Unit drill team, was the host of the drill meet. Whiskey Company participated, but did not compete, in the platoon and squad drill categories. Members of Whiskey Company, however, were able to compete in the individual drill competition and the two man trick drill competition.

Freshman Patsy Van Bloem of Villanova was the winner of the women's individual drill competition. The men's individual drill was won by Scott Shoemaker of Villanova. Ken Barton of Villanova took the third place trophy in the men's individual event.

The two man trick drill competition was won by Whiskey Company members Scott Shoemaker and Richard Regan.

Although not in the competition, Whiskey Company was scored for their performance in the platoon trick drill category. Their score of 994 points bettered that of the U.S. Naval Academy, winner of the event, by over one hundred points.

Midshipmen from the Villanova University NROTC unit assisted at the drill meet as announcers, scorers, judges' aides, kitchen workers, and parking attendants.

Galberry Named Academic Dorm

By BILL ROCK

The Dean of Men's office has announced that Galberry Hall and the 4th floor B-wing of Stanford Hall will be turned into special academic areas for the 1980-1981 school year.

Assistant Dean of Men Anthony Martin explained, "What we will be doing in Galberry Hall is not all that unusual or extraordinary. It is something that we probably should be doing in all the dormitories.

"We want to make the residence halls a place where education will continue. We want them to complement the classroom. Previously we have attempted solely to make the dorms a nice place in which to live. Now we are expanding that."

Galberry Hall, next year's academic dormitory.

Galberry Hall will house nineteen students. Those seeking residency there applied to the Dean of Men's office, expressing their desire. The Dean of Men's office will soon go through a selection process.

"I do not see the selection procedure as presenting any kinds of problems," Mr. Martin stated. "We have not been overwhelmed with applications. We certainly will have enough people, but will not have to turn down too many who have sought residency in Galberry.

"I think the response has not been greater because students do not understand what we plan for Galberry. Once they do, our selection process might become more difficult. Whatever selection we have to do this year will be based on our interviews with all the applicants."

Martin stressed that the Dean of Men's office is not trying to turn Galberry Hall into merely a living area for students who wish to spend all their time studying.

"This is not going to be a place where it will always be quiet for studying. Some students who thought the dorm would be a place like that approached us, but we explained that was not our goal.

"In addition, this is not going to be a dormitory for students with the highest grade point averages: I think some students have that idea. We are looking for students who are interested in getting involved in a new living experiment at Villanova."

Martin explained that the purpose of an academic dorm is to give students a chance to do things that they would not be able to do in a normal dormitory experience.

"Things like arranging trips to the Philadelphia Orchestra, which are difficult to do in most dorms, will hopefully be common experiences in Galberry.

"The selection of the resident assistant for Galberry will be very important. I do not think that his normal tasks of keeping order and providing discipline will be quite so necessary. The RA would be free to do more things for the residents. The resident assistant would be able to stress the word assistance more."

A similar project is being undertaken on the 4th floor B-wing of Stanford Hall. Its goals will be similar to Galberry, but it will be an entirely freshmen residence area, according to Martin.

He stated, "We will try to continue the orientation experience all year. We will do more of the things that will make these freshmen aware of the opportunities available to them on campus."

Blachly said, "The 1979 endowment was the same as 1972, 6.8 million dollars." He urged those in attendance to sign their names to flyers which later were given to University President, Rev. John M. BULLETIN Editor Speaks on Free Press

By EDWARD HEALEY and GINGER FANNON

"The whole issue of a free press in America is something that Americans care too little about," said Claude Lewis, associate editor for The Philadelphia Bulletin.

He shared this view with about 10 people who were at his lecture on "Freedom of the Press and Government Restraints" presented by Phi Kappa Phi Honor Society in Tolentine second floor lecture hall, at 3:00 p.m., on February 26.

Lewis believes that this issue of press freedom is "the most fundamental issue that Americans face."

He does not say this for the reason that most people say it: "Most people say that . . . we need a free press in order to protect the ideals of America . . . My feeling is that we need a free press because basically the people who run our government . . . often, not always, but often are thieves."

According to Lewis this is true "because most of them (our public officials) believe that nobody is watching."

The press, Lewis points out, is the public's watchdog in our society.

He admits that the press does not do its job well enough but believes we will be in serious trouble if we do not "make certain that the press remains free, that the press has access to information, and that the press has the right to protect its news sources."

Lewis sees the Nixon administration's attempt to license reporters and people in the media as an effort to "muzzle the press" in the interest of self-preservation.

Watergate brought about a change for the better, says Lewis. "For years in this nation we worshipped the White House and its occupant merely because it existed; we dared not question the integrity of a man like J. Edgar Hoover. But, thank goodness, all of that is passing away, and we are beginning to tell the truth about our officials."

However, Lewis indicates, the public is still too apathetic and this must be changed; the public must be made aware that this free press issue is not "a kind of intellectual argument . . . that has no real place in their lives . . . We haven't had an absence of freedom in this country and so we tend to take it for granted . . . I think that we (this nation) will really fall, if we do, because of apathy within the nation."

Lewis attributes this apathy in part to the fact that "so many of us are walking around feeling impotent, as though we don't count."

But there is a lot that we can do, maybe we can't do anything as an individual, but we can do a lot together and we can support those institutions that work for us," says Lewis.

The public must use its strength, its voice. It must become aware and concerned about this free press issue, and it must support those reporters, editors and publishers who are "waging the battle today to protect that right," says Lewis.

Jimmy Carter tries "to control the press the same as Richard Nixon did . . . and so does every other public official," says Lewis.

More importantly, all across the country, reporters "are being hauled into courts . . . It's demanded of them to reveal their news sources, to tell . . . what (they) were thinking, tell how (they) operated."

Recent cases have forced many reporters to reveal news sources to ensure their legitimacy. Lewis feels this is an infringement on their rights. He says, "it will change the fabric of this nation if we lose the right to information." A reporter must account to his editor and that can be a lot more difficult than a judge, he said.

Lewis was very supportive of the recent uncovering of the FBI Abscam project. He believes that we should make officials responsible for their actions.

Kennedy Backers Sponsor Meeting

By DREW MERRICK

An organizational rally on behalf of Senator Edward M. Kennedy, Democratic presidential hopeful, was held on February 18 in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

Approximately 35 students attended the meeting, at which Mary C. Harris, a local campaign director for Kennedy, spoke.

Many of those in attendance requested information on how they could join Senator Kennedy's campaign, and this was provided by Harris, who emphasized the importance of organizing a voter registration effort on Kennedy's behalf for the upcoming Pennsylvania presidential primary.

Harris revealed that the Kennedy forces are planning a mass voter registration drive during the week of March 15. The deadline for voter registration in Pennsylvania is March 22.

The remainder of the meeting was devoted to an outline and explanation of Kennedy's policies on energy, the economy, crime, and health care.

On the subject of energy, Harris stated that Kennedy wants to reduce America's dependence on foreign oil by proposing a gas-rationing plan.

In regard to the economy, Kennedy is calling for an "across the board" six-month freeze on wages, prices, dividends, interest rates, and rents.

Kennedy, as chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, has had much to say on the issue of crime. He has advocated an end to parole release coupled with stricter sentencing, particularly for those convicted of so-called "white collar crime."

It is in the area of health care that Senator Kennedy has drawn the greatest notoriety of late. He has introduced in Congress the "Health Care for all Americans Act," a program aimed, according to Harris, at controlling escalating medical costs.

Harris expressed confidence that Kennedy would win the Pennsylvania primary, to be held April 22, if more people realize what she sees to be the serious state of the nation's economy, characterized by a current annual inflation rate

In accepting the gift, the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., university president, said, "This magnificent expression of generosity on the part of the Connelly family is destined to affect the lives of many people for years to come."

On Sunday, March 9, 1980, the Connelly Center ribbon cutting ceremony was held. Mr. and Mrs. Connelly and their family attended a banquet with Fr. Driscoll the center's architect and contractor, the chairman of the Board of Trustees, and the director of the Connelly Center after the ribbon cutting.

The past week at the center was spent training the 146 students who will be holding part time jobs there.

In the near future, the Connelly Center will be the site of graduation receptions and the celebration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the College of Engineering.

Rev. John E. Deagan, O.S.A., vice-president for Student Life said, "I think that the reaction to the Connelly Center a month from now will be, 'How did we ever get along without it?' "

Decision May Worsen Faculty - Administration Relationship

Board Halts Union Vote

The New York Times correctly predicted in the Feb. 24 edition of "The Week in Review" that "A new union at Villanova may be the first victim of the . . . Supreme Court decision in the Yeshiva University case."

A faculty union at Yeshiva could have no power, according to the Supreme Court, because the role of the faculty at this "mature" university was a "managerial" one, as described by Justice Lewis F. Powell, Jr.

Perhaps encouraged by this decision, the Villanova Board of Trustees filed a petition with the National Labor Relations Board to defer the proposed faculty collective bargaining vote at 6 p.m. the night before the election.

Justice Powell described a "Mature" university as one in which the faculty's "authority in academic matters is absolute. They decide what courses will be offered, when they will be scheduled, and to whom they will be taught. They debate and determine teaching methods, grading policies, and matriculation standards. They effectively decide which students will be admitted, retained and graduated. On occasion their views have determined the size of the student body, the tuition to be charged, and the location of a school." It seems that authority in course offerings, scheduling and grading policy obviously falls within the role of a faculty member, without discussion of his managerial role.

Even if Powell's definition of a managerial function were accurate, do faculty members at Villanova possess this "managerial role" in determining the affairs of the University? In the University Senate, the faculty and students at best possess the power to vote for making recommendations to Father President and the Board of Trustees. It would seem that their s is the managerial role. Something else to be considered is that the Trustees were successful in gaining a deferral as the NLRB in Washington denied an appeal by the AAUP to continue the election. However, will the move ultimately be successful in terms of long range administration and faculty relations?

Dr. James Bergquist, president of the Villanova chapter of the AAUP, described the Board move to defer the election as "ill-timed." Indeed, the decision can only cause bitterness as it prevents the faculty's expression on an issue which has been in the air for at least a decade.

NROTC vs. Christianity?

Dear Editor:

I write to support the excellent letter of Professor Durland (Villanovan 2/15/80). R.O.T.C. on a catholic campus is a scandal in the deepest theological sense of the world. Namely, under the guise of good — humanizing the military — we educate youth to "kill and destroy."

Students here at Georgetown ask me if I am opposed to the presence of the military on campus, or simply opposed to the giving of credit for military courses?

My answer is this. From the moral point of view, I believe that I am commanded to love God and all human beings. I believe that this love must be universal and include enemies. I do not accept the argument that in the act of killing a person I can express love for them. Nor do I believe that I am allowed to kill certain persons or groups of people in order to show love for certain other persons or groups.

I believe that, according to the Christian Gospels, this love is not to be determined by damage done to me. I see this command to love not as a principle of doing nothing when under attack. I see it as an active love which returns good for evil.

I understand this imperative of love to be derived from the truth that there is only one God who is the parent of all human beings. Because of this all human beings are brothers and sisters and should act accordingly. I believe that no complexity of foreign policy does away with this truth. I see all war as a type of fraticide and atheism that denies the brother-sister-relation of humans under the parentage of God.

I believe the Gospel requires us to return good for evil, to do good to those who hate us, and to love those who persecute us. This is incompatible with military operations and preparations for them.

Academically I see military courses on campus as different in aim and operations from all other university courses. The military training is centered around "kill and destroy". This is true even when it is masked behind the concept of deterrence.

The military buys its way into the university. They demand that teachers be from the military, and that the instructors be paid by the military. They set up their own program and control it. They require students to pay back in years of service for the instruction they have been given.

The Defense Department names teachers for the courses and prescribes the course content, and can restrict the personal activities of students. No other department in the university does anything like this. No other course in the university requires you to sign a contract which makes you a conscripted person if you breach that contract. No other department has the support of a huge military apparatus which threatens to destroy civilian control of our country.

I think the presence of the militarv on a campus diverts the university community from two important goals, the witness to the Gospel of love and the academic goal of seeking the truth.

In the nuclear age R.O.T.C. on campus promotes the myth that national armies can defend themselves against nuclear weapons. R.O.T.C. on campus blurs the witness to peace required of Christians. R.O.T.C. on campus makes it difficult for catholics to accept the papal teachings that the arms race is a trap, a madness, a crime against the poor because it deprives them of bread. In short it is a scandal and I am happy that at least someone on the Villanova faculty recognizes that.

Thank you for printing Bill Durland's fine letter.

Yours for peace,
Richard McSorley, S.J.

Georgetown University

Response

Dear Editor:

In response to the reply of Brian Buinewicz in your Feb. 22 issue, I would like to differ from his reasoning. I joined the NROTC Unit at Villanova University in September 1978, I did not have then nor do I have now a scholarship. I have paid my own living expenses, my own tuition and my own book fees.

Like Mr. Buinewicz, I work during the summer months and do odd jobs during the winter months. I too am taxed heavily and don't like it, I too pay for my opinion! Yet even though I have not experienced the life of leisure he has found so convenient to satirize in ROTCa, I am still proud of my unit and the men and women of which it is composed, Some of my best friendships and most unique experiences have occurred as a result of my membership in the unit. In being a midshipman I have acquired a more realistic respect for my country, others and most importantly myself.

I have grown to respect if not like the reality of the need for armed might to protect the vital interest of my country. I am not alone in this belief 2,000,000 men and women in the armed forces who have jobs and pay taxes agree with me. Many of these people defend American lives and American values in some of the loneliest parts of the world and often under extremely harrowing circumstances.

They have immense pride in themselves and their country and they give of themselves relentlessly because they believe in the high ideals of this nation and peace. That's right Mr. Buinewicz they love peace, not war and that's why they're there! Thank you for your attention.

Sincerely
Brian C. Yetka, Midshipman 3/c USNR

By MARYANN McDONNELL

In light of the fact that the hostage situation in Iran still shows little sign of being resolved despite the recent efforts of the U.N. Council, On Campus was interested in students' opinions on President Carter's handling of the situation. We asked students the following questions: How do you think the President is handling the hostage situation in Iran? What do you think he should be differently? Do you think this influences his standing in the polls, and how?

Tracey O'Neill

I don't know what he can do differently. So much time has gone by and so far it hasn't done anything to hurt his campaign.

Michael Manganiello

The President is doing as well as can be expected under the circumstances but I think he's got to get a lot tougher because he's dealing with fanatics and if the hostages are still in Iran by November, he'll win the election.

Nancy Bednarek

Considering his incompetence, I feel he's handling the situation better than he's handled any other political situation.

Gay Prizio and Peter Marengi

Considering his other actions concerning foreign policy we think he's handling this crisis well. The situation has dragged so long that he should do something of significance soon.

The Villanovan accepts letters to the editor and prints as many as space will allow. Letters should be typed, double spaced, and not more than 300 words. Letters must be signed, but names may be withheld from printing upon request. Deadline is 5:00 p.m., the Tuesday before publication.

Resident Olympics

Dear Editor,

"The Residence Hall Olympics has been going very well." This is a quote from Bob Conway's article on the February 22 edition of the Villanovan. Have they really been going well? The same program we protested in this section has not included all the people it was supposed to.

To refresh your memory; the Residence Hall Olympics was a series of different events disigned to include only male residents. The A.C.S. protested the fact that commuters were not included. We have found out that a large segment of the male residents weren't even informed in time to get involved. St. Mary's and the dorms behind St. Mary's were excluded from the competition.

We have seen how shabbily run this event has been. But the Assistant Dean of Men, Tony Martin, insists that they are a total success. He has not only avoided our article, but has avoided complaints from resident students also.

I want to know what astral plane Tony Martin and Bob Cassity exists on to believe this is a successful program. If they cannot do their job correctly, they should step down. They are only hurting the university.

The students at Villanova are tired of getting University rhetoric crammed down our throats. Commuters are tired of being left out. The University needs to take another look at it's non-academic policy towards students. A college has to provide non-academic activities to keep the students sane. I hope the university will give this article some thought.

Sincerely,
Leo Koletas

Commendation

Dear Editor:

Villanova's English Department is that much better for having Dr. James J. Kirschke as a full-time member of the staff ("Professor Tells Experience" Feb. 22). I had the good fortune to have Dr. Kirschke for my literature and composition course in my first semester freshman year. He encouraged me to look for writing skills I never knew I had.

I have never met a teacher who gives more time and effort to his pupils, nor one whom I respect more. If he finds that students here at VU are friendly toward him, it is due to the caring and friendliness he offers the students.

I commend Melisa Araya and Brian Buinewicz for their skill in reflecting this man's sensitivity, intelligence, compassion, and bravery. I hope Dr. Kirschke will stay on at Villanova University for a long time.

Sincerely,
Thomas Shortall, '81

Holistic Health Seminar Held

At a recent informal seminar on Villanova University campus where "Holistic Health" was discussed by Nursing faculty, J. Tartala and M. Schwenk, a health survey was completed by the group present and the following results were obtained.

On a scale of one to ten, with ten being excellent, 84 percent rated their health as eight or above.

This same percentage did not think seeing a physician regularly kept them healthy, nor did the majority see a physician for a cold or regularly for any other specific medical problem. However, about 50 percent saw a physician occasionally for a check-up.

All those surveyed demonstrated self-care knowledge of how to take a temperature and a pulse, with approximately one-third knowing how to take their blood pressure. 15 percent regularly self-medicated with aspirin.

With one exception, the females in the survey knew how to examine their breasts for possible cancer and got pap smears. However, none of the males knew how to examine their testes for possible cancer, although all stated they would like to know.

With one exception all the polled males exercised regularly but only one-half of the females did so on a regular basis.

Again on a scale of one to ten with ten being excellent, 76 percent rated their diet five or less, with approximately 50 percent taking supplemental vitamins regularly and one person also using mineral supplements.

In summary, it appears that despite the fact that they rated their diets as mediocre or less, and that only one-half of the females regularly exercised, they generally rated their health as good and had learned some methods of self-care and, especially as it concerned the males, would like to learn more.

Come to the College of Nursing's Health Fair, April 11 in Dougherty and learn more about health and self-care practices.

Professor Assesses Crisis

By CAROL ANN BARRALE

"Accessibility" is the key word, Dr. Fazil Tawab Najafi, Civil ineering professor and a ve of Afghanistan, to the ngle for power which exists as sult of the Soviet invasion of hanistan.

Najafi, who came to the US in 6, still has relatives in hanistan from whom he has not rd in months. Being a native han, Najafi is considerably cerned; yet, he is proud of the torical and geographical insight an lend to an understanding of Afghan crisis.

arefully spreading a large map Eastern and Western Europe ss the floor, Najafi points out e strategic geographic osophy of Russian ideology. It ell known, he begins, that the rsian Gulf has been of vital in- st to many major countries plying a "great percentage of world's oil. Japan gets 90% of il from the Gulf," adds Najafi, stern and glazed with im- ance, "while the US gets ut 50%." In order to gain con- of this vital area, it was in- able, as Najafi views it, that sia invade Afghanistan.

tudying a map of Europe, afi explains as he points uitively to the map, one can that Russia's choice — how where to invade — becomes a n in geography. If Russia to gain access to the Persian through a sea invasion, she ld invariably confront an American ally or sympathizer: Travelling the Baltic Sea, she confronts Finland, Norway and Sweden. Passing through the North Sea, she faces England, a known U.S. ally. In fact, Najafi adds, all the waterways through which Russians must pass — the Atlantic, the Straits of Gibralter and the Mediterranean Sea — are invariably surrounded by US allies. Therefore, the only reasonable alternative to mobilize land forces to gain access of the Gulf — was through a shorter and more prosperous land route through Afghanistan. (see map)

"Throughout the history of Western Civilization," Najafi boasts, "many have recognized the importance of Afghanistan. Alexander the Great and Marco Polo passed through towns like Herat and Kabul" on their way to conquer and explore. Russia, too, has recognized its importance, for Najafi presents a picture of Afghanistan as an unexplored gold mine.

Russia receives a large amount of Afghan exports ranging from dry nuts to fresh fruits. "The mountain ranges of Afghanistan," he stresses, "have never been tapped. The extensive amount of iron the ranges possess has not really been utilized."

While the Soviets have realized Afghanistan's importance, Americans have not. According to Najafi, it is this lack of attention to Russian ideology that has placed the U.S. in its present position. "Carter foreign policy is very weak," Najafi states. "If Carter handled US foreign policy with knowledge of Russian philosophy and ideology, and if he realized Afghanistan's importance, then Carter would not have his problem.

Dr. Fazil Tawab Najafi, assistant professor of Civil Engineering, explains Afghanistan's situation in world politics. BRIAN CECCHI PHOTO

"American interest in Afghanistan before the invasion was null. It was thought of, perhaps, as a desert country." But, he continues, what America needs to realize to gain a powerful appearance in the power struggle is that Afghanistan is "the pivot or center of the structure right now."

To emphasize his statement, Najafi recalls an old saying of his grandfather's. "The Afghan bear from the north is powerful. Once the back of the bear breaks, the balance of East and West becomes a question."

But will the question ever be resolved? Najafi feels "the situation in Afghanistan will not be resolved unless Russia completely removes all forces, all threats of tyranny, so Afghanistan can be completely free." Russia is having a "tough time" in Afghanistan. "They knew that Afghanistan would be tough and would resist," he adds. "This is why they have sent their best, the first division of the Red Army. Afghans are people who want to fight for freedom, but they have recognized a need for help."

The help Egypt is providing Muslim rebels in the form of arms is "good" says Najafi. But, "Afghans need organized help. They need world attention and American support," most importantly, he stresses, "They need help without any conditions upon their freedom. They need impartial aide from freedom loving people who want to free and respect the country."

When asked if placement of the US marine forces in the Arabian Sea will force a confrontation, in the form of a war, with Russia, Najafi replied, "To fight a war requires energy. The Russians really know what is going on." With the Persian Gulf in limbo, the US will not have the energy necessary for war, and thus a nuclear threat is posed. The US, he says, "is playing a game. It is trying to scare somebody who doesn't give a damn. Russia has 1600 ships, the US, 500." Thus, Najafi believes, Russia "will not take it (the US presence in the Arabian Sea) seriously."

What Would a Cambodian Think about Beefsteak Charlie's?
Villanova Wins a Wet T-Shirt Contest but Loses its Sanity.

By RAOUL DUKE

Ed. Note: Mr. Duke was formerly an editor on the sports desk at Rolling Stone but has since joined The Villanovan as a member of the "Style" staff. He traveled to Ft. Lauderdale on the Union trip (an experience he compared to looking for a lost contact lens in Kelly's) and filed this report.

Ft. Lauderdale, Florida, is the hometown of Chris Evert, who won her first Wimbledon title at the ripe old age of 20 while earning the nickname "Little Miss Icicle" from the British press because of her unwavering concentration. Her father is a teaching tennis pro, and long before she understood the difference between boys and girls, which is relatively complex, she understood tennis, which is relatively simple — you win, you get the money; you lose, you get less money.

Last year, however, Chrissie discovered that there was more to life than backhands and forehands, and she married John Lloyd, taking time out from the tennis tour and the quest for boffo bucks. She may well be the smartest person in Ft. Lauderdale.

There is a rather infamous bar on the ocean in Ft. Lauderdale called The Button which features College Competition Happy Hours each afternoon, which is really an excuse to charge outrageous prices for alcohol, and one senses that most people don't even want to drink at two in the afternoon but it is the thing to do and Villanovans always do the things to do. Last Wednesday, the bar was packed with sun-burned Villanova students who cheered competitors on against schools' like St. Joe's and Northern Michigan in the exotic banana eating contest, the wet T-shirt contest, et. al. (The Wildcats emerged triumphant, for those of you who care, on a come-from-behind effort).

Midway through the competition, with the theme from The American Gigilo blaring and bodies falling, the DJ asked a rather unexpected question. "Where else but in America," he said as Blondie exorted listeners to call anytime, anyplace, "could you hold an exotic banana-eating contest?"

Ah, perceptive man. He then played "America the Beautiful" and compared the efforts of contestants in the contests to the U.S. hockey team.

Where else but in America?

Leaving the main chapel after Mass last Sunday, a man turned to his wife and said something (I didn't have a note pad with me at the time) like, "These kids spend $500 to get a tan and they call themselves Catholics. Why don't they donate that money to the church or to a charity?"

I wanted to object to his argument, since I was included in the collectively guilty mass, but pointing out that there were no doubt certain luxuries that he, too, could forego, but I feared that it would be like defending Nixon by saying that every other president did the same things Dick did but didn't get caught.

Ft. Lauderdale seems to be the embodiment of hedonism in America. It is a town of dichotomies — the rich and the poor; old families and riotous college students; cheap hotels and oppulent homes; Rolls Royce dealerships and jacked-up Red-neck pick-up trucks. Like any other city in America, it thrives on commerce; in Ft. Lauderdale, however, industrial productivity seems limited to yacht-building and maillot sewing. Money is spent on food, lodging, alcohol and the accoutrements of tourism.

It seems almost criminal that so much is spent so frivolously on things so fleeting so insignificant in the context of world affairs. Several steakhouses in the city feature dinner for a very reasonable price with all the wine and beer you can drink and plates of shrimp for appetizers, long before the juicy steak and baked potato loaded with sour cream arrive. A girl at the table next to me cleaned the shrimp with a knife and fork. Would a Cambodian refugee treated to dinner at Beefsteak Charlie's know what to do when the bill came?

Overexposure to the sun can undoubtedly cause skin cancer, and overindulgence in alcohol not only kills brain cells but has other tragic consequences. Yet, sales of Bain de Soleil annually rack up millions, and the people at Miller Brewing belong to a megabuck conglomerate. Only in America.

Florida

A ride on the intracoastal waterway through Ft. Lauderdale is an amazing experience. Canal after canal passes, fronted by beautiful homes with beautiful tennis courts and beautiful pools with beautiful yachts moored outside. There are never any people to be seen, except for the occasional gardener or pool maintenance man. One wonders how so many people could make the kind of money it takes to buy one of those homes. They must be heirs to the Bain de Soleil and Miller Brewing fortunes.

On paper, one can make a pretty convincing argument for the selfishness of the Ft. Lauderdale experience. Once one partakes in the multitude of pleasures the city has to offer for cold northeners, however, objectivity suffers. The justification for the extravagance of personal expenditure would probably be something like, "It's a vacation, a break from the work. These people have earned it." Sounds convincing.

Could Ft. Lauderdale hold the fruits of the American Dream? Who knows? Where else but in America could someone stand in an arcade for hours spending quarters on games of Lunar Landing?

Terrorists Killed: Warner Escapes

By JEFF PAGE

The Central Intelligence Agency received an anonymous phone call on Wednesday, March 12. The caller stated that he was from the Siamese Liberation Army, and " . . . we are responsible for blowing up the cross on top of Sullivan Hall Monday night." Luckily, the C.I.A. traced the call to a house on Roberts Road in Bryn Mawr.

The C.I.A. surrounded the house yesterday morning at approximately 7:00. They called into the house and told the terrorists to come out with their hands up. At this point, one of the terrorists yelled back, "You'll never take us alive, coppers!" And the S.L.A. opened fire at the C.I.A.

The shoot-out lasted only 18 minutes, and in the end it appeared as though all the terrorists were dead. However, when the C.I.A. searched the house, they found WKVU's own Fred Warner bound and gagged in the basement. Warner was immediately brought to Bryn Mawr Hospital, where he was released later that day with no serious injuries.

Warner told WKVU NEWS/WATCH reporter, Robert McGovern, that he had been forced to make the phone call on Wednesday, February 18 (when he stated that he joined forces with the S.L.A.). Warner said that he was also forced to rob the Campus Information Center at Villanova on Thursday, February 21.

The C.I.A. has dropped charges against Fred Warner, and Fred is expected to return to WKVU's TRAFFICWATCH reports from a rented helicopter this morning.

Control of Mideast oil would enable Russia to unite the industrial strength of Europe at one end and that of Japan at the other. Command of the World-Island would only require a waiting of indeterminate length for the door of western civilization.

The Communists, observed Kennan, view capitalism as "bad" — something to be destroyed. Based on the assumption that its leadership is always right, and with no compulsion to hurry, they have no compunction about retreating from time to time, in the face of superior force. But the long range objective remains constant.

Today, Americans must remain cool, firm, pragmatic, and united. Balanced forces and the will to use them will encourage the Russians to "discover the benefits of conciliation and arbitration." Politics Effects Everyone

By FAZIL TAWAB NAJAFI
Asst. Professor of Civil Engineering

Whenever the question of politics arises, we simply say, "I am not a politician," or "I don't want to talk about it," and try to change the subject. But this is not a logical excuse. Politics, one way or another, directly or indirectly, affects our daily lives.

From the evolution of human civilization up to the present, politics, I believe, can be described as fighting among two different social groups or simply cold, or earm war between oppressive and depressive, rich and poor; fights between truth and untruth. But politics sometimes appears in other forms, to say, an internal mentality among the two different social groups for instituting a position in even fight among powers due to nonrealization of certain facts and, perhaps, frustration and a position enforced among the rich due to greediness for more.

Today, small countries and under-developed nations around the world, directly or indirectly, and by their government, rely on West or East. But, what I call the free world, are those people in parts of the world who live under no tyranny, and those who are struggling to free themselves from tyranny. The people of my country, Afghanistan, belong to the free world which desires to remain free without any interference from any power. Today, the invasion of Afghanistan by Russia (U.S.S.R.) is an act of tyranny which is against the wishes of the Afghan people.

Such an invasion and influence of the U.S.S.R. is the result of those previous governments who were against the Afghan people. Looking at the centuries of Afghan's history, it has been a playground of one family ruled by Mohammed Zas, and his rule illustrated a powerful country kept in docks. During the past 20 years, U.S.S.R. used Socialism as an excuse to spread parties of parcham and a people party among intellects. Since such techniques of the Russians were not successful and were not acceptable by the Afghan people, they tried other tactics which resulted in the fall of the Mohammed Zae family (April, 1978), and the subsequent takeover by Taraki and Karmal, the present president.

Because of the Taraki and Karmal tyranny against the people of Afghanistan, and inspite of backing by Russia, Taraki and Karmal have opposed one another and, Karmal, due to advice received by his boss (the U.S.S.R.), has left the country and now resides in East Germany. Russian puppets Taraki and Amin could not tolerate the rise of the freedom loving people of Afghanistan. The U.S.S.R. sees their fall certain, and could not find any other way but to invade Afghanistan and bring their trained puppet Babark Karmal from East Germany and place him as a president.

Meanwhile, Karmal says he has he has invited Russians. In my view, such a puppet will not last long. It will obviously take time for the Afghan people to unite and fight their enemy, "the Russian invaders." Help from neighboring countries of Iran, Pakistan and

Once again, Russian adventurism — this time in Afghanistan — provokes national debate, as the President moves naval forces to the Persian Gulf and urges the registraion of American manpower. One of his advisors bluntly mentions "war" to protect "vital interests" — the 230 billion barrel oil reserve in the Middle East. "If we lost this," said John Foster Dulles during the days of the Cold War, "the rest of the world could not come close to making it up." The Russians then "would gain western Europe without war."

War between the two great powers must inevitably become total; it would involve the world. Therefore, political decisions must be made not on emotional but on geopolitical grounds; a concept first expounded in 1904 by Sir Halford Mackinder in his incisive monograph, The Geographical Pivot of History.

Taking a global view, Mackinder described the world as consisting of two major areas: one dominated by the U.S.S.R.; the other, by the United States. The comparison is ominous. Since whole regions, resources, and the entire population would be involved in total war, the U.S.S.R. is potentially the more powerful. It dominates a World-Island, consisting of Europe, Asia, and Africa, complete in natural resources, covering an area more than twice the size of the other and containing seven times the people. The area dominated by the United States has become increasingly dependent on outside sources for its sustenance and defense.

For these reasons, the injunction stipulated by Mackinder in 1917 is especially significant: "Who rules East Europe," he declared, "commands the Heartland; Who rules the Heartland commands the World-Island; Who rules the World-Island, commands the World."

No one had maintained effective control over the heartland until the Russian Revolution. After WWII, the U.S.S.R. emerged as the greatest land power on the Globe" commanding the "greatest natural fortress on Earth."

Faced by the expansive fervor of Communist ideology, the erosion of wartime alliances, and the inability of devastated countries to defend themselves, the United States developed its policy of "containment," outlined by "X" in an article entitled "Sources of Soviet Conduct" which appeared in the Foreign Affairs Quarterly, July, 1947. The anonymous author turned out to be the State Department's foremost expert on Soviet affairs, George Kennan.

Kennan maintained that the United States and the Soviets were "rivals," rather than "partners," and that the United States could have "no faith in the possibility of a permanent, happy existence." Therefore, he concluded, "Soviet pressure can be contained by the adroit and vigilant application of counterforce at a series of consistently shifting geographical and political points."

In accordance with these principles, the United States erected military and diplomatic defenses for the free world, a kind of "dike" around the entire Eurasian land mass. Whenever Communists probed potential weakness, the full force of the free world, backed by the superior power of the United States, blunted the attempt.

When Russia engineered control of Czechoslovakia, western Europe formed the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. When she maneuvered in the Balkans, the United States enunciated the Truman Doctrine. The Marshall Plan rehabilitated devastated areas of Europe and frustrated attemps at subversion through infiltration. The Berlin Airlift became the symbol of western determination to protect itself.

Similarly, President Eisenhower frustrated Soviet machination in the Middle East when he ordered Marines to land in Lebanon at the request of its chief executive.

Containment was less successful in Asia, however. Until most recently, China was lost when the Nationalists were compelled to retreat to Taiwan. An uneasy truce prevails in Korea. Domestic agitation erupting from tortuous pursuits of limited objectives, resulted in the loss of Southeast Asia. The "dike", erected by patient diplomacy, was seriously breached, perhaps, irrevocably.

Analyzing foreign policy according to geography enables one to avoid the emotionalism of abstract ideas as "peace" rather than "war." All people abhor war. Everyone desires peace, but few people desire peace at the expense of freedom.

It is necessary, instead, for mature Americans to look at the Afghanistan situation not from an individual, local, or particular point of view, but from the overall interest of western civilization and the freedom of mankind.

The Soviets are already influential in Ethiopia. Aggression in Afghanistan is the other end of the pincer. This adventurism was not unexpected. The Russians have always "looked south." In fact, they had suggested to the Nazis, during their 1940 honeymoon, that the Soviet's sphere of influence be "south of Batum and Baku in the general direction of the Persian Gulf."

President of the University. The Director of the Social Actions Office, Edward Collymore, stated that the office works mainly in the areas of academic advancement, affirmative action, and volunteer programs — acting as a liaison for students who would like to volunteer for outside organizations. Collymore noted that times and attitudes have changed since 1969 when the office was founded, and people aren't as interested in doing volunteer work as they used to be. He commented that "The office is trying to recapture the volunteer spirit of the early 70's."

The office currently has a volunteer force, however they would like to make more people on campus aware of their presence. They urge students who are interested in volunteer work or organizations that would like to initiate volunteer programs like Sunshine Day to stop in and make use of the office's programs and resources. Marabella stressed that, "The office is not trying to exclude other organizations from sponsoring their own programs, but we urge them to come to us for help with setting up the programs and getting volunteers since that is one of the main functions of the office."

In keeping with this spirit of cooperation, Marabella has contacted other organizations on campus including the IFC and Campus Ministry to help with Project: Sunshine. He states that campus response has been encouraging. Right now, what Project: Sunshine needs most is money and ideas on how to raise some. Although the program is being subsidized by the Social Actions Office, additional funds are needed.

Due to the success of last year's Sunshine Day, Marabella will be coordinating a similar event this Summer in Berks County, Pennsylvania. This Sunshine Day will be held in Reading on July 19 and will entertain over 1,000 shut-ins from the Berks County area.

As a final thought on participating in Villanova's Sunshine Day this April, Marabella advised, "Volunteer — you'll enjoy it."

Politics

China without any interference or conditions to free Afghanistan. Help will be accepted by the Afghan people as long as they are respected and that present conditions are respected. The USA must resolve their differences with Iran. Iran has publicly criticized Russia's invasion of Afghanistan. Since Iran and USA have their problems, Russia used this as an opportunity and has blocked all actions of Afghanistan to stop any intervention of Iran to help Afghanistan.

In my view, the relationship between Iran and the USA must become normal and that normalization would benefit freedom loving people of Afghanistan to fight their enemy, the Russians.

PINK FLOYD In Concert GARY NUMAN

By CHRIS SLAWECKI

Awesome is a good word. It's useful to have an English word that describes something that is all at once wonderful and overwhelming and frightening. Something like that needs to be experienced only one time, and after that it can never be run away from.

Seeing The Wall being performed live is awesome from the airplane crash that closes the opening number, "In The Flesh," to the end of "The Trial," when the mammoth 210 by 30 foot wall is symbolically destroyed. And it is awesome everywhere in between. The music is definitely heavy (The Wall, Animals, Wish You Were Here, and even The Dark Side of The Moon document anguish caused by conflicting, often imposed, notions of self and sanity), but in the transition from the studio to the stage it loses none of the exquisite, delicate textures that ornament the basic riffs like jade flowers on Chinese porcelain.

David Gilmour proved himself to be a soul-rending vocalist and master of a guitar tone that sliced through the show like a laser. "Comfortably Numb" was an energizing peak: Gilmore, 30 feet above the stage and just visible from behind the wall, made his guitar cry, laugh and sing while Roger Waters peered into the wall and asked, "Hello . . . is there anybody in there?"

Waters' lyrics have always been among rock's finest, from the childish wonder-love in "Us and Them" to the recent triumphs of "Mother" and "One of My Turns." He is frontman for most of this tour, and his voice, especially during "Hey You," took on a spectre-like quality that hypnotized the legions of Floydians.

It's been 14 years since the formation of the Pink Floyd. Those first 14 years were divided into two 7-year phases, marked in the middle by the ground-breaking The Dark Side of The Moon from 1973. 1980 begins another 7 years, and The Wall is the Floyd's new 1980 transmission. And, if you think any of this a bit extreme, well, "after all, it's not easy banging your head against some mad bugger's wall."

by Robert Ballard

Three thousand of them knelt and prayed to the aliens as they journeyed to the year 2000. Their leader addressed them for ninety minutes before bidding his farewell: "Me! I disconnect from you."

Gary Numan and the Tubeway Army invaded the Tower Theater last month, fusing cascading strains of the synthesiser with an eccentric light show to propel the sellout throng into an advanced era of emotionless mechanization.

Fresh off an appearance of Saturday Night Live, Numan was on the third stop of his first North American tour, accompanying the release of his second album, "The Pleasure Principle."

Clad in black pants, black shirt, and a skinny red and blue tie, Numan accentuated his futuristic chords with robot-like movements and an attitude smacking of indifference, nothing new to New Wave concert goers.

The band executed well, performing tracks from their two albums, but failed to vary any of the live versions from their vinyl counterparts.

"Me! I Disconnect From You" and "Praying to the Aliens" highlighted the opening of the show. The band's performance of Numan's best song, "Are 'Friends' Electric," was disappointing, but they more than compensated with a pulsating rendition of their FM hit, "Cars," accompanied by bright white light and blue smoke.

Culture shock waves permeated the theater as Numan concluded his set with "Down in the Park," a mesmerizing musical jaunt into an era free of pleasure or pain.

For his encore, Numan shed his shirt and tie and appeared barechested, complete with leather jacket, not to the dismay of the swarm of punk-fashion freaks in the audience. And then, effectively repeating the first segment of his opening number, he departed: "Me! . . ."

Roy Scheider as Joe Gideon and Jessica Lange as Angelique in "All That Jazz."

MOVIES

All That Jazz

By JEANNE SALVATORE

All That Jazz is a film by Bob Fosse about Bob Fosse. It is a re-creation of his life, show business, stripped of all the glitter until there is nothing but the reality of pain, neuroticism, obsessive drives and the sadistic demand for unending energy.

All That Jazz is a parody of Fosse's life, for Fosse uses his own experiences to create something distinctly original. Fosse like the main character Joe Gideon is a director-choreographer who is neurotically fascinated with sex and alcohol. Both Fosse and Gideon have failed several times at marriage, while having an adolescent daughter they admire and adore.

Gideon is brilliantly portrayed by Roy Scheider. Scheider portrays a character that at times looks almost satanic, yet is also sensitive, insecure and strangely innocent. The brilliance of Scheider's performance can be seen when compared with the vastly different roles he has played in films such as Jaws 1, Jaws 2 and The French Connection.

Scheider, in the opening scene, immediately depicts the essence of the character, a man that is both pathetic and determined. He gets out of bed with a hacking cough, flicks on some baroque music, squeezes a drop of Visine into his swollen red eyes, takes a few Dexedrines, gulps down a glass of Alka-Seltzer and then takes a steaming hot shower with a cigarette dangling from his mouth. He gets out, faces his sorry body in the mirror, shrugs, smiles and says with determination, "It's showtime folks." This scene occurs throughout the film and, significantly, Gideon becomes more pathetic and less determined.

There are, also, memorable performances by Jessica Lange as Gideon's former wife and by Ann Reinking as Katie, Gideon's girlfriend. Yet it teases the imagination to say just how much these women had to feign emotion, for they both have had long-term flings with Fosse, one year for Lange and six for Reinking.

Comparable to Scheider's excellent portrayal of Gideon was the superb performance of the dancers. The dance scenes were, at once, sensuous, compelling and sublimely grotesque. A very notable performance was by Erzebet Foldi, a magnificent twelve-year-old dancer, who played Gideon's daughter.

This movie has all the potentialities for greatness. The dance scenes are marvelously choreographed and as serious entertainment, it is a brilliant portrayal of a person's physical and emotional deterioration. Yet once Gideon suffers a heart attack the movie becomes totally boring.

Gideon wavers between the desire for life and the escape of death. This emotional trauma could have been fascinating, but it merely appears contrived. There is a seemingly endless scene of open heart surgery and a ridiculous dance to the tune of "I think he's gonna die."

Some critics have praised this movie as an artistic masterpiece, and it was nominated for several Academy Awards. Yet most critics, including this one, find this movie to be ruined with Fosse's obsession with himself and with death. All That Jazz is merely an autobiography of Bob Fosse tainted rather than painted with imagination.

The Biggest Prize in Sport

By JERRY ARTH

Punk rock's foundation rests in its sheer, raw energy. But a certain malaise seems to affect punk bands which achieve any real measure of success — they lose a large part of the vitality that makes listening to them in a small club such a pleasure. 999, with their latest release, The Biggest Prize in Sport, is one such band. The production of the record is flawless; but therein lies the fault. Punk rock was meant to be full of flaws. It does not easily lend itself to studio perfection.

999 first came to prominence two years ago in England with their first album, "999," with its hit single, "Emergency" (in England, 999 is a number you dial for emergency). Guitarist/vocalists Nick Cash and Guy Days combined to provide a raw and frenzied sound, a sheer attack of music. With their new album, however, 999 has obviously worked hard on polishing it in the studio. But the overall effect is not a good one; the album is more in the '60's revivalist style than the punk vein, and the music is something that could be heard on old Beach Boys lp's.

There are a few well-done tunes on this record. "Hollywood," the single released with the album, is an acceptable song in the '60's style, and "Boiler" also shows the pure fury that the band is capable of emitting. But the best track on The Biggest Prize in Sport in my opinion is a classic-punk tune, "English Wipe-Out." This song highlights the type of music 999 plays best; high-intensity rock with many more subtleties than one would think possible for any punk rockers.

The Biggest Prize in Sport is refreshing to see, for it proves that the underground musical movement is alive and well still. But it also points out the deadly flaw of punk cum respectability: Overpolishing and lack of the normal high-intensity that characterizes such music.

THE VILLANOVAN

is looking for freshmen and sophomores who are interested in working in the business department of the newspaper.

Positions available for business, advertising, or managing editors. No experience neccessary. For information, call or leave a message in the Villanovan office at extension 640, 2nd floor, Dougherty Hall.

What I Don't Want

By JOHN PASCAL

I was enjoying a perfect vacation until I fulfilled my Villanovan assignment of reviewing Just Tell Me What You Want, an assignment for which I unfortunately volunteered. Little did I know that I would be suffering through 105 minutes of unadulterated boredom. In other words, clearly the movie is not worth the admission of $4.00. I would further add that had I been offered a free ticket, I would not go.

Alan King plays a millionaire-industrialist named Max Herschel, an unscrupulous man who believes in the complete manipulation of people, especially of his mistress Bones Burton, portrayed by Ali MacGraw. After Max refuses her the opportunity to manage one of his movie studios, Bones leaves him and marries a young, supposedly talented writer named Steven Rutledge, as played by Peter Weller. Bones and Steven travel to Hollywood in order for Steven to fulfill his chance of producing a movie.

When Bones discovers that Max has secretly financed the entire production in order to prove his love for Bones and to take monetary advantage of Steven's talents, she rushes back to New York and for several scenes remains alone in her apartment eating fudge and contemplating her next moves. Meanwhile, Steven is inexplicably left out for the remainder of the movie.

Apart from this incoherency, Max is seen having temper tantrums over various business deals. He finally demands that a pacemaker be implanted in his already healthy heart. Bones comes to see him and through an elongated talky dialogue, the movie's main characteristic, the couple declare their love for each other and decide to marry.

Just Tell Me What You Want does show how much of the wealthy greedily desire power, but unfortunately it gives no positive or hopeful solution to this problem.

The Clash

London Calling

By CHRIS SLAWECKI

Separating the four English punk-rockers in the Clash from their music and politics is becoming increasingly difficult. So much of London Calling is political and social commentary that the music might seem secondary, yet the band still cooks up rock and roll for the sake of a good time. Here are many contradictions, of which the most recent, how to combine punk aggression with Rasta passivity, might be the most important, but those tensions create enormous energy.

This could be the most definitive statement of a group's attitudes since the Stones' Exile on Main Street, which was, like London Calling, a 2-LP set. Of the 19 tracks, 4 are extremely important to an understanding of the Clash and their musical repertoire.

"London Calling" is a pointed summary of lone-wolf rage that strikes out at corporate manipulation with the line, "Phony Beatlemania has bitten the dust," and repeats the threats of the coming ice age that they've been flirting with since the closing cords of "London's Burning." "Wrong 'Em Boyo" appeals to the human race as a community through its judgement that it is wrong to cheat the trying man. This is nothing spectacular, just cohesive with the overall message of (gasp!) popular revolution.

"The Guns of Brixton," my favorite, is where the influence of reggae is most obvious. The simple rhythm section churns behind Strummer's chunka-chunka guitar, and Simonon quietly threatens, "You'll have to answer to The Guns of Briston," like Lou Reed throws off the line, "Somebody else would have broken both of her arms," to close Berlin. Real scary stuff.

The Clash's recent fascination with late 1950's rockers is manifest in their rendition of 1959's "Brand New Cadillac." Mick Jones lays some licks that not even Mr. Berry could rip off, and the whole thing sounds like the soundtrack for a Warholian motorcycle gang movie.

The inner sleeve defiantly points out that the Clash only has 2 more albums on their contract with CBS/Epic. While this might be biting the hand that feeds them, it's obvious that the band views record company execs from across a gulf of contempt and skepticism. I agree that much of London Calling withers beside their first album, but this might be better in the long run. Success in America is across a much tamer musical level than in England, and by catering to all us rich Americans by smoothing out the rough edges with horns and pianos, the Clash might be going for the corporate jugular by beating it at its own money-making game. Please don't touch that dial, folks, 'cus I got the feeling they're setting us up for the kill.

Cats Quit Eastern 8

Villanova Goes Big East

Villanova announced today that it will withdraw from the Eastern Athletic Association, the four-year-old, eight-member body that holds championships in six men's sports, including basketball, and has applied for membership in the Big East Conference.

"An evaluation is being made on our entire athletic program and its financial viability," Villanova Athletic Director Dr. Ted Aceto said. "We had experienced difficulties with regard to the television conflicts between the Eastern Eight and the ECAC (Eastern Collegiate Athletic Conference) in basketball. The Eastern Eight has attempted to make progress, but, with our dual affiliation with the ECAC, I doubt whether we could receive the exposure we need to show our product to our biggest contingent of alumni and friends."

Dr. Leland Byrd, executive director of the EAA, said, "I think that Villanova felt that their program would be better served by pulling out. I guess that is their prerogative." Villanova's withdrawal from the EAA would follow Penn State's pull out.

If the Big East Conference accepts Villanova's application, the university should become part of a television package which could increase revenue to the athletic department budget. The Wildcats did not appear on any regular season EAA televised games, and their only exposure came recently in the EAA tournament in Pittsburgh.

With the addition of Villanova, the Big East would encompass four of the nation's eight largest markets — Philadelphia, New York, Boston and Washington D.C. Also the Cats would be playing their league games in some of the most modern and largest facilities available to the college game today.

Villanova was the only school to retain their ECAC status while joining the EAA, mainly because of the track program's affiliation. Total withdrawal from the ECAC would not allow the Wildcat runners to compete in the IC4A's, a championship Villanova won last Sunday.

"The biggest thing is to remain active in the ECAC," Aceto said. "Our track program is vital to our entire athletic commitment and its heritage. If we were to lose our IC4A identity by dropping from the ECAC, it would destroy much of the natural exposure we get from our track team."

Villanova had been a charter member of the Eastern Eight in 1976. The EAA holds league championships in six men's sports: baseball, basketball, cross country, golf, swimming and tennis. Current members are: Duquesne, George Washington, Massachusetts, Pittsburgh, Rutgers, St. Bonaventure, and West Virginia.

Should Villanova enter the Big East next season, they would join, Syracuse, Georgetown, Boston College, St. John's, Connecticut, Seton Hall and Providence.

During in-league competition, the Wildcats compiled the best record of any member school with 29 wins and eight defeats.

So far, no replacement has been found for Villanova in the EAA.

Meanwhile, The Philadelphia Inquirer reported yesterday that Villanova basketball coach Rollie Massimino has met with University of Pittsburgh officials about the school's vacant coaching job.

The Inquirer reported that athletic director Aceto is as of yet unsure of Massimino's plans.

Watercats Eighth in ECC

By PETER J. RYAN

While many Villanova sports fans were keeping an eye on the progress of the Wildcat basketball team, swimming Head Coach Ed Geisz and his Watercats were busy grabbing an eighth place finish in the Eastern Collegiate Championships. Three school records were established along with Bob Santoli's new freshman mark in the 400 individual medley.

It was junior Todd Russell who set new school marks in the 100 and 200 yard freestyle while the freshman Santoli was making his own headlines. As Coach Geisz predicted, the 800 yard freestyle relay team of Russell, junior Bob Kownurko and Bob and Bruce Baltera bettered the old record of 7:03 (set in 1971) with a 6:58 time. Overall, the five school records that fell this season indicate the strengths of the swimmers and a hope for the future. "After a season like this there is no question that we are on the upswing," reflected Geisz.

Upon their return to school (after the vacation), the Watercats held a meeting to determine co-captains for the '80-'81 campaign and merits for individual swimmers and divers. Sharing the "outstanding swimmer" award were juniors Bob Baltera and Todd Russell — the pair were also elected co-captains for the upcoming season. Mark Feldner was the team's "outstanding diver" while Darrel Linder netted the "loyalty" award. Senior co-captain Steve Quindlen was voted "most improved" for his determination in a personally successful season.

Icecats Advance to Finals

By JIM FEMIA

The Villanova Icecats will try to dethrone defending champion Penn State as the two clash in this year's Mid-Atlantic Collegiate Hockey Conference finals. The three-game series begins tonight at the Radnor Rink while the second and third games will be played at Penn State. In the semi-final round, Villanova had a surprisingly easy time with the University of Delaware, winning 9-5, while Penn State disposed of West Chester State 7-1.

Previous to the semi-final round game with Delaware, the Icecats had a tough time with the Blue Hens. In the three regular-season games, the series was tied at 1-1-1. Delaware took the season opener, winning 6-4 and Villanova won the second match 8-7, with the help of Tom Curran's seven goals. In the season finale, Delaware scored two goals in the final minute to tie the Wildcats 5-5.

Both coaches, S.J.O. Probst of Villanova and Pat Monoghan of Delaware, admitted before game time that whichever team worked the hardest would earn a trip to the finals. The Wildcats outhustled the Blue Hens as they took a 9-5 victory.

Things started out slowly for the Icecats as Delaware opened the scoring three minutes into the game. The lead was short lived as Bill Quinlan made an end-to-end rush and knotted the score 1-1. Chris Mancuso then put the Cats in the lead for good, scoring off a shot from the slot. Villanova began to take control of the game scoring twice more before the end of the period. Ken Downey found the net after taking a pass from John Lammers and Jim Femia scored on a slapshot from the blueline.

The Blue Hens made things interesting for a while as they scored the first goal of the second period to make the score 4-2, but Mancuso scored twice more and captain Mike Fitzgerald scored to make the score 7-2 after two periods.

The Icecats knew not to relax against Delaware after their disappointing 5-5 tie and continued to put the pressure on the Blue Hens. Tom Curran scored to make the score 8-2 Villanova, but this is where things got a bit hairy for the Cats. Delaware put on a quick serge and scored three goals in a 1-1/2 minute span to make the score 8-5 with only five minutes to play. Goalie Tom Margiette was outstanding in the final portions of the game, stopping the Hen onslaught. With one minute to play, Delaware was forced to pull their goalie for the extra shaker. Mancuso then gathered the puck at center ice and went in to score unmolested to ice the game for the Cats.

In summary, Mancuso scored four goals and single goals came from Quinlan, Downey, Femia, Fitzgerald and Curran. Assists were handed out by Mike Kane, Barry "Killer" Whitaker, Paul LaFond, Lammers, Femia, Mancuso and Curran.

This will be the second time in three years that Villanova has made it to the finals. Two years ago the Icecats met Delaware but lost and last year Penn State defeated Delaware in a three game series. The Icecats are looking forward to an exciting series with Penn State. During the regular season, Villanova won once and Penn State twice.

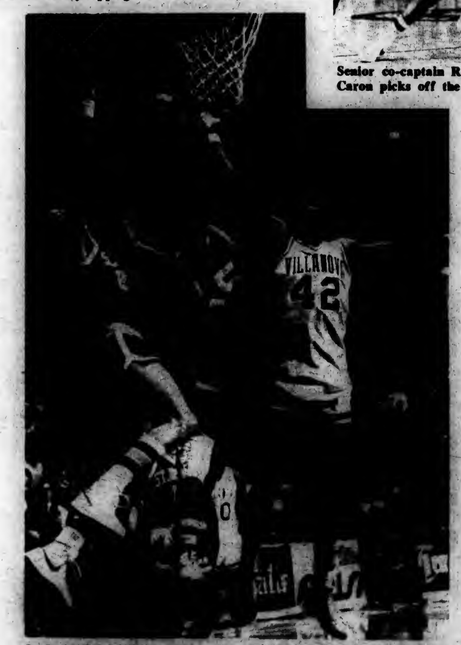
Successful Season for Hoopsters

Sophomore forward Aaron Howard shoots over the West Virginia Mountaineers as the Cats won the ECC tournament by topping the Mountaineers, 74-62.

Junior guard Tom Sienkiewicz goes up for a layup and is called for offensive charging against Louis Orr of Syracuse in a controversial play in the second round of NCAA tournament play.

Senior co-captain Rory Sparrow was awesome as co-captain Marty Caron picks off the Marquette defense.



St. Joe's "Bee" Williams gets a piece of Allen Bradley's last-second shot to squelch Villanova's chance at the Big 5 title. The Hawks prevailed, 69-68.

Marquette's Mickey Lee attempts over Villanova's Tom Sienkiewicz in the first round of the Eastern Regionals. Lee's jump shot with 4 seconds left in the game gave the Warriors a 70-68 victory over the Wildcats.

The Villanova-Syracuse game drew a capacity crowd of 6827 to the Philadelphia Civic Center. The Wildcats fell to the Orangemen 97-83 to finish their 19-09 season with its 97-83 loss to Syracuse.

Cats Capture IC4A's . . .Again

By [illegible] ENGLER and DAVE CONLEY

The Wildcat indoor track team gained the IC4A Indoor Track championship for the fourth consecutive time this past Sunday at Princeton's Jadwin Gymnasium. The fact that this IC4A trophy is the seventeenth in the last 24 years to call the Fieldhouse home amplifies Villanova's rich track history and this is not an unusual feat.

What was unusual, however, was how they won. When the final scores were tallied the announcer could have slipped and named, the winner with 66 points, the Villanova wounded Wildcats."

Coach Jumbo Elliot's troops have been plagued by injuries all year. Now that Sydnee Maree and Anthony Tufariello have come back, blue chipper Don Paige has been struck by a stamina biting flu bug. Paige finished fifth, a full six seconds off the winning pace in the 800 meters, an event in which he is the NCAA Indoor Champion. Paige's training is not in question. "I am in the best physical condition of my life," cited Paige. "I just don't know what happened, I was totally exhausted."

Senior Carey Pinkowski turned in a stellar performance with two fine races. In the 5000 meter run, Pinkowski clocked a 14:02.96, edged out in a fantastic finish by teammate Sydnee Maree in 14:02.88. The Wildcat duo finished six seconds ahead of their nearest competitors. Pinkowski also turned in a fine half-mile leg in the winning distance medley team. Maree was making his first appearance since January 13; he had been hampered by leg miseries.

Amos Korir, who anchored the distance medley team, was edged by Sosthenes Bitor of Richmond in the 3000 meters. Ironically, Korir and Bitor are friends from home in Kenya, almost neighbors (they live seven miles apart). Senior Dean Childs followed fourth in the 3000 while carrying the three-quarter mile leg of the distance medley.

One of the highlights of the meet was freshman Rodney Wilson's performance in taking the 55 meter hurdles in 7.29 seconds. Carlton Young finished fourth with 6.34 in a meet record 6.23 55 meter dash. Tim Robinson, the third Wildcat freshman, clocked a 49.9 in the 200 meter leg of the distance medley.

A perennial track foe, the Terapins of Maryland, finished a disappointing third with 46-1/2 points. The Terps were minus world-record hurdler Renaldo Nehemiah.

Edging Maryland with 58 points was Farleigh Dickinson University, finishing in their best placing ever.

The Wildcats travel to Louis Arena this Friday for the NCAA Indoor Championships. The Cats will defend their NCAA trophy against a tough Texas-El Paso squad.

NET NOSTALGIA

Wildcat Memories

By JERRY DOUGHERTY

A weekend that began so spectacularly for Villanova with a win Friday over Marquette ended on a down note as the Wildcats were eliminated from the NCAA basketball Tournament by Syracuse this past Sunday.

In the first-round game of the Eastern Sub-Regionals at Providence, R.I., Villanova faced a Marquette Warrior team which carried a deceptive 18-8 record into the tournament. Going into the game Marquette, coached by Hank Raymonds, had won 12 of its last 15 games.

Friday night's win raised the Wildcat's seasonal record to 23-7 and sent them into a Sunday afternoon rematch with sixth-ranked Syracuse, which had defeated Villanova 92-84 back in December at the Rochester Classic.

The game ended much in the same way as Friday's game had, only this time it was the Wildcats who looked on in frustration as Syracuse connected on their one-and-ones to clinch the victory and send the crowd of 6827 home.

Top scorers for Villanova in the game were Sienkiewicz with 22 points, Alex Bradley with 19, Pinone with 12, and Sparrow and Lincoln with 10 apiece.

The Villanova-Syracuse game began around 3:30 Sunday afternoon, following a tight first game in which Georgetown eliminated Iona, 74-71.

Villanova played hard against Syracuse, but they failed to control the tempo or keep the Orangemen from getting second shots at the basket, as Massimino said they must.

Syracuse, powered by a run of 12 straight points in the first half and a career-high 29 points by forward Eric Santifer, overpowered the Wildcats 97-83.

With the loss to Syracuse, Villanova finished its season with a 23-8 record, its best mark since 1970-71, when the Wildcats went to the NCAA finals.

Women Shooters Shine

By RAY ENGLER

On February 29, the clock struck midnight.

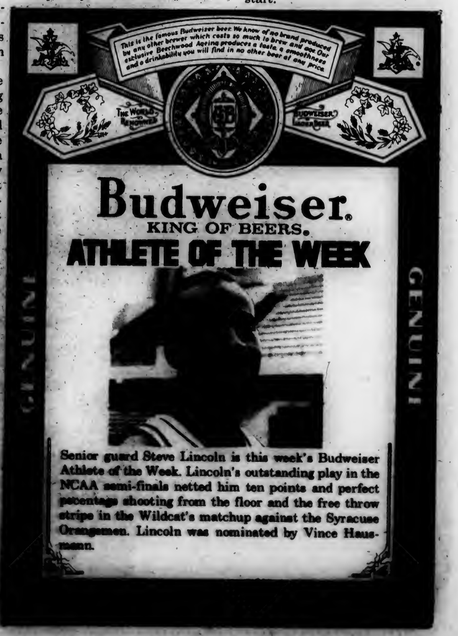
Villanova's women Wildcats, the Cinderella team in women's basketball this year, were eliminated by a deep and talented Rutgers team 71-41 at the old Rutgers gymnasium, affectionately known as "The Barn."

Despite the lopsided score, the women have no reason to hang their heads. They provided some exciting moments to their fans all season. Who will soon forget the 16-game winning streak which opened the season? Not many other women's teams could boast a 20-5 record. And more importantly, their winning the first womens Big 5 title will not soon be forgotten.

Almost the entire team will return next season. However, co-captain Lisa Souder, the spiritual and emotional leader of the team, graduates this year. She will be sorely missed for her enthusiasm and hard work. Optimistically, though, is the fact that all the starters will return next year, including the other co-captain, guard Mary Beth Gibson. Also coming back for the Wildkittens will be forwards Kathie Beisel and Stephanie Vandeslice, guard Karen Hizmay and center Lisa Ortlip. (One of the few bright spots in the Rutgers game was the fact that Ortlip passed the 700-point mark for her career early in the first half).

Even though the season did end on a sour note, the team rose to Division 1 this year and found itself among the top 20 teams in the nation from January 20 to February 20. Big 5 rival St. Joe's was the only other Philadelphia school to accomplish this before.

Hopefully Coach Harry Perretta's charges will continue to grow and build, to become a true power in women's collegiate basketball. This year was a good start.



Senior guard Steve Lincoln is this week's Budweiser Athlete of the Week. Lincoln's outstanding play in the NCAA semi-finals netted him ten points and perfect percentage shooting from the floor and the free throw stripe in the Wildcat's matchup against the Syracuse Orangemen. Lincoln was nominated by Vince Haussmann.

Anyone who came in just knew we had the lowest prices on stereo in Richmond. Our philosophy has never changed from those days. Each of our 43 stores embodies that same "no-frills, low overhead" credo that enables us to keep our prices low. On top of that, we felt giving a free five-year guarantee on all home stereo was just the kind of "insurance" the stereo buyer really wants. Especially if it's free. Quite simply, that's the Harvey's Warehouse story.

SGA Elections Scheduled

President, Senators to be Elected Next Week

By BILL CLARK

The plans for this year's Student Government Association elections have been announced by the SGA Election Commission. With all the campaign petitions having been submitted, the SGA has scheduled this year's election to be held on Thursday, March 27.

This year, there will be two candidates for SGA President; Dean Valente and Henry Amoroso.

For any of these candidates to win outright, he must gain at least 50 percent of the total vote. If no candidate receives the necessary majority, there will be a run-off election, which is scheduled for April 10.

According to the guidelines set up by the Election Commission, there will be a debate among the Presidential candidates on Wednesday, March 26.

In addition to the Presidential contest, there will be seven students competing for three Arts seats on the University Senate and three contestants for the one Science seat.

Five candidates will attempt to fill the two vacant senate seats for the College of Commerce and Finance. Also, one student will be seeking the sole seat from the College of Engineering, with two students competing for the College of Nursing seat.

The SGA Election Committee has laid down the rules for this year's campaign. No student may begin his campaign until Thursday, March 20. Presidential candidates are limited to a $100 campaign budget, with candidates for Senate seats being limited to $40. Following a policy officially adopted last year, there will be no write-in candidates allowed in this year's election.

All candidates will also be limited as to where they may campaign. Permission must be obtained from appropriate University authorities in order to campaign in the cafeterias and dormitories. According to the Elections Committee rules, any candidate may be taken off the ballot for serious campaign infractions.

Those running for the Arts seats are Helen Carey, Kim Kingsland, Bobbie Pietropolo, Wayne Remai, Robert Hubsmith, Kevin O'Leary and Bob DeConcini. Those running for the Science seat are F. Richard Burns, Michael Patti, and Mary Prah, while Rich Carnal, Bruce Keogh, Katy MacLachlan, Lou Casari and Peter Ciezji battle for C&F spots. John Sweet is seeking the Engineering position, and Amy Inconvaia and Ivy Tichler are competing for the Nursing seat.

Dean Valente and Henry Amorosa are this year's candidates for SGA President.

Center Opens Doors to Public

By FRANK J. DOHERTY

The Connelly Center opened Tuesday amid a flurry of activity.

Highlights of the center's first day of operation included a billiards demonstration by Nick Varner, specialist in trick and fancy shots.

The outdoor plaza of the Connelly Center was the site of one unscheduled exhibit. Three stocking-capped male streakers made a brief appearance just as the lunch time crowd reached its peak.

billiards demonstration was part of opening-day ceremonies for the nnelly Center. Jeff Paige Photo

University President, Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A. said that he was delighted with the reaction of the students to the new building.

"The Connelly Center represents the work and generosity of many people and stands as a tribute to them," Driscoll added.

Rev. John E. Deegan, O.S.A., vice president for Student Life, termed the first day of the center's operation, "a success." He said, "The building is functioning and students are using it."

Deegan continued, "I hope that people will socialize here rather than the library."

Dean of Student Activities, Rev. Robert J. Martin, O.S.A. said, "I've been coming in here for two years now, but the place has always been empty. I am amazed at the way the building handles the large number of people."

"We are all extremely happy that we achieved our goal of eight million dollars," said Rev. George F. Riley, O.S.A., vice president for University Relations, in reference to the Covenant Campaign, which in part paid for the Connelly Center.

Director of the Connelly Center, Marc E. Tuchman is very pleased with the reaction to the center. "I couldn't ask for more in terms of a positive approach," he said.

"I've opened up a building before, and I sort of had a feel for what to expect in terms of people's reaction. The reaction of the students at Villanova exceeded my expectations," commented Tuchman.

"Things are going along good," said Tuchman.

Gregg Chamra, head of food services and sales in the center, stressed the availability of quality at a reasonable price. "We've been really busy," he said, "the food has been accepted."

Mrs. Peg Mason, the center's scheduling and conference coordinator said that the first day, "went beautifully."

The many students using the center also expressed a favorable reaction.

Kathleen Leonard said, "I am standing in unabounded wonder that Villanova could create something of this caliber."

Senior student Jim Russell termed the building, "overwhelming," and said "at least I'm going to be here while it's still clean."

Jane Zennario, who is working as a cashier in the Belle Air Terrace, said, "I really think that the students will take care of the center."

"I'm moving in tommorrow," said Britt Gourley.

Kerry Shannon said, "If I were a senior in high school, and I saw this, I'd come here a lot quicker than I did before."

Priscilla Bodner felt that the Connelly Center is "what the school really needed."

Ozzie Reinhold called the building, "a grand architectural achievement, very reminiscent of the Golden Hall of Rohan at Edoras."

"I think it's great. I love working here. It's a definite improvement to the big V.U.," said freshman Nancy Curran.

Leak Discovered

By FRANK J. DOHERTY

A number of leaks were discovered in the new Connelly Center during the torrential downpour of one week ago.

The leaks occurred where the roof of the Belle Air Terrace and the roof of the main lobby meet. They were first noticed on the evening of Thursday, March 13.

Marc. E. Tuchman, director of the Connelly Center, said, "The membrane which seals the valley between the two roofs was apparently punctured after installation."

The Connelly Center staff reacted immediately by placing large buckets under the dripping water.

Tuchman reported that there was no damage caused by the leakage. He said that the carpet which got wet is water-resilient and only had to be vacuumed dry.

Workmen recaulked the damaged area on Monday, March 17.

Tuchman termed the incident, "not at all unusual." He went on to say, "I've never been involved in a project that didn't leak."

Tuchman also stated that he felt the incident was not newsworthy, dismissing it by saying, "I'll bet your house leaks."

Price is $10.00 per person [illegible] but next week the tickets will cost $12.0[illegible] per person. Reservations are not limited t[illegible] couples and friends are welcome.

We will be performing at the St. Patrick's Day Parade in Philadelphia this Sunday, March 16. All members must march. We will be meeting at St. Mary's Hall on the 16th at 10:00 a.m. in full uniform. Election for next year's executive board will take place before departure.

The concert band will be performing on Thursday, March 20, at 8:00 p.m. in the newly opened Villanova Center of the Connelly Center. Please come out and support your band.

Villanova Distance Classic

The Villanova Wildcat Running Club is sponsoring their First Villanova Distance Classic on this coming Sunday. It is a 6.2 mile race in which the proceeds will benefit the American Cancer Society. The race entry fee is $3.50 before March 22nd, $4.00 on race day. T-Shirts are being provided by Rosemont's Athlete's Foot. Starting time is 10 a.m., registration at 8:15. Gift certificates to the Athlete's Foot will be given out as prizes. The course begins near the Southeast parking lot on Ithan Ave.

Sigma Xi Seminar

Dr. Wm. B. Langan will discuss "Effects of intrauterine foreign bodies on implantation of blastocysts" in a "brown-bag" luncheon seminar sponsored by the Villanova Sigma Xi chapter on Thursday, March 28, at 12:30 in Room 302 Tolentine Hall. Refreshments will be served. All students and faculty are invited.

Mentzer Memorial Award

Each year, for nine years now, the University sponsors a memorial award to honor one student who, from documented services, appears to have contributed most to expanding opportunities for the underprivileged. The award perpetuates the memory of a former faculty member, Thomas J. Mentzer, whose own energies were so generously given to the same cause.

The Villanovan invites students to nominate students who volunteer their time and energy on a regular basis to such programs as social action programs, hospital volunteer programs, etc. The purpose of the Mentzer Award is to give recognition to that individual whose generosity is matched by his/her anonymity.

Nominations must be confined to Villanova students, and it is requested that some particulars about the individuals be given so that documentation of their efforts be obtained. No interviews of candidates are conducted. As to tangible merits, the award is in the form of a cash stipend, individual and University mounted plaques, and a reference credential of which nominees may be rightly proud.

Dr. James Murphy and Dr. Patrick Nolan, of the English Department, would be pleased to accept nominations.

Peace and Justice

Joe Biegner, a first year law student is interested in starting a student group to study peace and social justice. Issues to deal with are hunger, disarmament, third world, the draft. . .

Meeting Thursday, March 27, at 4:30 in Tolentine 215. Slide presentations "Faces of My Brother" and "Faces of Hunger" focus on the third world and hunger.

Interested? Contact Joe Biegner at 477-5976 or Sally Livingston at the Center for Concern, Dougherty Hall, Rm. 206, Ext. 760.

Dorm Residents Question Change

By BRIAN QUINN

Assistant Dean of Men Anthony Martin has discounted charges that the conversion of Galberry Hall and a wing of Stanford Hall to academic dormitories was motivated by a desire to discipline residents of those halls.

Tony Martin, assistant dean of men, rejects resident's claims.

The Dean of Men's office has recently announced the conversion of Galberry Hall and the 4th floor B-wing of Stanford Hall from "a nice place to live" into a "special academic area designed to make residence halls a place where education will continue."

The motivation behind the administrations decision to convert Galberry and 4th floor B-wing is purely disciplinary, not academic as the administration would have the students believe, past and present residents of those areas have claimed.

"The administration is without a doubt throwing the members of Galberry out for disciplinary reasons, not academic, because they are afraid that Galberry will continue to be inhabited by party-oriented people," stated a former resident who wishes to remain anonymous.

In the past two years five residents of Galberry have been kicked off campus due to disciplinary difficulties, stated Mark O'Neil, a current resident of Galberry. "The students residential status was revoked because of disciplinary problems, although I don't call them problems," he said.

Residents of Galberry say they enjoy the style which off-campus housing provides because the dormitory is a very small, attractively furnished residence, which is set off by itself on the eastern fringe of the campus. Students say they are naturally attracted to Galberry because it offers a change from the regimented lifestyle of halls like Sullivan and Sheehan.

"I liked the guys," stated Chris Kaye, a freshman resident of Galberry who had hoped to return there next year. "But I feel we are getting a bad deal because some people got kicked out of here. The dean just doesn't like us," he stated.

In the residents' view fourth floor B-wing of Stanford Hall is not a likely location to establish "a special academic area . . . where education will continue" because, unlike Galberry, it will be surrounded by students who are not "looking for a new living experience at Villanova."

"This wing had a bad reputation but we haven't had too many problems this year," stated a resident of the wing, John LaTorre. "I got a 22 in the lottery and I can't even reserve my room for next year. We tried to speak to Ed Gallagher about it but we are up against a brick wall," he said.

"I don't think we did anything too bad . . . well on occasion, but I don't think it was any more rowdy than anybody else," stated Don Swete, a former resident of 4-B. "It was just a beer drinking wing which liked to get six or seven rooms into one and play some music, and just have a good time."

"Conceivably, yes," something like this could work, but I presume they are not going to mix the sexes," stated professor of sociology Barry Young. Many years ago we suggested a system similar to this which would permit the students to complete their entire day's schedule (including the preparation of their meals in a private kitchen) within the residence hall. "But we never got it off the ground. It was killed by the administration," he said.

"I'm not necessarily for the idea but if we could establish a workable curriculum, why not make it a campus-wide thing?" Young added.

The allegations that Galberry was chosen to be converted to an academic dorm to alleviate any disciplinary problems were denied by assistant dean Martin: "Galberry Hall was selected because it offers a non-institutional setting for something special." "If there were an institutional setting with capacity for 18 students we would still chose Galberry."

Martin added that Galberry will be a beginning in what is a long-term project pursued by the administration.

"Galberry will provide for a complete education. Those applying are taking risks — they know of other alternatives yet they are choosing Galberry."

Patterns Emerging from Data on Incoming Class

By RICHARD DISTEFANO

Applications for Villanova's Class of 1984 are being received and processed by the Undergraduate Admissions Office. As of February 29, 1465 available openings in the four colleges were being sought by over 6300 prospective students, with more applications arriving each day.

Father Harry J. Erdlen, O.S.A., director of admissions, stated that "Although we will not have a good picture of this fall's entering freshman class until mid-May, we have a basis for some predictions." He believes, for example, that most successful applicants will come from the first and second quintiles based on high school class rank.

The size of the incoming freshman class will be smaller than it has been in recent years as a result of Father President Driscoll's directive that the above quota for the number of openings be maintained, since facilities are currently being used to the fullest extent.

As usual a majority (more than 80 percent) of students are indicating a preference for resident status. Forty-five percent of the applicants are female. Of all those requesting admission to Villanova, 14 percent have or have had a parent or sibling attend the school.

Almost one-third of the applicants for the Class of 1984 are from Pennsylvania, with more than half of these desiring to live on campus. Ninety-three percent of the applicants live in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York, Connecticut, Massachusetts, and Maryland, in that order. Other areas containing a concentration of aspiring Villanovans include Virginia, Delaware, Florida, Puerto Rico, Illinois, Rhode Island, and Ohio.

Of applicants attending high schools that rank their students, the College of Engineering draws 85 percent of its applicants from the first two quintiles of class rank. Four-fifths of those applying to the College of Nursing are in the first two quintiles; the percentages within this ranking for the Colleges of Arts and Sciences, and Commerce and Finance are 76 percent and 74 percent, respectively.

It should be stressed that these figures refer to those applying to Villanova; high school ranks for accepted and enrolled students will represent somewhat higher percentages than these.

Rev. Harry Erdlen, O.S.A., director of Admissions.

Officials Claim Station Now Safe

By MARGUERITE ESMONDE

Answering a complaint filed by the University with the Pennsylvania Public Utility Commission, PennDot, Amtrak, Conrail, Septa, Delaware County and Radnor Township have stated that crossing conditions at Villanova's train station are safe.

"Each of the respondents take a substantially similar stance," said James W. Patterson, Villanova's lawyer for the case. "The central position taken was that the existing facility for crossing the train tracks is adequate."

According to Patterson, the next step will be to attempt to reach an agreement with the respondents out of court. A viewing of the site may be held to further study conditions at the station.

"The main question is whether the underpass is safe and adequate," Patterson said, "and I suspect that we won't be able to come to an agreement without a viewing, if one is reached at all. I don't expect to magically come up with an agreement."

Should the parties involved fail to settle out of court, a hearing will be conducted by the PUC to determine whether conditions at the station are safe. If the judge then decides that a problem exists, a second hearing will be held to determine what action should be taken.

"It's still too early to know what the results will be," Patterson said.

Honors Examines Values

By BILL ROCK

The junior members of Villanova's Honors Program sponsored Honors Junior Week, a week-long series of lectures and panel discussions addressing the theme, The Me Culture: The nature of the changing American values and its implications for the future," from March 10-14.

On Monday evening, March 10, Dr. Daniel J. Callahan, director of the Hastings Institute for Social Ethics and the Life Sciences, delivered a lecture entitled, "Narcissism vs. Altruism: The Future of American Values."

Laura Podrotty and Morris Park performing in improvisational sketch.

Callahan traced the root causes of narcissism in our culture and its development. He explored the possible future for American society, should this trend continue. He pointed out what he felt must occur if this growing narcissism is to be stopped, but expressed skepticism on its actually being halted.

On Tuesday evening of Honors Junior Week, a panel addressed the changing American standard of living and the demands of the labor force. The panel consisted of Larry Kaagan, a research associate for Yankelovich, Skelly and White, Inc.; John J. Quindlen, general manager of finance for E.I. Dupont de Nemours, Inc.; Nichalas Rongione, Sr., secretary-treasurer for the Insurance Workers International Union: and Max Weiner, director of the Consumer Education and Protection Agency. The panel was moderated by C. Gerald Walsh, professor of economics at Villanova.

In what was certainly the most heated discussion of the week, these men of very different backgrounds squared off in vehement debate. In particular, Weiner and Quindlen argued over the role of the consumer and the corporation in America, while Kaagan and Rongione battled over the accuracy of public opinion polls.

On Wednesday, Dr. Eugene C. Kennedy of Loyola University delivered a lecture entitled, "The 80's: What do We Live By?"

Bill Guerin, Chairman of Honors Junior Week, expressed

Students Rally For Soviet Jewry

By IRENE SMITH

A delegation of students from the Philadelphia area recently traveled to Washington, D.C., to take part in the Fourth Annual Washington Lobby sponsored by the Student Coalition for Soviet Jewry.

Brad Boxman and Scott Paris were the representatives from Villanova who took part in this march on February 20, 1980. Together they met with Senators and Congressmen to bring attention to the plight of Soviet Jewry. The march included students from Boston to Washington, D.C., and numbered over 1000 participants.

The Student Coalition's goal at the march in Washington was to meet with as many Congressmen as possible to apply pressure so they would insert clauses in various pieces of legislation to insure the rights of Soviet Jews, namely the right to emigrate. The USSR, despite the Helsinki Accords of 1975 and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights passed in 1948, has a very strict policy in allowing citizens to leave the country.

Villanova on April 23 will hold a "Free Sasha Day," highlighted by a live phone call to Sasha, a refusnik, that is supported by Villanova and its community. Also starting soon will be tables in Dougherty on Monday-Wednesday-Friday so that cards can be obtained and mailed to Sasha. Anyone wishing to become involved can contact Brad Boxman at the Villanova Jewish Union.

In November the Madrid Conference will be held. This worldwide conference consisting of 37 nations, including the United States and USSR, will review the Helsinki accords.

The aim of the Student Coalition is that the world see the limited success of Jews leaving Russia. The situation though is further complicated by the Afghanistan crisis involving the Soviet invasion of that nation.

Brad Boxman spoke with Congressman Roger Edgar (D-Pa.) and Senator John Heinz (R-Pa.), askng them to write letters to Brezhnev urging him to allow Jews to leave.

The lobbying, according to Boxman, "was a success." "We were very well organized, had been briefed beforehand and overall the lobby conducted professionally."

Debate Tournament Held

By LORI MADDEN

The District Seven Debate Tournament was held at Villanova University on Saturday and Sunday, March 15 and 16. Twenty-four two man teams representing Universities located in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, and District of Columbia participated.

Four teams were chosen to represent District Seven in the National Debate, which is to be held in April at the University of Arizona, Tucson. The selected teams, chosen on the basis of their tournament records, are: George Mason University, University of Pittsburgh, U.S. Naval Academy, and James Madison University. Seton Hall University, West Virginia University, and Villanova teams were chosen as alternates. Of two Villanova varsity debating teams who participated, one earned the alternate position. Villanova team "A" is partnered by Bob Bannon and Bob Clougherty.

The resolutuon for the District Seven Tournament was, "The Federal Government Should Significantly Strengthen the Regulation of Mass Media Communication in the United States." This resolution has been the topic of debate for the entire debate season. Points of argument ranged from the "use of television to encourage people to eat natural food" to "mass media effectiveness for health education.

Saint Mary's was the tournament location. Four rounds per day were scheduled, and each round lasted from 90 to 120 minutes. The first round began at 8:30 a.m. Saturday. The final round concluded at 6:00 p.m. Sunday. each team competed in every round.

TWo judges and a timekeeper were present at each round. Each team received points for their case statement for the affirmative or negative position on a topic, and their defense or rebuttal of a position. The team who accumulated the higher amount of points at the end of the round received a ballot. The four teams with the most ballots will go the national tournament.

Grant Competition Opens

The Institute of International Education recently announced that the official opening of the 1981-82 competition for grants for graduate study or research abroad in academic fields and for professional training in the creative and performing arts is scheduled for May 1, 1980. It is expected that approximately 519 awards to 50 countries will be available for the 1981-82 academic year.

The purpose of these grants is to increase mutual understanding between the people of the United States and other countries through the exchange of persons, knowledge and skills. They are provided under the terms of the Mutual Educational and Cultural Exchange Act of 1961 (Fulbright-Hays Act) and by foreign governments, universities, corporations and private donors.

Applicants must be U.S. citizens at the time of application, who will generally hold a bachelor's degree or its equivalent before the beginning date of the grant and, in most cases, will be proficient in the language of the host country.

Creative and performing artists are not required to have a bachelor's degree, but they must have four years of professional study or equivalent experience.

Application forms and further information for students currently enrolled in Villanova University may be obtained from the Fulbright Program Adviser, Dr. John A. Doody, who is located in the Honors Office, Room 101 Corr Hall. The deadline for filing applications on this campus is mid-September, 1980.

Glee Club Triumphant

By HELEN ALVARE

Villanova's Women's Glee Club recently placed first in the annual competition sponsored by the Catholic Intercollegiate Women's Glee Club Association (CIWGCA). Eleven schools participated in this year's competition which was held at Fairfield University on the weekend of March sixteenth. The "musicality" of the Villanova club, however, according to the judges, brought them victory.

Under the direction of Mr. Barry Prager, a graduate of West Chester State College with an M.A. in Vocal Performance, the Glee Club has participated in this event for the past two years and in only two year's time, the Glee Club's performances have earned them both third and first place trophies.

Judges of the 1980 CIWGCA competition praised the club and its director saying, " . . . Very fine singing under a masterful conductor with good choral sense and superb musicality . . . "

The Women's Glee Club performs on campus and on tour with such clubs as the Villanova Singers, the Merchant Marines and the Worcester Polytechnic Institute Men's Glee Club, as well as for local churches and institutions. The student body and the administration of Villanova are always invited to take advantage of on-campus performances by the Women's Glee Club.

Honors To Offer Judaism Course

By RICH McCONOUGH

The Honors Program is offering several new and unique courses in the Fall of 1980.

Rabbi Marshall Maltzman, Religious Studies Department, will teach An Intellectual History of Judaism. This course will survey Judaism's major intellectual currents from the post-Biblical era to the modern period, and their interaction with world cultures, religions and significant philosophies which influenced Western civilization.

The Legislation of Morality in American Public Policy is the subject matter of another Honors offering. Taught by Dr. Edwin Goff of the Philosophy Department, the course will develop a theoretical model to justify publicly directed moral education in American liberal democracy.

The relationship between Theatre and Film will be the focus of a third Honors course. Prof. Joan Lynch of the Theatre Department will lead an exploration of how theatrical effects and principles may be translated into film — i.e., how the theatrical becomes the cinematic. The films chosen for the course, instead of simply being filmed plays, are reputed to be brilliant as films. They include A Streetcar Named Desire, Henry V, The Caretaker, and King Lear.

The Literature of Flight will be taught by Dr. Robert Kantra of the English Department. The course will deal with the art and science of flight as represented in a variety of texts: novels, poetry, technical journals, training manuals, newspaper essays, literary criticism. The literature of flight will be defined in a variety of ways, including "Escape" and "Interpretation," and "Cultural Metaphor" and "The Paraphernalia of Survival."

Additional information on all courses is available in Corr Hall 101.

ENGINEERING, COMPUTER SCIENCE, AND TECHNICAL GRADUATES

Over 20 companies, both local and nationally based, each with available positions they are looking to fill, are coming to a major hotel in Philadelphia, PA, April 18-19, 1980. These companies are looking to find and hire qualified 1980 college graduates with bachelor's or master's degrees in engineering, computer science, or the physical sciences.

And now you can meet these companies yourself. There are no letters of introduction to write. And you will not waste your valuable time on any job search technique you have used—and found lacking—in the past. At this meeting (called a Lendman College Conference) you will have the opportunity to speak with over 20 companies to discuss positions in your field. You will meet these companies face-to-face before you ever interview to give you a chance to learn more about the company, the position, your working environment, and all the facts that make your decision about the opening the right one.

You can expect in-depth interviews with these companies (they come staffed and prepared to interview and negotiate with you). In one day, you can learn about, and start the ball rolling on more job opportunities than you would normally find in months of looking on your own. This method of allowing you to interview with the companies you are interested in and may not have had the opportunity to meet on campus makes these conferences so successful.

Why not prove to yourself how effective your job search can be by talking with those companies you know have positions to offer you. Apply today to attend this College Conference. We will process your application immediately, and let you know where the conference is being held, the time it starts and all directions you need to attend. There is no better way to fully evaluate and compare the many important positions you should know about in your field.

FINAL NOTICE—APPLY TODAY!

To apply, send one copy of your resume to: Mr. John Ebeling, Lendman Associates, 374 Millburn Avenue, Dept: V-418, Millburn, NJ 07041. Or for immediate application, call Mr. Ebeling at (201) 379-7621. But hurry, attendance is on a first-come, first-served basis.

Companies that have participated in past conferences include:
American Can
Corning Glass
Exxon
General Electric
Western Electric
Ingersol Rand
Air Products & Chemical Bailey Controls
AT&T
Singer
Texas Instruments
Digital Carbide
Westinghouse
Xerox

There is no cost or obligation to the job applicant!

WHO SHOULD ATTEND:

Positions will be available for individuals in the following areas:

ENGINEERING
Electrical, Chemical Electronic, Industrial Mechanical, Nuclear Technical Sales, Civil

SYSTEMS/EDP
Programmers

Painter Depicts Heritage in Art

By DIANE SWEENEY

Anyone who has passed the reference room of the library sometime since February 24 must have seen the collection of pen and ink works and watercolors displayed. It doesn't take any artistic knowledge to appreciate the paintings, and to realize that the production of such works takes talent. One has to talk to the artist, Perry Stirling, however, to comprehend and enjoy the full extent of his talent, knowledge and interests. In addition to painting, Mr. Stirling writes he has had two books published, and is currently writing a play. Born, raised, and presently residing in Philadelphia, he works in public relations but is a free lance artist and writer in his spare time.

Jeff Paige Photo

Coal Miner's Heritage.

Mr. Stirling, who is himself Scotch-Irish, has always been interested in the Irish in America, especially the society of the early coal-miners and the Molly McGuires. Since his great-grandfather and other relatives had been coalminers, he grew up hearing stories and eventually did research on his own. Wandering around the coal mine area and visiting relatives in the area, Mr. Stirling learned a great deal of information about this society.

He points out, for instance, that coal miners had happy lives, on the whole, although a man in the late 19th century would consider himself lucky, if he made $300 a month. Mr. Stirling's two books, The Number Nine Miner and Other Friends and Bootleggers, Breakers and Beer, deal with the coal mining society. The play which he is working, which he plans to entitle Himself, is about John Kehoe, a "king" of the Molly McGuires, who was framed and hung for a crime for which he was innocent.

Although he studied art to some extent in high school (the old Northeast High School), Mr. Stirling had no other formal art training. He wrote for the Bulletin and the Associated Press, in which he rose from copyboy to writer and then finally to cub-reporter. Though he loves writing and painting, raising a family took precedence, and it wasn't until quite a few years and nine children later that he returned to his arts.

Mr. Stirling has written for Today and Small World magazines, and Grit newspaper. His paintings are mostly privately owned, although a collection was recently purchased by Penn State University. He prefers watercolor and pen and ink to oil, simply because he claims that he has no patience with oil painting. He points out that a watercolor can be turned out in one to three hours.

V.U. Sailors Sail With Style

By MELISSA ARAYA

Imagine yourself in a boat, sailing along, powered solely by nature, wind ruffling through your hair, feeling free and easy. Out there on the waves of the beautiful Schuylkill River . . .

Villanova's sailing team gives students the opportunity to try their skills on the water. Prospective members should have some racing experience; however, the team is in the process of splitting up into two factions. The first faction is a team which will participate in intercollegiate racing events. The second faction will be the sailing club, and its function will be to provide pleasure sailing and instruction to beginning and novice sailors.

The team has come a long way since it was initiated in the spring of 1976 by Tom Lawson, a former Villanova student. Lawson raced two races that semester with a handful of people in borrowed boats. After five years and much hard work, the team begins the 1980 spring season with four team-owned boats, funding provided by the University's Athletic Department, the option to buy one boat each year and a place at Penn's Landing (on the Delaware River) where Villanova's team, along with six other schools can dock their boats.

Two of the original team members remain. They are Lou Sander and Carolyn Murray, both seniors. Sander is a former team captain and was instrumental in its growth and success. The Villanova team, a member of MESA (Middle Eastern Scholastic Sailing Association), just a changed status from associate member to provisional member, and now has voting privileges. Art Galloway, a Villanova student, was elected as the Eastern Pennsylvania-New Jersery representative.

Ex-captain Lou Sander and Bill McIntosh sailing on the Delaware River.

The sailing season runs from September to December and March to May. Although relatively young, the team has an impressive record, particularly in Laser events. Team member Henry Rohrer, a freshman, recently placed in the top third in the National Championships, Laser class. The team, under Captain Rob Sonz, consists of thirty active members. Moderator is Dr. Sander of the Mechanical Engineering Department.

CAMPUS COMEDY

Colorado Above the Timberline

By BARBARA ANNE HIGGINS

Being the non-conformist that I am, I went west instead of south this Spring Break. While others were heading for the beaches of Florida, I took off for the Mountains of Colorado, where I discovered the 60's generation alive and doing quite well.

Maybe I'm naive but I always felt that the main attraction of this Winter Wonderland was the fabulous slopes. That shows you how much I know. It just completely baffles me how people who have flown here from all over the country could spent almost an entire ski vacation sitting in a glorified cafeteria and gift shop. Yes, I'm talking about the notorious lodges of Aspen, Vail and Purgatory.

But they're not just sitting. Oh no. There's a true art to looking athletically exhausted. First your 200 skis should be strategically placed behind you at a 45 degree angle to the entrance. That way you can impress the other tourists as soon as they walk through the door. Boots should be casually unbuckled and planted on the chair in front of you. The ski outfit — nothing but a designer creation, with matching pants, sweater, gloves, jacket, hat, and wine flask. No sign of moisture should be detectable on any clothing. (Of course, you never fall.) Needless to say, tight, thin ski pants are your best bet for gaining the respect of fellow skiers.

Luckily enough, it's very easy to feign a windburn after sitting for six hours and doing shots of Jameson's. It's amazing how easy it is to obtain a healthy blush in such an unhealthy manner.

Then you sit; in all your status-provoking glory, and observe the other tourists around you. Every once in a while it's a good idea to whisper remarks to your companions within earshot of others about how the "tourists" are clogging up the mountains and destroying the natural beauty of the West.

Not all of the skiers take part in this ritual. The other half of the lodge is usually taken up by the middle-aged hippies. Apparently after the revolutionary spirit of the 60's fizzled out, most of the "Now Generation" decided to shift their allegiance to the back-to-nature syndrome that the West so typically represents. Still donning the long-haired, defiant look that characterizes them, they do look slightly out of place in this socialized refrigerator. But then again, when one wants to be classified as different and rebellious, you must be in a status-quo atmosphere in order to make the contrast apparent.

I had an opportunity to talk to one of these pseudo-flower-children, who was casually observing the other element with obvious disdain. I asked what made him come to Colorado. Tossing back his sun-streaked locks, he quietly extinguished his cigarette and turned to me in profound silence. Did I disturb his state of meditation? No, he's going to say something. I guess it just takes a while to get the brain cells reactivated.

In a philosophical tone of voice he answered: "You see that lady over there? A Texan. Boy, do I hate Texans." (I later learned there's a vicious animosity between these two states but that's a whole other story.) He continued, "She came here a week ago and has been planted in that chair the whole time. She thinks skiing is too dangerous, but she likes to pretend she's into the outdoors, ya see? Gives her that healthy image. Cost her around $1500 to look healthy. She's gonna go home with a bunch of lift tickets hanging from her jacket just to show all her friends how healthy she is. She'll probably wear that damn ski jacket all the way through the summer. That just blows my mind." He's avoiding my question. I'll repeat it.

"Me? Why did I come here? Well, let's put it this way. Did you ever hear of the timberline? At a certain elevation, the trees can no longer grow. There's no vegetation; no obstacles at all.

Villanova Band Celebrates 130 Years

By SHARON MILLS

Football and basketball games, concerts, plays, dances, and other such events at V.U. all have one thing in common: the presence of a unit of the Villanova band organization. It was recently discovered that the band is in its one hundred and thirtieth year of existence, having its origin in 1850. This surprising fact was discovered by band director Mr. Dunfey and band historian Thomas McGuire, who searched the university archives for band information.

A commencement program from 1850 was found, with the director of the band listed as a Professor Newland. Additional information showed that Newland was hired in 1849 as the first music director at Villanova, showing that the band program was initiated less than ten years after the opening of the college.

The next major discovery the detective team of McGuire and Dunfey uncovered was a piece composed by Henry Thunder, who was affiliated with the band from 1850 to 1857. Thunder's work, "The Villanova March" was dedicated to the students of V.U. Since the find, the band has been working on a new version, and will hopefully perform the historical piece soon.

After a slack in the organization, a "Cornet Band" was formed in 1869. Directed by Jonathan Marsden and supported by all-around band director George Carrie, the trumpet group grew from its original twelve to sixteen members. Obviously, it was one of the first special units of the Wildcat musicians.

The roots of the present or "modern" band date back to 1922, when two groups, the "Villa-

Space For Students

Space. Anyone who has tried to arrange a reception or banquet in one of the three small lounges of Dougherty Hall knows how hard it is to obtain space on campus.

A place to rest, to sit, to talk. How many of us miss hanging on the chains of Kennedy Mall. There, and in the pie shoppe, were the only places where we could congregate. We are in college, after all. And an important part of college is experiencing it — together.

The winter of 1978 was a long one for us as we watched our beloved chains being replaced by snow fencing, and Sullivan field, where we once played softball, reduced to a gaping ditch.

And today, we sat in the huge glass and concrete structure that slowly emerged from that very field. We sat in the Belle Aire Terrace on this, the first day the Connelly Center was open. We sat over lunch, talking, wondering what we would say about the building in this week's paper.

We noted how much easier it was to converse in the booths and scattered tables of the Terrace, than to talk in the crowded and busy pie shoppe. Except that the pie shoppe wasn't so crowded today. And the Terrace was crowded; the food lines were long; the tables were filled. But somehow, it was more intimate, we noted as we talked.

We doubted that there would be many complaints about the building this week. Even we newspaper people couldn't think of anything bad to say. A rare occasion, indeed.

We wondered if the food lines would always be that long. And someone said that the building was too much like a chapel, too much stone. But there's not a great deal of criticism this week.

How could there be? We sat and talked in the Belle Aire Terrace, while some commuters rested in one of the lounges, and others sat beside the fireplace reading.

The Connelly Center is something that Villanova has never had before. It is a space for the students. And to have a space is to be truly a part of a community.

Pax Christi

To the Villanova Community,

I am an Augustinian priest of the Midwest Province. I am a graduate of Villanova and have taught there. Presently I teach at Catholic Theological Union at Chicago, our nation's largest Catholic seminary. I am writing this letter to you as an invitation to do some hard and serious thinking about the draft, registration, and war. If you are considering being a conscientious objector, I want to encourage you and tell you about Pax Christi.

Our seminary supports Pax Christi, the international Catholic movement for peace. We want you to know that one of our most vital tasks is encouraging conscientious objectors. We are willing and eager to receive letters from you declaring and describing your conscientious objection to war on religious and/or moral grounds. These letters can later be used as legal support for your Christian position during a future draft or war. More importantly, they may help spark debate on the morality of war and our foreign policy among your friends and relatives and in the Villanova community. Unless we study our nation's history and its foreign policy, we may be tempted to take the easy way out and get sucked into the war hysteria so easily created by our nation's leaders and their press.

You can send your letters of conscientious objection to Pax Christi/3000 North Mango Avenue/Chicago, IL 60634. Pax Christi will be happy to provide any interested persons with information on membership, on Church teaching and peace, and on conscientious objection. When so many in our nation seem to be getting into morally soft life-styles, a tough commitment to critical examination of foreign relations and to Christian principles may not be popular. But it is what the world needs to survive.

Peace,
Rev. John Paul Szura, O.S.A.
M. Div. Director

Draft Response

Dear Mr. Koonce,

It seemed to me that your long and careful letter to The Villanovan of February 22nd deserved an answer of the same tenor. I am sending this letter to you, with a copy of The Villanovan, since they may not have the room or the incentive to print it.

Let me say at the beginning that The Villanovan neither misquoted nor misrepresented my views. Their reporter talked with me for the better part of an hour and then did an article which captured well the essentials of what I had said, if not all of the reasoning behind my positions. But that, after all, is what newspaper articles do.

As to my views themselves, I do indeed assume that a war between the United States and the Soviet Union would end in a nuclear conflict although it might begin as a conventional one. But then so do our own military planners, including the Joint Chiefs of Staff. That is why both powers have so carefully avoided directly confronting one another since 1950, preferring to operate through the surrogates like Cuba or Pakistan where the commitment and the loss of face is limited.

Once involved in a real war directly with one another, no important strategic thinker with whom I am acquainted believes that such a war could be kept non-nuclear. These gentlemen are no more prophets than am I, of course, but their consensus is chilling.

On the question of the effects of nuclear war, I think you might find the remarks of Kevin N. Lewis, "The Prompt and Delayed Effects of Nuclear War," Scientific American (July, 1979), pp. 35-47 interesting. And even here, despite the slightly misleading title, only the short range, delayed effects of nuclear bombardment are addressed. The problems of long range contamination, famine, soil erosion, disease, etc., are not within the author's purview. The possibilities of civil defense have been explored by a variety of national committees over the past two decades and all of them have come to the same conclusion. There simply is none! The government of the Soviet Union can pretend, for the sake of not arousing its citizens, that there may be such but free institutions protect us from such dangerous delusions.

Without arguing every point, you will see why I feel then that draft registration and reinstatement of the draft approach criminal acts. Without any great military relevance in themselves, as is almost universally admitted by their very proponents, they encourage the uninformed to imagine that World War III will be a repetition of World War II in all essentials.

The signal we thereby intend for the Russians is more likely to be misread, lethally, by our fellow Americans. That is, they may support a war even worse informed than was Harry Truman in 1945. The experts told him then that an atom bomb on Hiroshima would kill 40,000 human beings. It actually killed 80,000! Our current experts tell us that MAD (Mutual Assured Destruction) would enable both ourselves and the Russians to kill at least 80,000,000 human beings each in a nuclear exchange. I believe theirs to be a very conservative estimate.

In short, I am terribly concerned that my students, my children, and my grandchildren will have no life to live. Under these circumstances, I do not perceive that I have any option but to protest a policy which seems to me suicidal in the fullest sense of that word. I hope that you will pursue the study of this situation yourself for, if you do, I cannot doubt that we shall end in substantial agreement. Thank you for your courtesy and interest.

Sincerely,
Bernard F. Reilly

Tuesday, March 18, marked the grand opening of Villanova's new student activities headquarters, the Connelly Center. As students wandered through their new habitat, the Villanovan was on hand to record their reactions. Wandering gapers were asked: What do you think of the Connelly Center? Do you expect that you will spend much time here? What will you be using the center for? Is there anything you think a student center should have that is missing in the Connelly Center?

Here are their replies:

I think the Connelly Center is an example of money that is very well spent. It's about time this campus got something that people can use for socializing: food and relaxation. Being a senior, I won't be around to spend as much time as I'd like. One thing that the Center is missing is a liquor license.

Alan Serven, Senior CE, Commuter

Not Bad! I don't think I'm expressing an unbiased opinion since I have a vested interest in it. Yes, for the next few weeks I'll be spending day and night here. I'm pleased that the students are pleased. It's very gratifying to us.

Mark E. Tuchman, director of Connelly Center

I think the Connelly Center has everything a student could want or need except my three favorites: a pool, a massage parlor and a peep show. I looked all over and couldn't find them. They have an excellent facility here with a fireplace and lounge for snuggling.

Rory Sparrow, Senior EE, resident

The Center is very impressive. I would like to spend a lot of time here. It may bring me to this end of the campus more often. I will be using it primarily for meetings and lunch. I haven't seen that much of it yet, but, one thing it could use is a theatre, a regular stage house.

Dr. Charles Helmetag, Modern Languages

We think it's excellent! It should have come to Villanova sooner. We wish we were freshmen again. It's going to make a lot of difference. Yes, we will be spending a lot of time here, especially in between classes for lunch, relaxing and other entertainments. So far, everything seems really well organized, except, we think the Center could use a liquor license.

Allyson Abbott, Junior Bio, commuter

Elaine Pantelis, Junior Bio, commuter

It's really nice! I'll probably be spending most of my time here in the game room, the cafeteria and at the movies. What the Connelly Center could use is a liquor license.

Joe Cantrambone, Freshman C&F commuter

Sasha Says Thank You

Dear Editor,

When I returned from the Soviet Union I managed to smuggle out a tape recorded message for the people of Villanova from Sasha Yakir, Villanova's adopted refusnik. Allow me to preface the transcribed message with a brief update of Sasha's present situation. When I was in Moscow, Rimma, Sasha's mother, received verbal clearance from her former employer, clearing her of any supposed "state secrets" she had known. On January 26 she was to receive in writing this clearance and perhaps by now she has obtained it. As of this writing it is not certain. The significance of the clearance is this: In 1973 when the Yakirs first applied to emigrate, Rimm's access to state secrets substantiated the reason for refusal. The hope is, that now with this document the Soviets will have no reason to hold the Yakirs and will allow them to leave. Although this is cause for optimism, it must be understood that the Soviets could create any number of reasons for further refusal. In general their spirits were good and they were holding up well in the midst of Moscow's winter season.

When I asked Sasha to make the tape he characteristically shied away. After a bit of coaxing however Sasha taped the following heartfelt message.

Shalom Friends,

I have now an opportunity to talk to you, unfortunately not directly. But anyway I want to thank you for your support and let you know what a great influence it has on my present life. I understand that for you it must be very disappointing to organize such a great activity and not to see any results. Even the letters you write I do not receive very often, but I want you to realize that my present position could be much worse without your actions. For several times already the situation has been so bad that your activity just saved me. So everything you have done has been helpful. Everything!

And you see the life of a refusnik there are such moment when he feels himself alone. It is so bad to realize that you are alone and thanks to you I am not alone. And even when my mailbox is empty I feel that you are thinking about me and you are working hard and trying to help; and let me thank you very much for this. I hope that someday I will see you all. Then I will thank you again for everything you are doing now.

L'shana Ha-zot, This year, Freedom.

Cards to Sasha will continue to be available in Dougherty Hall Mon. Wed. and Fri. 11:30-1:00. Please stop by and send a card. It means so much. Also April 23 we will make a phone call to Sasha from Villanova as a part of Free Sasha Day 1980.

Alternative

To the Editor:

It is ironic that those who oppose the draft and ROTC programs as a prelude to escalation of conflict and the horrors of nuclear holocaust, make what they oppose all the more possible by precluding creditable intermediate alternatives. To be morally concerned is one thing, but it is not acceptable to weaken the defense preparations on one side alone (the U.S.A.). Such "moralism" participates in either an unwitting surrender or an international game of "chicken," which leaves the ultimate deterrent the only deterrent.

Student Government Association

Will You Vote on Thursday?

By P. J. WINTERHALTER
Student Body President

The Villanova University Senate will hold its election for the senators of the 1980-1981 academic year on Thursday, March 27, 1980. You have an opportunity to participate in these elections. You will be able to vote for next year's Student Body President and the appropriate Senators who will represent your particular college. These students, your friends and classmates, will represent you in the University's policy making decisions next year on the Villanova University Senate.

For those who are unfamiliar with the workings of the University Senate, the senate is a tri-part body of faculty, administration, and students. It consists of thirty-eight members; twelve students, twelve faculty, twelve administrators, and two alumni. They are charged with making the policy which regulates this University. They are also free to make recommendations to Fr. President Driscoll on any issue whatsoever. They are your representative body.

Next Thursday, you will be able to vote for the people who you feel will best fill the shoes of leadership at Villanova University. You have the chance to show that you care even the slightest bit about your school, the University you attend.

At any time during this year were you guilty of complaining about something that P.J. Winterhalter and that Student Government Association did or did not do? If, last year you were part of the twenty percent that participated in the balloting and you were not satisfied with the production or lack thereof then you as a student of this University had a right to complain. If, however, and unfortunately for Villanova, you were one of those four out of every five students that did not have but a minute to participate in their school elections you have no right to complain at all. Please, this coming Thursday you will have the opportunity once again to vote for the students who will represent you.

You or your parents pay over $6000 for you to have this opportunity. It is solely up to you to take advantage of it. This is no big thing. You do not have to sign your life away. If a friend tells you that they are not voting because nothing is going to get accomplished anyway, that person is full of baloney. I have devoted much of my senior year to this school and the Student Government Association. I have tried to represent you as best I possibly can. Several times I received many unwarranted complaints about the way I went about getting things accomplished. Those complaints I appreciated since they at least noticed I was doing something. I can only ask but one more thing of the Villanova University student body, that is you participate in this year's election. It means the world to the people who will represent you next year. You can help that candidate; you can help your school; you can help even yourself! Have a voice in Villanova. This is your school, you make it what it is. Help make it a little better. VOTE THURSDAY, MARCH 27, Please!

Running for Senate?

By CATHY PELESKY
ARTS SENATOR 1978-79

As a senator from Arts and Sciences, I sit on the University Senate when they meet each month. To me, that's the most worthwhile part of my job. On the senate floor, my vote is worth as much as anyone else's, be they administrator, faculty or student. And my right to speak is honored as much as their's. Since University policy is made in the senate, my vote represents real student input. Of course, you have to be prepared, be on top of the issues, and be able to comment on them.

Aside from actual senate meetings, each student senator is also a member of the Senate Standing Committee, which works on motions before they hit the senate floor. I'm on Rules and Review. Some of our agenda items come to us through the Executive Committee of the Senate, which often redirects individuals' ideas and motions to a committee formed to study that particular type of issue. We can also generate motions of our own. In either case, a motion from a committee is often more efficiently handled by the Senate, than one from an individual Senator, because it's already been debated and hashed out in the committee. (That means administrators, faculty and students on the committee, not all of which are senators, have already thought of objections and figured out rationale to get it passed).

A senator should attune to what his/her constituency is interested in today and what they might want tomorrow. That means knowing your college pretty well, and getting to know and listen to as many people as you can. A lot of comments are gripes and complaints, but how else can you get enough info to honestly say, "This is what the students want!" We also keep office hours up in the S.G.A. office and talk and talk as much as we can.

Sometimes it can get frustrating when you put in a lot of effort on a motion and it fails, or hear a lot of complaints which aren't senate business so you can't really handle them as easily as you'd like, but the job has its advantages too. After all, we are the ones anyone can come to with any problem. If we can't solve it, we can at least direct you to someone who might. I feel that we are performing a service to the students as well as representing them.

The student senators caucus once a week (Tuesdays, 7:30) to discuss issues and help each other with ideas and ways to handle them. The meetings are open to anyone so why don't you stop up and listen in . . . you can contribute too, if you'd like. It'll help you get the feel of things, and we can answer any questions you might have.

Good Luck. Hope to see you soon.

RSA

RSA Holds Elections

By HELEN M. HANEY

The Executive Committee of the RSA consists of seven positions: President, Five Vice Presidents — each serving a different area of dorms on campus — and an Office Administrator.

The duties of the Office Administrator broadly consist of handling all office and administrative work for the organization. This includes supervising work study secretaries, keeping the books and handling disbersements and receipts, maintaining office supplies, and coordinating coffee and donuts and refrigerator rentals.

The duties of each of the five Vice Presidents consist broadly of serving as a resource person and administrator to a specific group of dorms on campus assigned to him or her. Along these lines, each Vice President shall assist that particular resident hall block assigned to him/her with various programming and miscellaneous needs which arise. Each shall also serve as advisors to the President and resident students and fulfill all responsibilities delegated to him/her by the President. Each Vice President will head at least one of any ad-hoc committees which shall arise during the year, assist at coffees and donuts and refrigerator rentals, and one will be responsible for coordinating the RSA section of the Villanovan.

Two Vice Presidents along with the President will be members of the SGO as representatives of the RSA. The President of the RSA is the official representative and spokesman for the RSA in the Student Government Association, to the Administration, and to all other student organizations and appropriate bodies. He/she shall also establish any committees considered necessary to facilitate RSA operations, make any appointments to these committees in regard to membership or position in conjunction with the rest of the Executive Committee, chair all campus council meetings, carry out all necessary functions of the RSA over the summer months, coordinate all RSA elections, except for those of the Executive Committee, and delegate any or all powers consistent with the jurisdiction of the RSA at his/her own discretion to the other Executive Committee members or other RSA members. He/she will also be a member of the SGO.

In order to run for a position on the Executive Committee, you must be a resident student for the academic year 1980-81, be in good standing with the University, and have served in some facet of the RSA for at least the last year, for office of the president, and for the last six months for office of Vice Presidents or Office Administrator. You must be nominated by a Hall President at Campus council and you will be required to give a short speech.

If you are considering running for a position, talk to your hall president or any of the present members of the Executive Committee.

Distance Classic Benefits Cancer Society

By ED PLASKIN

"The most important thing about Sunday's race is that everyone remembers it is for Cancer," says Eddie Kosak, Director of the First Villanova Distance Classic. "Many people seem to think that road races these days are just for those who can run fast. Really, quite the opposite is true. The recent running boom has afforded people of all ages and calibers the chance to run not just to compete, but for the benefit and fun of it."

This coming Sunday, the Villanova Wildcat Running Club is sponsoring their first Distance Classic at 10:00 a.m., starting near the [illegible] parking lot. The course is a new and accurate 10,000 meter (6.2 mile) route that has been sanctioned by the Amateur Athletic Union. The course itself runs south on Ithan Ave., past Conestoga Ave., one and a half mile down to Barclay Ave., (near the golf course). It then runs through a residential subdivision, then right on Roberts Rd. and down the infamous "Roberts Road Hill." The runners will then run back on Ithan back to school. The course is scenic and challenging due to its hilly terrain.

Awards will be given to Overall Winners (men and women), First Place (all age groups), Second Place (all age groups), and Third whereas an oil painting takes a great deal longer. Hoping for early retirement, Mr. Stirling plans to have more free time to write and paint.

Although art and writing is a risky business, Mr. Stirling would encourage anyone who has talent to pursue a career in his field, as he does with his own children. His son John, for instance, is currently Art Director for the Philadelphia Journal.

Knowing Mr. Stirling's many interests and background adds more meaning to the appreciation of his art work (which will be on dispaly until March 24). He is also proof of the fact that one can be multi-talented, multi-interested, and be a very nice man, besides.

Vacation

Just pure snow. Real white and pure, you know? It's kind of symbolic, you see? I wanted to get away from all the crap. So I came to the mountains, to find if I could make it above the timberline, figuratively speaking. Maybe that's too heavy for you, considering you're an easterner. But you'll see what I mean after a couple of weeks.

Yes, I see. Equally symbolic is that in order to reach the timberline so to speak, you have to pass by the ski lodges: the tourist-traps, the havens of pretense, on your way.

Pretty profound, huh? I mean, considering I'm an easterner.

AUGUSTINIANS

"HOW CAN I MAKE MY LIFE WORTHWHILE?"

One way may be to live within the Augustinian Fraternity. When you come to live with us, you observe and participate in our community life for several years before making a final commitment. You observe that we are a religious community following the charism of St. Augustine and "that together and with one heart in brotherhood and spiritual friendship, we seek and worship God and that we labor in the service of the people of God." We serve in colleges, high schools, parishes, foreign missions, campus ministries, retreats, hospitals and military chaplaincies.

Conservation : The Classical Way

BY E. COUGHANOWR
PROF. CLASSICAL STUDIES

Socrates, having observed the relative luxury of his fellow citizens, is supposed to have exclaimed "How much I don't desire!" Yet, if we look at the everyday life of his contemporary Athenians how simple it would seem, compared with ours. Even the wealthiest Athenians (or the Greeks and Romans of the earlier times) would be on our list for handouts in our society. Their income was far below what we consider "subsistence" level.

How did they survive without the inexhaustible variety of our throwaways! Imagine, no gadgets, no locomotion, no communication media, they were shivering without central heating and sweating it out with no air conditioning. Poor devils, deprived of such blessings as sugar, bleached flour, dog food, chewing gum, tobacco, hard liquors, drugs, to name only a few. They must have gone to bed hungry every night since they were partaking of only two meals a day (no coffee break, thank you).

Yet, before we plunge into those remote regions of the classical past, we stumble upon the following all-American ditty of our not so distant past:

Eat it up, wear it out
Make it do, do without, which brings reminiscences of the Spartan way of life. The less dependence on the basic means of survival and the more careful use of them make for strength, endurance, self discipline and independence. With this philosophy the early settlers of the continent were able to get a firm foothold, to stay on in the face of numerous hardships and to develop this country for our use and enjoyment.

But the Keynesian doctrine, based on the principle that the desires of man are unlimited, was adopted in the 1930's for the development of an economy — and a matching technology — which has led us to the proliferation of such quantity and variety of trivia that boggs the mind. "Unlimited desire is the characteristic of children, not of men," Democritus warns. When we realize that time, our limited lives and our resources are finite, the Keynesian doctrine becomes irrelevant, obsolete.

So, in taking account of our lives and in weighing our priorities, it would be useful to examine what the early Greco-Romans did, and also the early American settlers, to have survived so well. How did they accomplish so much, in creating beautiful and enduring lives as they did, and with so little?

Shall we start with the daily activities? The Athenians, as we know, divided their day into three eight hour parts: eight hours for work, eight hours for rest, and eight hours for recreation. But the original meaning of recreation as restoring, revitalization, not aimless entertainment. These eight hours were spent by the Athenians in social, religious, intellectual, political activities, along with constructive, active entertainment, to improve and refresh themselves.

To burn the midnight oil was considered by the average Greek and Roman an unprofitable and unnatural excess. What do the early Americans advise? Early to bed, early to rise makes you healthy, wealthy, and wise.

According to the prevailing Greek philosophy, the element of time, being limited and apportioned with equal unpredictability, is the priority to reckon with in one's time. "Spare your time," they said. Balance it by "not doing too much," and use it to "know thyself." Use it sparingly and effectively to best care for yourself for enduring health and beauty, and for the development of the spirit and mind to successfully deal with contingencies and challenges (agonies). Build around yourself a viable life with family and friends and preserve, defend and improve the city, and leave behind the best descendants and the best name.

Therefore, conservation and efficiency, in the classical sense are centered around the human being, and are the means by which a person attains his human ends — dictated by his philosophy of best survival. If the life of each man is but a link of the past with the future man, it is a very important one, a sine qua non. That is why the best survival of the present man affects the coming generations.

In achieving his worthwhile ends, man has to use worthwhile means, the least and best means in the shortest time for the best results. The Greeks and the Romans were not blessed with the development of a technology that, properly applied as means to meaningful and constructive ends, can produce miracles.

But they were not cursed, either with the misapplication of the means which has also produced such unbelievable waste of energy, of our resources and of our lives, and has made at times triviality and aimlessness a way of life.

We may come to agree with Socrates that not to desire a great number of things is a blessing.

Chorus of OEDIPUS.

Tragic Oedipus At Vasey

By EILEEN MCCAFFREY

In many ways, Vasey's production of Oedipus the King remains faithful to the play's Greek essence. However, the dark, shadowy stage creates an atmosphere which is ot appropriate to this Greek play. It overly strengthens the sense that man is a pawn whose fate is left to chance, and makes the prayers of the chorus seem more like wailing medieval Christians crying in the darkness than lucid Greeks. The only setting on stage is a collection of circles. The chorus wear their white, twisted masks on the back of their heads. In the final scene, the masks begin to resemble skulls.

Christopher Whalen, who is magnificient as Oedipus, clearly communicates the king's arrogance, which causes him to relentlessly bring about his own self-destruction. One has no doubt that pride is Oedipus' tragic flaw. His bronzed face and large headpiece in the shape of a knig's head enhance the impression of his greatness. James Schlatter (Creon) and Carol Schwartz (Jocasta and Tiresias) both execute their parts very well.

The acting is excellent; for the most part, the play is very tight and well done. However, such special effects as clanging noises in the background, and music in strategic places are merely distracting.

Having enjoyed the use of similar theatrical devices in Vasey's Dr. Faustus and The Philadelphia Company's The Insanity of Mary Girard, I agree that this style of production can be very effective. However, it is simply inappropriate for Oedipus Rex.

In Concert

The Ramones

Emerald City

Chris Slawecki

The Ramones' March 7 show at Emerald City lived up to their reputation as a killer live band. Their brand of simple, hard-driving rock melodies bring to mind rush hour at Philadelphia International Airport, and Joey Ramone, the singer, looks even more like a praying mantis than I do; in other words, you don't listen to these guys, you jump on and pray that nothing smacks you as it flies by. The crowd was real neat, too, and although I could tell who the punkers were, I had a hard time distinguishing the Mods from the New Wavers. Alas, my flannel shirt reeked of unkempt hippiness. These guys NEVER let up, except when Dee Dee lets loose with the "Onetwothreefour!" that counts off yet another round of sonic artillery. The opening number was "Blitzkrieg Bop" and its singalong "Hey ho! Let's go!" primed the already well-lubricated audience. Then, the room became filled with the liberating cries of "Lobotomy! Lobotomy!" to announce the second number, "Teenage Lobotomy," and ... well, by the time they shifted into the sunshine on "Rockaway Beach" there was no looking back.

You Ramones fans out there needn't worry about their recent excursion into Phil Spectordom. They still perform their chainsaw surgery onstage and don't even leave any spaces for you to wonder why in. Relentless as a hurricane and twice as messy, the Ramones understand the virtues of trial by fire.

Iggy Pop Sputters

By JERRY ARTH

Iggy Pop, the "Prince of Punk," arrived last Saturday night at the newly-rejuvenated Norris Theatre in Norristown with full intention of blasting the crowd with high-voltage New Wave music. But instead of wild response, all that Pop received was a lukewarm reception of his "artistic" talents.

Iggy Pop is, of course, one of the great precursors of the current New Wave movement, having performed the raw, energetic music since the 1960's with Iggy Pop and the Stooges. A close friend and collaborator with David Bowie (who, incidentally, wrote the music for one of Pop's best albums, LUST FOR LIFE), Pop helped to pioneer the music world which goes beyond "civilized" rock and into an atmosphere of tremendous vitality and questionable taste. Iggy Pop has been infamous for his forays into disgust; at times, he has cut himself on stage with broken glass or masturbated at the audience. I approached the concert with bated breath.

A local band from Philly, The Schoolboys, opened for Iggy. Anoter in the seemingly endless string of Beatles' clones. The Schoolboys provided an energetic if not particularly talented forty minute set. The lead singer for the band has a very melodious voice; but the lyrics were not distinguishable over the din of the lead guitarist. He appeared to solo during almost every tune the band played, which I found to be ridiculous. A band is supposed to hide its weaknesses by de-emphasizing them, not be spotlighting them.

After an excrutiatingly long intermission, the lights dimmed and Iggy Pop hit the stage, not in a wild fashion, but by simply walking out on to the "1812 Overture." He sang a few undistinguished songs from his new album, SOLDIER, eliciting very poor response from the 1000 or so people in the audience. Since part of the Pop mystique rests in the way he insults the audience, Iggy asked, "Why are you so awkward and boring?" The audience naturally responded with hoots and jeers, but Iggy was right. The audience was boring. Even though at least half were in full punk battle gear, there seemed to be very little excitement. Perhaps they were there only for some outrageous act by Pop and not the music. The woman who sat by me kept screaming for Iggy to take off his pants.

But Pop kept the show going, whipping through punk classics like "New Values," "I'm Bored," and "Five Foot-One." He dramatized these with fierce karate kicks about the stage and sinuous moves that resembled a belly-dancer's. By the time he reached what I consider to be his best song, "Lust for Life," the crowd had surged toward the stage in excitement. "Lust for Life" is one of Pop's most surging tunes, and the lines, "Here comes Johnny Yen again/with the liquor and drugs/and the flesh machine/I think he's gonna do another striptease," could serve as his epitapth.

The show was not what could be termed a smashing success, but I think that this was due to more to a lack of advertising and an unresponsive crowd than to Iggy Pop himself. He certainly gave enough energy off to power every amp in the theatre.

And overall, I was perhaps more impressed with The Norris Theatre than with the show itself. Clean, esthetically pleasing with its "movie palace" architecture, and with superior acoustics, the Norris Theatre should be the sight of some excellent concerts in the future, and I for one am certainly hoping that its revival is successful.

"Chorus Line" Dazzles

By EILEEN McCAFFREY

Michael Bennett's A Chorus Line communicates something that cannot be conveyed in words alone. This musical turns the mirror on itself and the art that creates it. It draws on the experiences of Broadway dancers. As we share with the cast the agony of the audition, the dancers make you feel the uncertainty of their lives — moving from job to job, and putting the most important part of yourself on the line at each audition. Still, they never regret "What I Did for Love."

Marvin Hamlisch's music is both varied and memorable. One leaves the theater singing "One," the catchy final song, under one's breath. "At the Ballet," "The Music and the Mirror," and "What I Did for Love" are also excellent songs. Some key voices are weak, but this enhances the feeling that some of the characters are amateurs trying out for the first time. Rita Rehn, who enthusiastically portrayed Diana, the Puerto Rican girl, sang notably well.

In this show, however, dancing is at least as important as singing. The group worked very well together on both counts, and danced especially energetically. Alyson Reed, as the former star who returns to the chorus, dances distinctively well, as befits her role. To their credit, one almost never doubted that the cast was exactly what they were portraying. One would often forget that it was not a live audition. Indeed, several cast members made their professional or dancing debut in this show. In contrast, others are very experienced. R.J. Peters, who portrays the assistant to the choreographer, has worked with Johnny Carson, Joe Brooks, and Mitzi Gaynor. Still, the program's description of him states that "None of the above have been as fulfilling as A Chorus Line."

A Chorus Line is a triumph of energy and vitality. The music, the dancing, and the acting all work together to produce this creation. Surely, few shows could be as fulfilling for a performer as A Chorus Line.

BEER TALK

An avid jogger, I recall having heard that it's good to drink beer after running? Is it true?

Runners drink a variety of solutions immediately before, during and after running to prevent dehydration. But the most important ingredient by far is the water in them. For once fluid loss reaches about six percent, the hazards include rising body temperature and threat of heat stroke.

Beer provides fluid and quick energy in immediately absorbed calories. The alcohol is absorbed and does not require digestion as sugar does. Hence, the fluid then gets into the system more quickly.

"There is no quicker way to get energy and fluid at the same time," said Dr. Sheehan, advisor for the Anheuser-Busch Natural Light running program. "And I am not alone in my use of beer as a replacement fluid."

Dr. Thomas Bassler, editor of the American Medical Joggers Association publication, reports he runs 25 miles on Sundays, drinking a beer every few miles. When asked about the mileage, he said, "I jogged a six-pack."

BOOKS

Revenge Is Sweet

Have you been treated unjustly lately? Has someone or something done you wrong? Do you even suspect you've been abused?

Well, there's only one thing to do. Get even. Or better still, get ahead. Nothing, except perhaps love or an understanding pharmacist, can make you feel better. Revenge is sweet.

George Hayduke knows this. In his new book, GETTING EVEN, Hayduke gives you 80 categories and hundreds of pranks to use in your quest for justice.

Hayduke, in an attempt to cover his ass legally, says repeatedly that the book is for entertainment purposes only. He lies. It is, plain and simple, a tricksters cookbook, a monkey warfare manual.

I'm not going to say I advocate this style of justice. I'll just give you a few examples and let you judge.

If, for example, your mark lives in an apartment a squirt or so of Eastman 910 or a similair type glue into the lock can screw up the mark'strying to get back into his apartment after an evening on the town. It's best to save this one until late evening or on a weekend when there isn't anyone around to let him in or fix the door.

If you're mad at someone with a car, dump some shellac thinner into his gas tank. The alcohol in it will gather up all the water in a fuel trap, and when this mixture goes through the fuel line it will cause the vehicle to snort, stammer, and act like it has big carb troubles. By the time the driver gets the vehicle to a mechanic, the problem has usually departed out the exhaust pipe. Done enough times this one can redline the frustration and credibility levels of both driver and mechanic.

Or perhaps you can have your mark apply to the CIA for a job. Language skills and an interest in foreign affairs are helpful as are such things as extensive foreign travel and interesting work experiences. Send resumes to: Personnel Representative, Central Intelligence Agency, Washington, DC 20505.

Hayduke, although he says it isn't very creative, recommends putting dead animals almost anywhere. This is why you should always carry several large trash or lawn variety bags in your can — you never know when you're going to happen upon a particularly disgusting piece of road kill.

Classified ads for such diverse things as gay sex and bondage, garage sales, young boy and girl models to pose for "art" pictures and the like can also complicate your marks life. Put the ads where a lot of people will see them, and for something like a garage sale or auction make it for early on a Sunday morning, say seven o'clock.

All in all, this book is a literary gem, a treasure. Although Hayduke's writing style leaves something to be desired the book's contents more than make up for the author's lapses.

The book is available from Paladin Press, P.O. Box 1307, Boulder, CO 80306 for $9.95.

Liv Taylor is appearing at the Connelly Center on April 11.

"I know what my audience wants and they're going to get it," says Livingston Taylor. An excellent concert performer, Liv will appear in the Connelly Center Friday, April 11, at 7 and 9:30 p.m.

A "sly romantic" who lives with his wife in a semi-rural suburb of Boston ("it's still not secluded enough for me," he says) Taylor is well known for what one college reviewer described as "energetic, lively stage presence." He is a storyteller, an observer of life. His music is diversified, ranging from soft folk to country/jazz.

Buy tickets now; seating is limited. Tickets are $5.50,; $4.50 with student I.D. They are available at the Connelly Center Ticket Office. For information call 527-2900 ext. 297.

happiness over having brought in Kennedy to speak. "I am very glad that we could attract as dynamic and well-versed a speaker as Dr. Kennedy. I spent all afternoon just preparing my brief introduction to his lecture. There was just so much I could say."

On Thursday, March 14, a panel of theologians addressed the role of religion on our society. The panel consisted of Dr. David Efroymson of LaSalle College, Dr. Parl Mojzes of Rosemont College, Dr. William Stayton of Thomas Jefferson Medical College, and Dr. Leonard Swidler of Temple University. Dr. Rodger Van Allen of Villanova's religious studies department acted as moderator.

On Friday evening, Honors Junior Week was concluded with a night of improvisational theatre under the direction of Joan Lynch of Villanova's theatre department.

A group of Villanovan students, assembled specifically for this program, performed s series of rehearsed and unrehearsed improvisations to portray changing American values which typify the Me Culture.

Dr. John A. Doody, director of the Honors Program, expressed pleasure over the week's activities. "The two words which immediately come to mind are encouraging and unprecedented," he stated. "As far as I know, this is the finest student organized, student sponsored, and student run program of this kind. I hope it is an indication of the future."

Guerin then added, "We recognize that we will all have to be the shapers of the future, American culture and its values of our present society, and possibly to conjecture as to what type of value systems will characterize the Eighties."

Coach Shane's Cats Rebuild

By JERRY VENTRESCA

As one watches the Villanova baseball team practice in the brisk winter weather, one can sense the dedication present in Coach Shane's group of youngsters. Even the pitchers run sprints in the outfield following the routine fielding, hitting, batting and pitching workout, which is probably more running than Steve Carlton, a plus $100,000 per-year-pitcher, did all last year for the Philadelphia Phillies.

Dedication, however, isn't the only key to a winning ballclub. Although the Wildcats are a talented bunch of guys coming off a 17-9 season last year, losing a playoff bid following the last game of the year, the output of many inexperienced players in 1980 is a question.

Four starters from the '79 club were lost to graduation and Mike Venezia, probably one of the best Wildcat ballplayers in recent times, who accepted an offer by the California Angels, won't be returning, leaving this year's team with only three seniors.

Shane admits that the infield, carrying three freshmen, is "rebuilding," but the few experienced pitchers and catchers should bring about another winning season, which was to open versus St. Joseph's here on March 16, but was cancelled due to wet grounds.

The senior members of the ballclub, Ed Szymanski (pitcher), George Kroculick and Tom Harrison (both outfielders) all agreed that this season's outcome is very hard to predict, not knowing how well the young members will produce. Szymanski and junior Co-captain Steve Skammer, also a pitcher, concluded "if the young guys and pitching comes through, we'll do good," stressing the fact that hitting wasn't a problem last year and probably won't be in 1980. "We'll have many 13-12 and 11-9 games," said Skammer.

Individually, Szymanski and Harrison have something to shoot for following graduation which is a big incentive for good seasons for both — the major leagues, Szymanski, who was drafted in the 17th round by the Chicago Cubs after graduating from high school but decided to attend Villanova on a baseball scholarship, had a 5-2 record last year and hopes to repeat a good performance this year. Harrison meanwhile led the club in homers last year with seven and looks forward to playing in the majors but cautiously stated "everything depends on my performance in 1980."

Kroculick, on the other hand, is not so optimistic. Following his fine performance sophomore year, with a batting average in the top 10 of the ECAC for the first half of the season, an elbow injury forced him to sit out 1979 and in Kroculick's words, "they (the major league clubs) don't take damaged merchandise." For Kroculick 1980 is a test to see how well he has recuperated from the injury.

Following the cancellation of the St. Joe's game the Wildcats faced Swarthmore Wednesday, Towson State Thursday and go up against Temple here today at 2:30.

Women Swimmers Gain National Respect

By KERRY LYNCH

Two seasons ago, the Villanova women's swimming team had no national qualifiers. In just two short years, under the successful coaching of Jane Ackerman, the team has become a major competitor at the Eastern and National levels.

The 1980 EAIAW Championships were held at Penn State and included 32 teams representing all three divisions. Villanova's eight place finish was the highest place earned by a Division II team.

Villanova placed in two relay events which were important to their overall score. In the 200 yard freestyle relay, the team of Mary Maier, Jenni Franks, Bernie McCann adn Rita Edge came out of the water third in a time of 1:39:5. The 800 yard freestyle relay team of Edge, Maier, Tara Baroody and Franks took fourth place in 7:54:4.

Individual swims included two Villanova records and three personal bests. Rita Edge swam a personal best in the 200 yard butterfly and also in the 200 yard freestyle, setting a Villanova record in 1:54:9. Mary Maier placed fourth in the 50 yard freestyle swimming it in 24:86 which established a personal best and a Villanova record. Jenni Franks' best finish was second place in the 100 yard individual medley.

At the 1980 AIAW Division II National Swimming and Diving Championships the Villanova Wildcats took third place among 65 teams. Up from 12th place in 1979, Villanova had seven competitors and finished within 28 points of the winners, Clarion State College.

Rita Edge

Villanova won all three freestyle relays, setting National records in two.

The 400 yard freestyle relay was led off by Jenni Franks who's split was a Villanova record in 53:2. She was followed by Mary Maier, Bernie McCann, and Rita Edge who all swam personal bests while setting an AIAW record in 3:35:02. Another AIAW record was set in the 800 yard freestyle relay when Edge, Maier, Baroody and Franks won in 7:49:2.

Two other Wildcat relay teams placed, the 200 yard freestyle first and the 200 yard medley team of Audrey Saint Germain, Alice Maben, Bernie McCann and Mary Maier sixth.

Jenni Franks placed highest for V.U. at Nationals. She took second in both the 100 yard and 400 yard individual medley's. She finished third in the 200 yard individual medley.

Rita Edge had one fourth place finish, a fifth place and a seventh place in freestyle events and another fifth in the 200 yard butterfly.

Alice Maben placed ninth in the 50 yard breaststroke and Tara Baroody finished eleventh in the 200 yard backstroke.

Undefeated in duel meets during the 79-80 season and strong finishes at AIAW competitions gave the Villanova Womens Swim Team a season of which to be proud.

Olympics Continue Despite Drawbacks

by ROBERT L. P. WALSH

The Villanova Residence Halls Olympics has continued on campus and although they are not running as smoothly as anticipated, Assistant Dean of Men Tony Martin has termed the Olympics successful in achieving its goals. Implementing a first-year program has presented some difficulties for the organizers, according to Mr. Martin, "Trying new ideas is an uphill struggle, we are gaining experience for a full-fledged program in the fall." One of the problems encountered has been the somewhat slow pace at which the events have proceeded and because of this some events may have to be curtailed.

Mr. Martin explains that the Residence Halls Olympics "are aiming at participation and enjoyment," and it is in these areas that the program has been most successful. The Olympics rely on coordinators in each living area who sign up contestants and collect entrance fees. Participation has varied from one area to the next depending upon how well an area coordinator has fulfilled his duties. Stanford 3-D, the current leading team in the Olympics with 427 points, owes much of its success to Area Coordinator Joe Vaccaro. Citing participation as the key to Stanford 3-D's lead, Joe Vaccaro states, "3-D has been in the top three in nearly every event and that is reflected in our point total." Other leading living areas in the Olympics include Stanford 3-B, 382 points; Stanford 1-D, 303 points; and Corr 2nd floor, 281 points.

Plans are already being developed for next year's Residence Halls Olympics and the experience gained from the spring Olympics should prove valuable in upgrading the program. Those students who performed well in organizing the Olympics and recruiting contestants will be relied on more heavily next year. The method of recruitment will also change placing greater emphasis on the individual contestants to become involved. Additional events will probably be added in the future in order to afford the students a wider variety of events in which to compete.

Mr. Martin views the present Olympics as a means of increasing the students' awareness of the program in order to aid in its expansion. "Recognition will help to spur interest and once that is established the whole thing will start to click." Besides providing an arena of competition for the average student, the Olympics have been beneficial in the areas of equipment and facilities. New cue sticks and chalk have been provided in several areas for the billiards competition and new ping-pong tables have been set up across campus.

Tracksters Concede Indoor Title

Villanova Senior Don Paige Sets World Indoor Record

By DAVE COSKEY

Defense of the NCAA Indoor Track Championship was never assumed to be an easy task. "We really didn't think we had too much of a chance; they (University of Texas at El Paso — UTEP) were just too deep," according to Jack Pyrah, assistant track coach. But was second place supposed to be so tough?

The Wildcats had to wait until Saturday to score any of their 42 points. The conclusion of Friday's schedule of events carried some sad news for Cat track fans. Willie Sydnor (60 yd dash), Carlton Young (440) and Tony Tufariello (600) were all eliminated in their respective heats. Tufariello, a junior, was the defending NCAA champion in the 600. Although he won his heat, it was a slow tactical race and his time of 1:12.11 didn't qualify for the finals.

A veil of doubt still covered All-American senior Don Paige. Paige was struck by a stamina-biting flu in last week's IC4A at Princeton. Paige ran a comfortable 2:11 Friday to send him onto Saturday's finals. "I felt good Friday, but I wanted to save as much strength as I could for Saturday," cited Paige.

Don must have stored a tank full. In Saturday's final he exploded at the gun lap to establish an electronic world record on an 11 lap track. An electronic record merely defines the timing procedure used. His mark, 2:05.80, also established a meet record. Paige, who remained in the third position for most of the race, had his move planned. "My coaches have always told me to make one and only one move; don't play with a runner. It is just a waste."Paige also added, "When you make a move like that, you are trying to break your competition both mentally and physically; he knows he can't come back."

Another outstanding performance was that of freshman Rodney Wilson in the 60 yard hurdles. Wilson's mark of 7.15 was faster than the mark posted by injured world record holder Renaldo Nehemiah when he was a freshman. "I was a little nervous Friday, but Saturday, I just kept my concentration and came to run," said Wilson. "I thought I could have had a better start; but over all I'm very pleased. I have been running this race in my head since last week."

The two mile added needed points to Villanova's total when Amos Korir (8:37.36) and Dean Childs (8:38.43) finished second and fourth respectively behind Suleiman Nyambui of UTEP.

The distance medley relay set a meet record with fine performances by John Hunter (1:52.3), Tim Robinson (49.9), Mike England (2:58.8) and a super effort from junior Sydney Maree (4:01). Maree, coming off a hip injury, has been working on weights recently instead of the boards. "I was surprised; I guess I won it on strength," commented Maree.

It was a team effort that brought the silver back to Villanova. In fact, Elliot's runners have not finished out of the top three since 1975. "The guys just knew what they needed on Saturday and went out and got it," added Pyrah.

The Wildcats never really had a chance against UTEP. UTEP ran up 76 points to Villanova's 43, followed by Tennessee third with 38.

TRACK NOTES: With the indoor season officially over the Cats will put the boards away and prepare for their first outdoor meet in April, the Dogwood Relays. Jumbo Elliot was named outdoor-indoor coach of the year.

SPRING TENNIS PREVIEW

Women Netters Set To Defend Title

By KATHLEEN STICKEL

Coming off a 15-2 fall season, women's tennis coach Dr. Robert Langran of the Villanova Political Science Department is faced with a much higher level of competition this spring and has hopes that his team will play just as well.

The women netters open up against Concordian today with their impressive record and a major tournament victory under their belts. They hosted and won the Philadelphia Association of International Athletics for Women (PAIAW) in Division IIA in the fall.

Leading the team today will be junior Diane Williams, in the first position, freshman recruit Carol Harrison in number two and freshman Dawn Fischer at number three.

The remainder of the varsity consists of Bonnie Stokes, Gina Auyob, Diane Cappuccio, senior captain Colleen Nolan and Jeanne Regnante.

According to Coach Langran, "The spring is tougher than the fall because the division that Villanova is in requires higher level of play in the spring. Instead of playing local schools as we did in the fall, we will face teams from New York, Washington D.C. and Lehigh Valley schools."

The Wildcats compete in a tournament at Princeton for the Middle States where Langran hopes to do well. He also expresses a desire to see individuals and if possible, the entire team get invited to the Eastern AIAIW-Division II competition in May held at Townsend.

Both the men's and women's tennis team will face Townsend tomorrow at 12:00 and the women's team will go up against Concordia today at 2:45. Both teams are new opponents this year and are rumored to present stiff competition.

Men Swing Into Strenuous Season

BY PETER J. RYAN

On Wednesday March 19, the Villanova men's tennis team will have begun a strenuous twenty-seven match campaign that has the Cats on the court nearly seven days a week. In his fourteenth season as head coach, Dr. Robert Langran feels that this squad has "... more depth and is able to replace two graduating seniors from last year's team."

Since there are no scholarships awarded it becomes necessary to seed the players according to a "ladder system." This system involves inter-team challenge matches to determine the top six singles players. Some of these six players will also compete in the doubles matches scheduled for the same day. While twenty-seven matches can be very tiring on the players it is important to note that rain-outs provide the team with much needed rest. Last spring's 14-7 record included six postponemets due to poor weather conditions.

The top four players in the preseason appear to be junior Tom Fieger, sophomore Sean Friel, senior John Mulliken, and junior Bill Sullivan. The remaining positions will be filled after a few opponents are met. The Cats will face tough competition from Catholic University, Georgetown, Fordham, St. John's, Lehigh and many others. "More than half of the schedule is very difficult and I would be very happy with a .500 or better season," explains Coach Langran.

In mid-April the team will travel to Trenton to compete in the Rider Invitational Tournament. This tourney brings eight strong eastern squads together to determine a champion. Villanova's Tom Fieger earned a second place finish (as the number one seed in last years competition) as the Cats grabbed the second position in the tournament.

Home matches will be played at the St. Mary's courts at 2:45 p.m. on weekdays and 1:00 p.m. on Saturdays and Sundays. If men's and women's matches are scheduled for the same time (as they frequently are), the men will move to the courts situated behind the library.

Icecats Climax Banner Season

By JIM FEMIA

The Villanova Icecats, although bowing to Penn State in the M.A.C.H.C. finals, finished with a 15-6-3 record, best in the team's history. Penn State nipped Villanova in the finals winning two games to one, capturing the Hannigan Cup for the second year in a row.

The first of the three games was played in the friendly confines of the Radnor Rink last Friday night. The Cats, after trailing 1-0, never looked back as they outhustled, outhit, and most importantly outscored the Nittany Lions and captured the first game winning 6-3.

Freshman Chris Mancuso led the way for the Cats scoring a three goal hat-trick and goaltender Tom Margiotti was sensational in net stopping 35 Penn State shots. Other goal scorers for Villanova were Tom Curran, Ken Downey, and Joe Mitchell. Assists were handed out by "Killer" Whitaker, Mike Kane, Jim Femia, Bill Quinlan, John Lammers, and Kevin Kelly.

On Saturday the Icecats traveled to Mechanicsburg, Pa. to play the second and the third games of the series. In the first game the Cats battled from behind and tied the game at the end of regulation time. All of the hard work was in vain however as the Lions scored three minutes into sudden-death overtime to take the second game 4-3, and more importantly tie the series at one game apiece. Once again Margiotti was great in goal and goal scorers were Tom Corson, and Downey with two.

In the rubber match, Villanova broke on top early on a goal by Whitaker and took a 1-0 lead into the locker room after one period. Penn State came out flying in the second period and scored three unanswered goals to lead 3-1 after two periods. In the third period, both teams traded goals midway through the period, but a costly penalty with 2 minutes left in the game made things that much tougher for the Cats. With one minute thirty seconds left, Mancuso blew a slapshot past the Penn State goaltender for a short-handed goal and brought Villanova within 1 goal. Margiotti was pulled for the extra skater in the final minute but the Icecats could not manage the tying goal. Both Margiotti and Mancuso were nominated for playoff M.V.P. for their superior play throughout the whole series.

Captain Mike Fitzgerald, Assistant Captain Steve Carr, Mike Kane, and Al Salvato are four seniors who will be sorely missed next season. The Icecats are a young team however with 13 regulars returning next year, including league M.V.P. Tom Curran, Defenseman of the Year Paul LaFond, and rookie of the Year Chris Mancuso.

Curran Named MVP

By BOB CONWAY

Sophomore Tom Curran was named the Most Valuable Player in the Mid Atlantic Hockey Conference. This award was well deserved considering the many accomplishments of this second year Villanova puckster. In a game against Delaware Curran scored an unbelievable seven goals. A feat, Curran called, "my greatest achievement in a hockey game."

Tom Curran

Tom Curran is a proud member of the Navy ROTC. He has played hockey for eight years and states, "It has always been my favorite sport." As the right winger on the famed Villanova production line, Curran tallied 24 goals. He also added 17 assists which gave him 41 points in the offensive department. Those 41 points in 23 games were good enough to lead the Pucksters in total points.

Villanova closed out the 1979/80 season with a 15-6-2 record. The team finished in second place behind the tough Penn State squad. They didn't go down without a battle though.

In a three game Play-off series against Penn State the pucksters won the opening game at Radnor Rink by the score of 6 to 4. Then they had to travel to Penn State for the final two games because Penn State had the better seasonal record.

In those hectic last two games all the injuries which plagued the club all season long were too much for Curran and the rest of the squad to overcome. The injuries, which at one time seemed to pull the club together, cost them at the worst possible moment.

In the second play-off game the Pucksters lost in overtime 4-3. They came out the next day and gave, as Tom Curran put it, "110 percent," but unfortunately the injuries were the decisive factor as they fell again 4-3.

On St. Patrick's Day, with this season tucked safely behind him, Tom Curran was a happy man. He wanted to thank the students who supported the team. He added, "Student enthusiasm really picked up near the end of the season." Curran's friends were quick to point out that Tom along with other third floor Fedigan residents go to Haverford Mental Hospital weekly to let the patients know that they care about them.

The subject of next year was then put to the scrappy right winger. He said that teammate Mike Muscurella put it best. "Last year we knocked on the door and no one heard us. This year we knocked on the door and made sure everyone heard us. Next year we are going to have to kick the door down."

Indeed they may, especially if Tom Curran can come up with another year like the one he just had.

MASSIMINO REMAINS

Rumors that Coach Massimino would accept the head coaching job at the University of Pittsburgh were squelched this week when Massimino signed his contract with Villanova, confirming his commitment to the Wildcats.

Basketball Head Coach Rollie Massimino has seen "the (basketball), program at Villanova grow through some difficult times and right now the program is where I want it to be."

Massimino explains that he is "happy to remain part of the Villanova family. My commitment and love for the University and the players was one of the major reasons for remaining." Dr. Ted Aceto, athletic director of Villanova, reaffirms that Coach Massimino's decision "solidifies the road to our big East Commitment." The Villanova Wildcats were accepted into the newly formed Big East Conference last week.

Pittsburgh was reported by the Philadelphia Inquirer to have offered Coach Massimino a $35,000 to $40,000 contract, the use of a house, and a recruiting budget far above the $10,000-a-year budget that Massimino operates with now.

The Associated Press stated that Massimino's new contract includes an annual salary of nearly $35,000 and an increase in the operating and recruiting budgets in the basketball program at Villanova.

Ruggers Seek To Improve

By E. C. FALCONE

One sure sign that spring is quickly approaching is when you're driving down Lancaster Pike towards Bryn Mawr, you may happen to notice a ragged group of fellows across the way from the Field House engaged in what looks to be more of a fisticuffs than a sport.

The Villanova Rugby Football Club is embarking on its spring schedule. On Saturday, the ruggers meet their first test in an always powerful Princeton squad at Princeton. This season promises to be one of improvement as the team had hovered around the .500 mark last fall.

The team also finds itself with the addition of a coach, Mr. Jim Siano, of the Plymouth Whitemarsh Rugby Club. Anyone that may be interested in playing the football-like sport is encouraged to come out to practices on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday at 3:30. Everyone that goes to practice is eligible to compete on an inter-collegiate level. The games between schools are divided into three games, A-B-C, depending on individual level of experience.

The Villanova Rugby schedule looks something like this:

PCOM	March 22
Lafayette	March 29
Delaware	April 5
Georgetown	April 12
NY 15s tourn	19

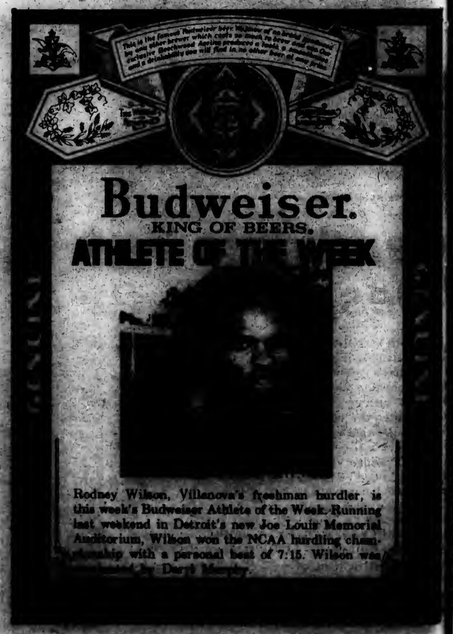
SYNCHRO

By KYLE GOTHNER

After missing the Regionals because of last week's snow, the Women's Synchronized Swimming team is preparing for the Nationals which are to be held at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor next week.

Beginning the season with the Hunter Cup meet, Sue Giordano and Mary Hogan finished first and second, respectively, in the senior figures, while Kelly Burke and Vicki Wagner finished second and third in the junior figures. At the Big Apple Meet, held at Bellvue Hospital in New York City, the girls maintained their streak with Sue Giordano and Mary Hogan taking first and second in both the senior solos and the senior figures. In the junior duet Kelly Burke and Vicki Wagner finished second. Their last meet was the State meet, held before spring break at the field house. Once again the girls made a fine showing with Sue Giordano and Mary Hogan placing first in the senior duet and Kelly Burke and Vicki Wagner placing second in the junior duet.

Hopefully, under the coaching of Linda Brookman, the size of the team will not matter, and they will maintain their winning style through the Nationals next week.



Rodney Wilson, Villanova's freshman hurdler, is this week's Budweiser Athlete of the Week. Running last weekend in Detroit's new Joe Louis Memorial Auditorium, Wilson won the NCAA hurdling championship with a personal best of 7:15. Wilson was [illegible] by Daryl Mundy.

Laxmen Open With Victory

By BRUCE MURRAY

Last week the men's Lacrosse team opened the 1980 season with an 18-5 win over Widener College. Goals were scored by seniors Jeff Bergman (6), Bill Hook (2), Bob Adams (2 goals and five assists), and Frank Giorgio 9 (1). Juniors Chris Clark and Al Horcher had two goals each, sophomore Mark Janoska 1, and freshman Sean Daily and Joe Breen also had one each.

"This year's season looks optimistic," stated Coach Lee Stevens of his team, "but at the same time there are no weak teams on our schedule. If we don't play heads up ball in our first five games we could be one and five," he added. "The next four games against Lehigh, Mount Saint Mary's, Drexel and Western Maryland could be the toughest on the schedule.

According to co-captains Bill Hook and Frank Giorgio, "This could be a banner season. Our attack is returning, our defense looks strong, and junior Bobby "Swiss" Hughes looks good in the goal."

Returning the attack this year are seniors Bob Adams and co-captain Bill Hook along with junior Al Horcher. According to Coach Stevens, "If the team has a good year, and if Hook and Adams have as good a year as last year, Villanova may get its first All-American Lacrosse Player. Last year Bob Adams led the nation in goals scored in assists, and Bill Hook finished second in the nation in goals scored.

Co-captain Frank Giorgio leads a strong defense. Sophomores Jim Coakley and Dan Williams also return, and freshman Bill Gold from Gold Harbor Springs High (last years runner up state champs in New York) will also be starting at defense drawing the opposition's best attack men.

Senior Jeff Bergman leads Villanova's midfield this year along with juniors Chris Clark and Kevin McHugh. Also at midfield are freshman Joe Breen, Dennis Conner, and Dan O'Connell (all from Shaminade High School, Long Island), and Ray Miter (Harriton) and Joe Bendenelli (Conestoga).

Flooding Closes Tunnel

By FRANK DOHERTY and BILL ROCK

The pedestrian tunnel at the Villanova station of Conrail's Paoli Line was flooded Friday as a result of the heavy rains that day. Workmen at the scene could offer no definite explanation as to why the flooding occurred.

"There's a lot of rain," said one workman. "Sometimes the drain gets clogged by litter."

Amtrak workers had pumped the water out of the tunnel by three o'clock Friday afternoon.

Police cut traffic down to one lane on the bridge which crosses over the tracks in order to create a pedestrian lane.

Lois Morasco, Philadelphia information director of Amtrak, blamed two factors for the flood. "First of all, the University has failed to properly drain the upper level parking area sufficiently. Secondly, some railroad ties were mistakenly placed in the ditch into which the tunnel drains.

"The latter problem has been rectified, but I have no idea whether the University has taken care of the upper level area."

George Kabusk of the Pennsylvania Public Utilities Commission explained that the Commission is presently studying the adequacy of the tunnel crossing. "We have assigned an engineer to the problem and he is currently studying it. He is preparing a letter which will be sent to PennDot, Amtrak, Conrail, Septa, Delaware County, Radnor Township and Villanova University.

"On April 29, the PUC will hold an on-the-site conference with representatives of all these organizations and see just what the problem is. Hopefully, then we will be able to settle everything."

Last week, James W. Patterson, Villanova's attorney in this case, indicated that the PUC considered the train crossing acceptable. In referring to the PUC and the organizations mentioned above, he stated, "Each of the respondents take a substantally similar stance. The central position taken was that the existing facility for crossing the train tracks is adequate."

Kabusk responded by saying, "There is no way we could hold that position. It would kind of make a field conference useless."

Amtrak renovated the tunnel last November, following the fatal accident of freshman Dorothy Zimmerman. A blacktop floor with a slight crown was added to aid in drainage.

An Amtrak spokesman at the time claimed the repairs would prevent flooding provided the drains did not block.

Students were forced to use Rte. 320 bridge after flooding closed the pedestrian tunnel last Friday.

Senate Urges Improved Lighting

By BILL CLARK

The Villanova University Senate approved a motion that would recommend improved lighting on Villanova's campus at its meeting of March 21, 1980.

The motion, presented by SGA President P.J. Winterhalter, proposed "that in the interest of the University's campus safety, improvements be made to better the lighting on campus at several locations, as cited by the Student Life Committee."

The locations recommended by the Student Life Committee include such areas as the main road between Kennedy Hall and Falvey Library, in front of Sheehan and Vasey Halls, the walkway between Dougherty Hall and the Main Chapel in front of the cemetery, and the walkway from Simpson and O'Dwyer Halls to the Main Chapel.

In other business, the Senate also approved a motion which read as follows: "The Villanova University Senate recommends to Father President Driscoll that all monies realized in the Covenant campaign to fund the Connelly Center which exceed total costs be used solely for the purposes intended."

The import of this motion, which was proposed by Rev. John Deegan, vice-president for student life, was to make sure that the Board of Trustees did not use this extra money for additional construction.

Several Senators questioned why the word "endowment" was being avoided in the motion, considering that the Covenant Campaign under which the money was raised specifically stated that all additional monies raised were to go to general endowment.

Dean J. Willard O'Brien of the Law School argued that the term "endowment" was too narrow. Even though the money was to be put into an endowment fund, the Covenant Campaign called for many different uses of the money.

Rather than pinning Villanova down by the term endowment, O'Brien argued, the Senate should just recommend that Villanova stick with the original terms of the Covenant Campaign.

There was also a report on the "Disposition of Excess Unrestricted Revenue" from June 1976 to May 1979, given by Controller Dietzler. According to Dietzler, Villanova received an additional $3.7 million in revenues from this period that was not budgeted for.

Other than the direct expenses associated with these additional students (an estimated $1.5 million), Dietzler said there were various capital improvements made with the extra monies. He cited that under Title IX, Villanova was required to put locker rooms in both the Field House and St. Mary's gymnasiums. There were also various renovations made to the Field House and St. Mary's swimming pools, especially in the roofing over both pools.

Approved campus lighting was recommended by the University Senate at its March 21 meeting.

Candidate Makes Ballot Despite Late Petitions

By JERRY DOUGHERTY

Dean Valente's name appeared on yesterday's Student Government Association election ballot despite his turning in of election petitions after the deadline.

Valente filed the petitions in the SGA office at 5:17 p.m. on March 20. SGA President P.J. Winterhalter confirmed. The deadline had been set beforehand at 5:00. The election rules state that the deadline of 5:00 "is final and no exceptions will be made."

Asked why Valente's petitions were accepted in light of their having been brought in after the deadline, all candidates [illegible] have made aware, Winterhalter, who serves as chairman of the SGA Election Commission, said they were accepted "because nobody complained. It is not up to the Election Commission Chairman to make changes."

Speaking on behalf of the commission, Terry O'Toole, a commission member, said, "P.J. (Winterhalter) felt that it would be in the best interests of the University and the students to ensure a two-candidate race. The commission felt that the small amount of time involved lies within the spirit of the rules, and no action will be taken unless a formal complaint to the commission is made."

Both Winterhalter and Henry Amoroso, Valente's opponent in yesterday's presidential election, were present in the office when Valente filed his petitions. Amoroso had submitted his petitions a few minutes before the deadline.

As of 11:00 a.m. on March 26, no complaints had been registered in regard to the acceptance of Valente's late petitions by the commission.

Neither Valente nor Amoroso, the only two candidates for SGA President, could be reached for comment on the subject of the petitions.

Ministry Retreat

It's that time again when we prepare to celebrate the Lord's act of Salvation . . . Christ's Resurrection! There will be an Easter Retreat beginning the evening of April 2nd until the afternoon of April 4th (Friday). This is a perfect opportunity for prayer, quiet time, discussion and enjoying each other.

The Retreat is limited to 41 people and will be held at Kirkridge Center. The cost is $10.00 per person.

Please sign up at the Campus Ministry Office by March 24th.

BSG Career Lecture

The BSG Club is sponsoring a career lecture given by Gary H. Bonas, assistant to the Dean of Sciences. The topic that will be discussed is Career Opportunities for Science Majors. This lecture will take place at 7 p.m. on April 9, 1980 in the Wayne Room of the Connelly Center. Refreshments will be served.

Glee Club

The Women's Glee Club of Villanova University regrets to announce that it must cancel its March 29th concert with Fordham University. However, the club will be performing in a Spring Concert with the Villanova Singers on April 12th.

Income Tax Assistance

Villanova law students will be available on Mondays from 2:00-4:00 and on Thursdays from 4:00-6:00 in Dougherty Hall, room 204, to volunteer their services in helping you file your income tax returns. Please bring all pertinent information with you — IRS forms are available at the office. This service is free.

Skydiving

The Outdoor Recreation Committee of the Villanova Union will be sponsoring another skydiving event this semester. The big jump is scheduled for Saturday, April 12 at 7 p.m. in the Connelly Center Cinema where there will be a film presentation, short lecture and an equipment demonstration by Doug Angel — a professional skydiver. Anyone who has a taste for adventure is encouraged to attend.

Fantastic Friday

Some of the best things in life are free. Health screening tests for Villanova students and faculty are free, April 11, between the hours of 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. Prevention is the key to good health, that's why SNAP and the College of Nursing are sponsoring a Health Fair to be held in the North and West Lounges of Dougherty. Come see us on April 11 for a truly "Fantastic Friday."

Jazz Course

Many students on campus have an interest and talent in Jazz, an enduring musical contribution of America. An elective offered to all undergraduates this coming Fall semester by Father Wilde, O.S.A., of the Art and Art History Department will delve into the history of both Jazz and Popular Music in America. When considering this 3-credit course, look at AAM 3000, as the course will not be listed according to its specific title. There are no prerequisited needed; only your interests.

John Gardner is a scholar of medieval literature, teacher, poet and an acclaimed novelist. Among his most noted books are Grendel, October Light and the Life & Times of Chaucer.

Mr. Gardner will read from his fiction and comment on contemporary literature. Please call the school at 844-3460 for reservations.

Mentzer Memorial Award

Each year, for nine years now, the University sponsors a memorial award to honor one student who, from documented services, appears to have contributed most to expanding opportunities for the underprivileged. The award perpetuates the memory of a former faculty member, Thomas J. Mentzer, whose own energies were so generously given to the same cause.

The Villanovan invites students to nominate students who volunteer their time and energy on a regular basis to such programs as social action programs, hospital volunteer programs, etc. The purpose of the Mentzer Award is to give recognition to that individual whose generosity is matched by his/her anonymity.

Nominations must be confined to Villanova students, and it is requested that some particulars about the individuals be given so that documentation of their efforts be obtained. No interviews of candidates are conducted. As to tangible merits, the award is in the form of a cash stipend, individual and University mounted plaques, and a reference credential of which nominees may be rightly proud.

Dr. James Murphy and Dr. Patrick Nolan, of the English Department, would be pleased to accept nominations.

Libertarian Party

Students or faculty interested in the understanding and support of the Libertarian Party please contact Pro. Stapelbroek, Philosophy Department.

Claudius the God

The Dept. of Art & Art History will host a lecture titled "Claudius the God: Roman Religious Concepts" on Tues., April 1st at 10 a.m. Prof. Kenneth Mathews of Beaver College will speak in room 105, Old Falvey. Prof. Mathews is well known for his lively radio program for Public Radio on ancient art and archaeology. The lecture will be illustrated with slides and will deal with the Julio-Claudians, the famous first dynasty of Roman emperors made so wonderfully alive on the public TV series, "I, Claudius."

Union Debate

The Political Union will have a debate on Monday Night in the North Lounge of Dougherty Hall beginning at 7 p.m. The speaker is Dr. Dennis Clark, Executive Director of Fels Fund and Author of The Irish in Philadelphia. The resolution, which should generate some discussion, is "This House Favors the Removal of British Troops from Northern Ireland." All members and others are invited to attend.

Pro-Life Seminar

On Saturday, March 29, the Villanovans For Life will be sponsoring a Pro-Life Seminar. The seminar will be held in the Connelly Center from 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. A registration fee of $1 per person will be charged. Anyone interested in attending should fill out a registration form available in the VFL office, Rm. 206, Dougherty Hall.

Mini - Marathon

Villanova running enthusiasts start training! The second Provident Mutual Mini-Marathon is drawing near.

The 6.2 mile race, sponsored by Provident Mutual Life Insurance Company of Philadelphia, will begin a 10 a.m., on Saturday, May 10, as part of University Citiweek, May 2-11.

The mini-marathon route begins and ends at Clark Park (43rd Street and Kingsessing Avenue, Philadelphia), and extends through the campuses, parks, and neighborhoods of University City.

University Citiweek is held annually to show Delaware Valley residents the variety of culture, education, and entertainment available in University City. It is sponsored by University Citigroup, a coalition of institutions, businesses, and local residents.

All Villanova students are invited to join the fun of University Citiweek and the Provident Mutual Mini-Marathon. Those who want to compete in the mini-marathon can obtain registration forms from the April edition of University City News, or from the University City Science Center, 3624 Market Street.

The entry fee is $3, and the first 500 registrants will receive a tee-shirt commemorating the event. Participants will be competing for prizes to be awarded at Clark Park after the race.

Career Development

Greeks Invited to Compete for Pinball Prizes

Fraternities and sororities nationwide are invited to compete with 20 new Stern pinball machines, top prizes in a three-day campus fund-raiser, April 11 through 13, proceeds of which will benefit the American Heart Association (AHA).

Colleges and universities across the country have already joined the fight against heart disease by signing up to participate in a national fund-raiser competition in April, AHA's "Youth Awareness Month." The contest has been designated a national special event by the National Youth Committee of the AHA and is being sponsored by Stern Electronics, Inc. (a major pinball game manufacturer) and National Lampoon magazine.

Any sorority or fraternity chapter is eligible to enter by staging a three-day fund-raising activity the weekend of April 11. Nineteen Greek houses raising the most money will be awarded Stern's explosive new Muhammad Ali pinball game; the next 50 houses will receive complimentary, life subscriptions to National Lampoon. In addition, one "Ali" machine will be presented to the fraternity or sorority that raises funds in the most novel or comedic manner.

In May, a representative of the house creating the most original fund-raiser event and a delegate of the top fund-raising chapter will be flown to Stern Electronics in Chicago for an award dinner.

Applications and total Alpha to Omega rules of entry are available by telephoning the American Heart Association at (214) 750-5300. Information inquiries must be received by April 1.

College Work Study

The on-campus CWS employment period has been extended to May 30, 1980. You can only work until your gross award has been earned, so if you need an increase to work in May, stop by the Financial Aid Office immediately.

Off campus CWS employment may be extended to May 30, 1980. To work in May, you must file a new PHEAA application and have remaining need. You may work 40 hours per week when classes are not in session and in May.

Memorial Service

On Thursday, April 10 at 12:00 Noon, a brief memorial service will be held in the College of Nursing for Professor Feigenberg, who died recently.

Professor Feigenberg, who taught nutrition in the College of Nursing for over 26 years retired in December.

All members of the Villanova Community and friends of Professor Feigenberg are most welcome. The family will be invited to attend.

Nursing students who knew Professor Feigenberg are particularly encouraged to join us in this tribute.

The service will be held in St. Mary's Auditorium.

Center To Operate Under Deficit

By CAROL ANN BARRALE

The 1980-81 budget and the Office of Financial Affairs indicate that the Connelly Center is expected to operate under a deficit of $200,000.

"Theoretically, the University hopes to have an endowment to offset the deficit, at least in part," says Rev. George F. Burnell, OSA, vice president of Financial Affairs, "But for the first year, and certainly now until May, there is an expected deficit depending, of course, on how well it is patronized."

The Center is "very busy; even busier than was projected," claims Marc Tuchman, director of the Connelly Center. "However, it is not uncommon to be strong during the first week of business and then taper off during the following weeks."

Funding for the Connelly Center will come partly from the University budget, which initially projected the income for the Connelly Center for next year as $337,000, while operating costs amount to $543,081. This leaves a $206,081 deficit.

Tuchman states, however, that it is "too early" to estimate correct figures. "I'm not going to commit myself," he says. "It would be an inaccurate guess. Later on in the semester we will have a better feel. At this point, it is too difficult to tell."

A deficit is expected, Burnell says, because "income from sales and food is not enough. The difference will have to be made up somewhere — in part by student tuition.

"If there is a definite set aside of endowment funds to take care of it, then there will be no contribution from student funds. There is no specific amount of student tuition budgeted for the Connelly Center.

"At the Senate budget meeting," Burnell continued, "funds that were surplus from the first covenant campaign and that were not used for furniture and other things, will be used for funding the endowment. If there were two million dollars left, it would be enough to take care of the deficit and enough to have the remainder set aside to collect interest.

"There is a need for action on the part of the Trustees," Burnell claims, "when the endowment resolution comes up."

The question of whether a liquor license purchase would affect Center financing is "not sure."

"People seem to believe there is a tremendous amount of money in a liquor license," Tuchman says, "But, a liquor license would not affect Center finances as much as they believe."

"There is a tremendous amount of money in liquor; but, in a University controlled atmosphere where, we will assume, liquor will be served at tables and not from taps, there is a tremendous amount of supervision required, and a need for waitresses and managers. At best, we could break even and maybe even make a little profit."

Marc Tuchman, director of the Connelly Center.

Commerce and Finance Hosts Lecture Program

By LORI MADDEN

Villanova's College of Commerce and Finance celebrated the recent opening of the Connelly Center by sponsoring a Business Lecture Program on Friday March 21. The program, held in the Cinema, featured three speakers. Richard W. Everett, Lee H. Idleman, and Dr. Clarence C. Walton spoke for approximately 40 minutes each on topics concerning economics and American business. The lectures were followed by a brief question and answer period.

Alvin Clay, dean of the College of Commerce and Finance, introduced the three speakers.

Richard W. Everett, vice-president of Chase Manhattan Bank in New York City, spoke first. Everett is a graduate of Swarthmore and Columbia Colleges. Everett is a "domestic economics analyst and forecaster." His topic of discussion was the "Economic Outlook for the United States."

Everett stated that the two major conditions of our economy are "higher than ever" inflation rates, and soaring interest rates. He predicts that prices and interest rates will rise until midsummer, "when we'll know it's a recession." At this time, prices may fall, and business investments, which have been on the decline, may be financed more easily.

Everett looks toward President Carter and the Congress for a solution to the inflation and interest problem. Carter's proposed 10c federal tax on gas is received well by Everett.

Everett stated that, "The recession which we are experiencing now is not a bad one. Recovery is expected early next year."

The second speaker was Lee H. Idleman, senior vice-president and director of research of Dean Witter Reynolds Co., New York City. Idleman, a graduate of Bucknell, is a Financial Analyst.

"Financial Market Conditions" was Idleman's lecture topic.

Idleman stated that, "The condition of the financial market is in chaos at present." He described fixed income and equity markets as being "lousy."

Idleman feels that the recession which we have entered will continue to be mild. However the government must cut its deficits, and slow down on its "onward and upward, inflation be damned" policy, in order to lower inflation and interest rates.

Idleman's lecture concluded with a message for business majors. He said "Reflect on the economic, political, and social turmoil of today. You should take more courses in psychology, for you will encounter extremes of emotional behavior with which you will have to cope."

The final speaker was Dr. Clarence C. Walton who spoke on "Ethical Considerations in Business." Walton boasts an extensive educational career.

"These are hard times ahead," stated Walton. It is a crucial time because "we've collapsed on our values." Walton feels that Liberal Arts is in "disarray" because the humanities have become too specialized. "Professors have a loose sense of connectedness. Justice, truth, and decency are no longer problems."

Walton challenged the Villanova faculty to look at how one relates theology to philosophy. "How are ethics and philosophy interdependent and casually related?" "Miracles just ain't gonna happen," stated Walton in conclusion to his lecture.

Celtic Culture Studied On Irish Literary Trip

By PETER J. RYAN and LEE-ANN FROST

Under the direction of Dr. James Murphy of the English Department, a group of students winged their way to historic Ireland during the recent spring break to experience the Celtic culture.

The format for this travel-study course (under the heading of Honors 5501-01) included intensive readings of W.B. Yeats "Mythologies," "The Tain" compiled by Thomas Kinsella, "Folktales of Ireland" by Sean O'Sullivan, and various poetry readings throughout the semester.

The itinerary for the trip was comprised of overnight stays in Ennis (County Clare), Galway, Sligo, and ultimately Dublin. While the group followed a regimen of sightseeing during the first few days, there was still a great deal of free time that provided the students with a chance to discover Ireland on their own.

The most memorable sightseeing centered around visits to the Cliffs of Moher, Innisfree, Lady Gregory's Estate, a performance at the Abbey Theatre, and of course the beautiful countryside that is unique to Ireland. Educational tour stops included Yeat's Tower and grave, the Knock Shrine, Joyce's Tower, Trinity College, and the home of Thomas Kinsella — one of the most important Irish writers of our time.

Travelers acquired the services of Kevin Vaughan — a native of Ennis now living in Dublin. Vaughan (who attended Villanova in the summer of '79) was invaluable to the group in furnishing keen insight to the true history of the Celtic people. By night, the tour guide was instrumental in showing the students the more lively pubs.

After a long day in the tour bus (departing at 9:30), or on walking excursions, the band of Americans gravitated to the pubs and their congenial atmospheres. The warmth of the people and the fine Irish music made the group feel right at home as was evidenced by their participation in the informal sing-alongs. More often than not these sessions would continue back at the hotel until the early hours of the morning.

Lindback Award Voting Nears

Seniors, juniors, and sophomores in all undergraduate day colleges, as well as full time faculty members of those colleges, will nominate candidates for the twentieth annual Christian R. and Mary F. Lindback Foundation awards for distinguished teaching.

Winning faculty members will each receive a $1000 cash award.

Voting will take place on Monday and Tuesday, March 31 and April 1 from 10:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. in the following areas:

C & F seniors, juniors, sophomores, and faculty in C & F cafeteria. Arts seniors, juniors, sophomores and faculty outside North Lounge, Dougherty Hall;

Science seniors, juniors, sophomores and faculty in Mendel Hall cafeteria:

Engineering seniors, juniors, sophomores and faculty in office of dean of engineering, Tolentine Hall;

Nursing seniors, juniors, sophomores and faculty in C & F cafeteria.

Voters will be invited to choose any three full-time faculty members who are not previous winners. The five candidates receiving the highest number of votes will be the official nominees for the Lindback awards. The President of the University will select two names from the list of five as winners of the 1980 Lindback award.

The Lindback Foundation annually makes grants available to colleges in the Delaware Valley to encourage effective teaching on the undergraduate level. Previous winners of the award, not eligible for re-election by terms of foundation's regulations, are as follows:

Patrick J. Dougherty (Finance) and John J. Gallen, (Civil Engineering), 1961; William C.A. Henry (Business Law) and Henry L. Rofinot (History), 1962; William G. Driscoll (Physics) and James J. Mitchell (English), 1963; Emil Amelotti (Mathematics) and Joseph J. Hicks (Electrical Engineering), 1964; Thomas C. Linahan (Mathematics) and Benedict A. Paparella (Philosophy), 1965; Jose R. de la Vega (Chemistry) and Joseph George, Jr., (History), 1966.

Also, William O'Neill (Business Administration) and Robert E. Wilkinson (English), 1967; Joseph W. Ratigan (English) and Robert B. Whiting (Mathematics), 1968; Frank H. Eby, Jr. (Business Administration) and Ralph Koliner (Civil Engineering), 1969; Alvin A. Clay (Accounting) and Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen (Biology), 1970; Daniel T. Regan (Philosophy) and John J. Tonkinson (Business Administration), 1971.

Also, Rev. Joseph J. Burns, (Education) and Robert W. Langran (Political Science), 1972; Aslam Abbasi (Electrical Engineering) and Gerald A. Dougherty (Accounting), 1973; John A. McClain (Biology) and William J. McNichol (Civil Engineering), 1974; Robert D. Lynch (Civil Engineering) and Edward V. McAssey (Mechanical Engineering), 1975; Lewis J. Draft Protested

By JERRY DOUGHERTY

Two Villanova students were among a gathering of over 30,000 who met in Washington, D.C. last weekend to protest President Carter's call for a resumption of draft registration.

Arturo Rivera, a senior, and Brian Gonzalez, a freshman, drove down to the Capitol Saturday to take part in the protest march through the streets of Washington.

Gonzalez said that it was "like a party" when they arrived. "Everyone was so happy when they got there to see all the people and posters," he said.

One of the posters read "Hell no, we won't fight for Texaco."

The organized protest actually began Friday night when 50 persons braved harsh weather conditions to hold an anti-registration vigil outside the White House.

Saturday's march took the traditional demonstration route through Washington, beginning at the White House and ending up on the steps of the Capitol Building.

At the Capitol a number of speeches in opposition to registration and the draft were given such anti-establishment figures of the 1960's as Michael Harrington.

Gonzalez said he was surprised to see so many older persons participating in the march.

In commenting on the march, Gonzalez said, "It was like a celebration, even the police were smiling."

Villanova Alumnus Seeks Attorney General Post

By SHARON WINTERS

"The first person to be elected attorney general will have the responsibility and challenge to chart a course to establish the tempo and develop the standards for the administration of justice in Pennsylvania for decades to come," cited LeRoy Zimmerman, Villanova University alumnus and candidate for Pennsylvania attorney general.

During a visit to Villanova on March 20, Zimmerman discussed his candidacy for the attorney general's office. He is running unopposed in the Republican primary on April 22.

Zimmerman has been travelling throughout Pennsylvania, covering thirty counties to date, to gain support for his candidacy and publicize significant change in the state constitution. Pennsylvania is the 43rd state to elect an attorney general. Prior to this, the office appointed by the governor.

Roy Zimmerman believes that people want a prosecuter with experience as well as a civil lawyer who can initiate areas of law. He doesn't want to merely react to legislation but rather energize a justice department that can take a leadership role in setting the tone for making improvements.

The daily lives of Pennsylvanians will be affected by the attorney general's office according to Zimmerman. Aside from crime, the office will deal with the legality of contracts, issues concerning leases and proposed state regulations.

Even though the attorney general has been removed from the executive branch of the state government and made an independent branch, difficulties still remain. Zimmerman believes that it is a "disgrace" that the state legislature has not defined the duties of the office. He would like to see the legislature act in this area before primary on April 22.

Zimmerman is seeking the support of all Pennsylvanians in this "historic" election. He feels that the young should have a significant interest in this election because if the office is politicized, it will take years to undo the damage.

LeRoy Zimmerman is a native of Harrisburg. He graduated from the College of Commerce and Finance at Villanova in 1956. After that, he attended the Dickinson School of Law graduating in 1959.

In 1965, Roy Zimmerman was appointed District Attorney of Dauphin County. He completed the unexpired term of his deceased predecessor.

Zimmerman was subsequently elected to the office three times after his appointment. The last two terms he ran unopposed, supported by Democrats and Republicans alike.

Lecture Studies Nuclear Power

By FRANK J. DOHERTY

"The Events at Three Mile Island — Lessons for Nuclear Power," was the topic for the fifth annual Distinguished Public Lecture presented by the College of Engineering.

The lecture was held on Wednesday evening, March 19 as part of the grand opening activities of the new Connelly Center.

The featured speaker for the evening was Dr. Zenons Zudans, senior vice-president for engineering at the Franklin Research Center, a division of the Franklin Institute in Philadelphia.

Zudans is an appointed consultant to the Advisory Committee on Reactor Safeguards of the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

In his lecture, Zudans discussed how a nuclear reactor works, the state of the reactor of Three Mile Island and the six distinct phases of the accident, which took place one year ago today.

Zudans described the psychological effects of the accident as, "not bad," but termed the economic effect, "a disaster."

He stated that the accident showed the emergency preparedness at the power plant to be virtually nonexistent.

Zudans called nuclear power a latent risk taken by society as compared to acute risks like automobile and airplane accidents.

Dr. Robert D. Lynch, dean of the College of Engineering, announced in his introductory remarks that Pennsylvania governor Dick Thornburgh would be present for the convocation of the college's 75th anniversary. Thornburgh, himself a civil engineer, will receive an honorary degree from Villanova at the ceremony on April 15.

Does Economy Matter ?

By SHARON WINTERS

Comparison shopping is not just for middle class housewives. Anyone on a limited budget or allowance has to carefully choose items for purchase to get the most out of the ever dwindling buying power of the no longer almighty dollar.

The focus here is on fuel costs. The fuel in question is not for vehicles but rather for humans. The handsome Connelly Center seems to have brought not only a lovely dining area, the Belle Aire Terrace, but also a higher meal bill.

A plain hamburger in the Belle Aire Terrace cost $1.59; a burger in the Pie Shop at Dougherty Hall is $0.65. Belle Aire charges $1.50 for a steak sandwich which costs $1.00 in the Pie Shop. A turkey sandwich in Connelly is $1.45 compared to $1.00 in Dougherty. There is a $0.65 difference between the ham sandwich prices in the two places with Belle Aire having the higher rate. Drinks such as coffee and soda will be a nickle more expensive at Connelly.

The major asset of the new Center is that it has a distinctive "non-cafeteria look" that is very appealing. It is a pleasant place to lounge, to visit and to bring guests. Other luncheon areas, including the Pie Shop, can't compete with the new facility in atmosphere. There is no doubt that Connelly Center is a gracious, lovely addition to the Villanova campus.

Aside from its looks, Connelly Center has other features in its favor — the variety of items to choose from, the delicatessen-style of sandwiches, and the extras sometimes included such as a pickle, potato chips or steak fries.

"The Handsome Connelly Center Seems to Have Brought not Only a Lovely Dining Area. . . But Also a Higher Meal Bill."

Belle Aire has a wide range of food. Students can snack on pizza of several varieties. Meals of sandwiches or salads can be made to order by the customer's whim. Cheeses, onions and sauces can be selected as condiments.

The "deli-style" is very popular. Sandwiches are made from meats sliced as they would be at a neighborhood delicatessen. Ham, for example, is cut thin and stacked on a sandwich in an appealing manner; it is quite different from the prepared supermarket-type lunch meats that are prepackaged in thick slices.

Sandwiches at the Center often come with extra items like chips, steak fries or pickle slices. The potato chips are a self-explanatory addition as are pickle slices. The steak fries are different and not to be confused with french fries. Fries that come with some Belle Aire sandwiches are thick wedges of potato with the skin still intact that are cooked in oil until browned on the surface although not crispy throughout.

The new Center has features that seem to compensate for the higher prices charged, at least on the surface. The inclusion of steak fries can be a welcome addition and worth the extra money for the sandwich if the buyer likes potatoes prepared in that manner. The wide selection of food can be nice if the student would like, and has time for, more than a quick sandwich and soda.

For all of Belle Aire's positive qualities, the fact remains that this University facility is more expensive than other luncheon areas like the Pie Shop. A sandwich, soda and a bag of chips will cost close to $3.00 in Belle Aire. The comparable Pie Shop meal across the sidewalk will cost about $2.00.

A difference of one dollar per day for lunch might not be significant for some students but others who must be budget conscious might want to pause a moment to reflect on the price differential. A dollar more per day would add up to $50.00 in ten weeks.

Fifty dollars to a student who works, is on a tight budget or allowance, or is otherwise financially limited can make the Pie Shop more attractive to the purse. The monetary savings could make a difference for example in whether or not the wardrobe is expanded or the party is held.

Any price conscious individual, even if not financially limited, might want to spend money in other areas rather than lunch. The consumer can choose to spend less on lunch and snacks as a matter of principle. Perhaps the individual would want to rather eat in an off-campus restaurant if his or her funds are not constrained.

Comparison shoppers could find unlimited reasons not to eat lunch and snacks in the Belle Aire Terrace on a daily basis. The difference in price is a significant deterrent for some student body members.

Getting to Know U-II

By BOB COUREY

University II will enter into its second year of existence next semester. At this time, the administrators of the program are making adjustments for next semester.

U II had its origins with the Dean of Men in the fall of 1978. In the fall of 1979, it became an ad hoc committee of the Villanova Union, and last December, U II became a separate committee.

Presently, U II is comprised of about 300 people, including the committee, teachers and enrolled students.

"Now that we are a committee, we hope to branch out and expand the program more than it ever was, especially in the areas where the most interest is shown," commented program coordinator Rick McNally.

McNally plans to have the student body polled this semester in order to see with what courses the most interest lies.

A change from this semester will be to specifically select teachers for the course. As of now, volunteers, who have special talents in their respective areas, teach for U II.

Enrollment this semester is larger than in the past, perhaps because of the diversity of the programs offered. The programs range from skill courses, such as speedreading and typing, to cultural studies, such as beginning Hebrew.

Courses like lifesaving, ballroom dancing and high-fidelity science are going over well. Ballet, "Jazzercise," and slimnastics are very popular among the women.

In the beginning of the semester, 21 courses were offered. Four of these were dropped because of lack of interest.

"We hope to offer the more popular courses next semester. People should let us know what they want to help us out," stated McNally.

Teachers are comprised of students, faculty, administration, and people from outside of the university. In the future, U II will be open for enrollment to the entire community.

In summing up the program, McNally commented, "It has been a really great experience for everyone involved, both educationally and socially."

Center for Concern

Are You a Conscientious Objector?

Throughout the 1980's, the world will face difficult questions about war and peace. During this decade, each one of us will probably ask ourself, "What do I believe about war?" The purpose of this questionnaire is to encourage people who think they might be conscientious objectors to answer that question and make a record of it.

What is conscientious objection?

Generally, conscientious objection is a deep conviction, motivated by conscience, that prevents someone from taking part in armed combat.

What types of conscientious objectors are recognized by federal law?

At this time, federal law recognizes two types of conscientious objectors:

1. Conscientious objectors: These are people who, by reason of deeply held moral, ethical, or religious beliefs, are conscientiously opposed to participating in war in any form.

2. Noncombatants: These are people who, by reason of deeply held moral, ethical, or religious beliefs, are conscientiously opposed to participating in war in any form, but who do not object to performing noncombat duties (such as being a medic) in the armed forces.

What other types of conscientious objectors are there?

3. Selective objectors: These are persons whose consciences would not permit them to participate in what they believe to be an unjust war, but who could participate in what they believe to be a just war. For example, many people who were conscientiously opposed to the Vietnam War because they believe it was unjust, said that they would have fought in World War II.

4. Nuclear pacifists: These are persons whose consciences would not permit them to participate in a nuclear war, or what they believe would likely become a nuclear war. Some nuclear pacifists are opposed to all war because of their belief that any war fought today would lead to the use of nuclear weapons.

At this time federal law does not recognize selective objectors and nuclear pacifists as conscientious objectors. If the law remains the same, those persons would not be granted conscientious objector exemptions from military service in a future draft.

Am I a conscientious objector?

This question is not easy to answer, so it is important to give it serious thought. You may want to consult your relatives, pastors, or teachers. It may take some time to come to a conclusion. The important thing is to start thinking about this NOW. What do you believe about war?

CAMPUS COMEDY

Graduation Gives Gas

By BARBARA ANNE HIGGINS

Blessed is he who has found his work; let him ask no other blessedness.

Thomas Carlyle

I'd like to dedicate this to all of those seniors out there who are "unblessed," (according to Carlyle, not God, mind you). Those of you who have the distinguished honor of being "blessed" during these glorious days of Spring, when love is in the air and rejection letters are in the mail, can skip over this article. (Yes, you have my permission).

But those who are in the same boat as me may find a little comfort in knowing that you're not the only one who is beginning to have nightmares about mailboxes. Yes, I know the feeling. Walking around humming, "Everybody loves a winner, so nobody loves me . . ." It's rough, I know.

After 17 years of education, I may be writing copy for Mister Rodgers in May for all I know. That is if Electric Factory doesn't get to me first.

Please excuse me while I wallow in self-pity, but I've been really down. May is getting closer and closer and Graduation is beginning to look like a Requiem Mass for my educational career.

And from the sounds of the conversations in the various hangouts on campus, I'm not the only one.

Raw nerves and three-piece suits seem to be part and partial nowadays, for the students who interview on campus. And no wonder. If you've ever been through an interview you would understand. Intimidation is the key to an interviewer's artillery, along with condescending remarks and loaded questions. This can be murder on your self-esteem to say nothing of your confidence. Trying to look calm when you're nervous, self-assured when you're shaking in your pants, and quietly dignified when you feel like crawling under the desk, can be a real test of character.

But don't fret. It will all be over soon. (You can take that one of two ways, depending on your state of mind).

But seriously, folks. Spring should be a time of emotional renewal, softball games, frisbee, warm days and wild nights. So don't let those little slips of paper get you bent out of shape. Enjoy your final days here at V.U. while you can still use the excuse of being a college student to explain your behavior.

Don't fall into the trap of thinking that May 18 is some kind of deadline for career initiation. Yes, it may be the end of your college career. But think of it as the threshold of a yellow brick road — full of color and challenging opportunities. You may have to look out for those scarecrows along the way, (interviewers and such, for those who didn't pick up the symbolism), but the most important thing is to enjoy the view along the way.

The Fear at Three-Mile Island

Too Easily, We Have Forgotten

As the Soviets invade Afghanistan, as Americans continue to be held hostage in Iran, as candidates clamour down the campaign trail, as prices inflate, as recessions are predicted, as Americans get caught up in crisis after crisis: it may well be a good time to observe an anniversary.

It may well be a good time to remember the fear and frustration of those several days, exactly one year ago, when people who lived in a farming town no more than an hour away from here waited to see if they would be sprayed with a radioactive vapor to be emitted from one of the four concrete towers they could see from their front porches.

How frustrating! This danger was coming from the very power plant that for so long had been something they trusted — their source of electricity.

And how afraid! The threat was invisible, and that was worst of all. They did not understand what radiation could do. Would it be like a bomb? Would it just be a quiet lethal gas? Would there be fire? Some people on T.V. said that if that hot metal reactor in there melted down, the land would be destroyed: for miles and miles. In the farming towns of middle Pennsylvania, the land is life.

One thing about radiation was as certain then as it is now. The effects lessen, the farther one gets from the source.

We were certainly frightened here, when the reactor malfunctioned at Three Mile Island. We knew that if there was a melt-down, we would be affected, somehow. Speakers came to Villanova from the anti-nuclear group, "Mobilization for Survival." One of them said that his bags were packed. Pennsylvania had absolutely no evacuation plan, but he would be ready. If anything would happen, he and his wife and kids would be ready to go. No, he wasn't sure where.

But the problem was, according to the calm spokesmen from the N.R.C., that we just didn't understand about nuclear energy. Certainly there is a risk. "You take a certain risk driving a car, don't you?" Well, yes, we agreed that driving on the Schuylkill Expressway every day wasn't too safe, either. Back in Middletown, no calm spokesman from the N.R.C. could ever hope to make those farmers understand what driving had to do with those four huge concrete towers they could see from their porches.

The effects of it lessen, the farther one gets from the source. Three Mile Island was long ago, far away. There are the Russians to worry about now. We don't know where we're getting our oil from, how can we cut back on nuclear energy too? It's a moot topic, Americans seem to agree. The presidential candidates don't even talk about it.

The effects lessen, the farther one gets from the source. Controlling nuclear energy is not at all a moot topic to those irrepressable farmers in Middletown, Pennsylvania. They travel to Washington demanding to be heard. They hold demonstrations and vigils together, because they are still afraid. "I believe we are living in the last days," one minister in the town told his congregation.

What is ironic is that the farmers who are holding the vigils, are among the few who don't need to be reminded of what they live with each-day. We are the ones who need to observe this anniversary. We are the ones who, too easily, have forgotten.

Safety

To the Editor:

I would like to bring to the attention of the Villanova Community a situation which concerns me very much.

Over the past year a representative group has been working on the problem of Traffic Safety. A number of things have been accomplished. Some items are still in process.

As part of their contribution to safety, Villanova University has posted signs warning of the danger of crossing the railroad tracks. Also, the University is in the process of installing a fence along its property adjacent to the tracks.

The problem: A large number of the signs have been taken or destroyed. A number of the posts for the fence have been torn down.

The result is that Villanova can not fulfill its part of the bargain to take all reasonable steps to improve safety. Further, the cost of these projects is escalating and our Insurance Agent is threatening cancellation of our policy. As you know, increased costs are borne to a large extent by the students.

I would hope that all members of the Villanova community will cooperate in helping the University to improve Traffic Safety. Let me also state the obvious: Anyone apprehended in stealing or destroying property in relation to this or any other project on campus will be prosecuted. Further, any student apprehended will be subject to expulsion.

Anderson

Dear Editor:

"Who is John Anderson?" Many people have been asking this question since Anderson's strong finishes in the recent Massachusetts and Vermont primaries. All of a sudden, a little-known candidate for president has come into the national spotlight. Perhaps this is so because instead of telling people how he was going to win the campaign, Anderson has been telling people why they should support him.

While other candidates concentrate on saying what will win the most votes and offend the fewest people, Anderson has taken definite, realistic, and sometimes controversial stands on gut issues. While other candidates are preaching a 30% reduction in taxes coupled with an increase in defense spending, Anderson has been saying no tax cut and a limit on defense spending. While other candidates have been scrambling for the support of Republican party "regulars," Anderson has gone unheralded by any high ranking Republican official.

Does this sound like a sure-fire way not to get elected? If so, what is the explanation of Anderson's success? Anderson likened it to a quote by Ralph Waldo Emerson: "Nothing astonishes men so much as common sense and plain dealing." Perhaps Anderson appeals to our same emotions which make us consider Harry Truman one of our best Presidents.

Most of the other Republican candidates are writing Anderson off as a flash in the pan. They say he succeeded in Massachusetts and Vermont because Democrats and Independents were allowed to vote in those primaries. But, who better to lead our country through these very difficult times than someone who can cross party lines and truly unite us as Americans; not as Democrats or Republicans?

John Anderson is not a messiah who will automatically solve all our problems, nor does he claim to be. He is, however, someone who will help us recognize our problems and dare us as a people to come together and tackle them.

Admittedly, the Anderson campaign has a long way to go. His campaign is short on money (he has spent an estimated $1.5 million, as compared to $12 million for Regan and $9 million for Bush) and he has the problem of a very large lead held by Ronald Reagan. But, as Anderson himself has said, he has a more valuable asset than money: "Some different ideas that challenge you to think."

If anyone is interested in forming a "Villanovans for Anderson" group, please drop me a line up at the Villanovan office. His campaign has been very popular at colleges and universities throughout the country. If you look at the man, I don't think it is very difficult to figure out why.

Respectfully submitted,

Draft and Religion

Dear Sir,

Recently there have been many negative responses to Dr. Durland's message of peace (2/8/80). The bulk of these letters came from members of Villanova's R.O.T.C. Remorsefully, however, there has not been a single response, either negative or positive, from among the clergy.

It is imperative that the clergy and the Administration take a stand and justify their positions. The question must be posed; has Villanova sold Christ for a few pieces of gold? Perhaps Machiavelli was correct, when he implied that there is no room for morality in politics. If so, we must bear in mind that the converse is also true; there is no room for politics in morality.

Unlike Dr. Durland, I find no reason that R.O.T.C. should not be at Villanova. What better place to change their mode thought, than in a "Christian community." The problem arises, however, when the trend of Christian thought nourishes, rather than starves militaristic appetites.

"Militaristic rowdies?" Never. The men in R.O.T.C. are good men with good intentions. Nevertheless, we must remember, that the greatest damage has been caused by good men, with good intentions, and poor tactics. In reply to M. Wooley (2/22/80), understand that while the thinking of Dr. Durland has permitted Hitler and Stalin, it has never produced them. Furthermore, in response to W.J. Barnhurst (2/22/80), realize that peace is a means and not solely an end.

With the possibility of conscription returning, there is an imminent need to re-evaluate our positions as Christians. Students, clergy, Administration, and all Catholics must focus on Rome and the just-war theory, rather than on Washington. If there must be a just-war theory, then why a qualified "yes," rather than a qualified "no?" This shift in emphasis has allowed more people to be killed utilizing the label of Christ, than were ever loved in His name. If Irish Catholics adhered to the command of "Love thy enemy" as well they do to the Church's stand on contraception, there would probably be an explosion of Love, rather than population.

Let us not allow our nationality to become a contraceptive, and deny the birth of our faith. Remember that Peace, not war, is always our last alternative, and recall that Christ carried a Cross, not an M-16.

James Sweeney "81"

Dr. Durland,

While you may be perplexed by certain articles in the February 1st issue of The Villanovan, I am appalled by the incredulous logic expressed in your letter in the February 8, 1980 issue of the same publication. Your association of abortion, death chambers and young men and women fulfilling their patriotic duty to their country is an onerous insult not only to these same men and women but to our nation. I do not claim to be in close communion with the early martyrs, as you imply to be, but I suggest that you review the work, City of God by St. Augustine — paying particular attention to books, IV, XIX, and XXII, if you wish to understand the Christian teachings concerning War. Further, in his Summa Theologica, St. Thomas Aquinas deals with the concept of war. Perhaps a review of this material would prove enlightening to you.

I am against abortion, death chambers and unjust wars. I feel, however, that for the moment you could better spend your time instructing the Villanova students as to why it is a breach of the Seven Commandment to attempt stealing meat from the Bryn Mawr Acme or why the 5th Commandment and Natural Law forbid smoke bombs and bogus fire alarms in the residence dormitories.

50 Days Complaint

Dear Editor,

Up to this time, the Villanovan has remained refreshingly free of any adverse reactions to the Senior Graduation Parties. However, several incidents at last Friday's 50 Days to Graduation Party demand that the precedent again be set.

The Blue Key Society did a commendable job in organizing and running the affair, despite the chronic and perennial problem of sophomores and juniors miraculously being elevated to senior status. It is indeed unfortunate that the Society's hard work might be forgotten and overshadowed by the reprehensible behavior of the Stage Crew and in particular that of D.J.(as he was so quick to remind us), Jim Klein.

Mr. Klein was partially, if not wholly, responsible for marring the otherwise enjoyable evening in all of the following ways:

1) continuously interjecting insidious remarks throughout the course of the night (for example, his insistance on describing his forgettable d.j. career "gig" by "gig" in excrutiating detail, and his innane commentary on world politics)

2) his unprovoked (and most definitely unprofessional and unappreciated) use of profanity

3) his refusal to play requests (unless, of course, it was Blondie's "Call Me" which he played no less than six times) and

4) ending the evening with a tirade in which he not only insulted the entire class (c.f. No. 2 above), but also had the temerity to repeatedly attempt to provoke fights with members of the audience.

Surely the man has either severe mental problems, or drastic problems with alcohol or drugs. In any case he certainly suffers from an incredibly inflated and falacious sense of self-worth. If he is looking for attention, he has certainly succeeded. If he is looking for respect, he is a pitiful failure.

How this was allowed to happen throughout the evening is beyond our comprehension, especially in light of the fact that Ms. Lucy Gorski, allegedly one of the University's top student liasons as Union Coordinator, allowed the events to continue unchecked. Although we are grateful for her preventing the playing of "Call Me" for the fifth time in a row at the evening's end, if she was not in control of the situation she should neither have forced the other more rational members of the Stage Crew to close up without playing an appropriate last song, nor should she have been visible on stage at all. If she was in charge, we feel that she was ineffective at best.

We regret that one of the last of our opportunities to gather with our friends was so tainted. We only hope for two things:

1) that the Blue Key Society or the Villanova Union will make the effort to sponsor another of these usually fine affairs in the great tradition which they have established, being somewhat more selective in their choice of music makers (we're sure that WKVU could do a more than adequate job), and 2) that Jim Klein steer clear of the Marriot on April 19th.

Writer Responds

Dear Editor:

On March 21, 1980, The Villanovan printed my article "Dorm Residents Question Change." The article stated that "Assistant Dean of Men Anthony Martin has discounted charges that the conversion of Galberry Hall and a wing of Stanford Hall to academic dormitories was motivated by a desire to discipline residents of those halls."

In my opinion this article does not accurately reflect the accusations of its contributors, and does not fullfill my need (or the paper's need) to inform its readers of the administration's ability to program the student populace with false and misleading information through subtle manipulation of the university's only remaining newspaper.

Assistant Dean of Men Martin's statement which presents the motivation behind the administration's decision to convert Galberry and 4-B wing of Stanford into a "non-institutional setting" which will provide students with a "complete education" is a gross misrepresentation of the truth.

In the past weeks I have spoken to a great number of students who are members (and were members) of Galberry and 4-B Stanford and have come to the conclusion that the true motivation behind this decision is not to establish a "long term project (designed) . . . to make residence halls a place where education will continue."

In the past two years five members of Galberry Hall have had their "residential status revoked because of disciplinary problem," stated current resident Mark O'Neil, "but I don't call them problems," he added.

Mr. O'Neil and others explained to me that the nature of these problems ranged from legitimate disciplinary concerns, to the unprovoked relocation of inhabitants in an effort to prevent the "infection" of incoming freshmen "by party oriented people."

As one former member of Stanford 4-B wing said, the situation in Stanford is the same. "It was just a beer drinking wing which like to get six or seven rooms into one and play some music, and just have a good time."

If the administration's statement denying the accusations that the decision to create these "special academic areas" were true, why hasn't the administration taken into consideration the "complete education" of all students and devised a fair means of providing residency for those students like Chris Kaye and John LaTorr who lost their residency because of the administrations decision?

Fred Response

Dear Editor:

I am writing this letter as a patriotic citizen of this country and as a respected member of the Villanova community. On Thursday, February 21, Fred Warner accosted me on the first floor of Dougherty Hall. He forced me at gun point to enter the Campus Information Center and empty the cash register of its contents. Upon receiving said contents, he made a very quick exit. It is my assertion that Fred Warner was not forced into such a heinous crime but did so out of his own volition.

Immediately following Mr. Warner's capture, the C.I.A. sent an agent to my apartment. Once there, this representative offered me $1,000 to keep silent as to the occurences of the 21st of February. I, of course, refused.

It is my contention that Mr. Warner has extracted himself from this miasma through an intricate plea bargaining scheme worked out with the C.I.A. In return for Mr. Warner's freedom, he agreed to turn in his fellow S.L.A. members. I believe it is my duty to bring this matter to the attention of the public. As a victim of the recent S.L.A. rampage, I believe I should have been privy to the plea bargaining process. Instead, the attempt was made to pay me off. My sense of justice is highly insulted.

Sincerely,
Jack O'Brien

Runner Views Olympics

The Carter Administration, with the support of the Congress, has requested a boycott of the Moscow Summer Olympic Games by the American team in protest against the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan. The boycott will not become official until it is accepted by the United States Olympic Committee, which will vote on the question at its meeting scheduled for April 11 and 12 in Colorado Springs.

Villanova's world-record-holding runner Don Paige, who would directly be affected by the boycott, was one of about 60 athletes who met with President Carter last Friday. Paige said he was in favor of the boycott before he went to Washington, and said that Carter's statements reinforced his feelings.

The majority of the athletes who went to the White House, according to Paige, were not in favor of the boycott. "They had to pay the expenses to get there, and if they had to put out the money, they were not going to be in favor of the boycott."

Paige said that in his address to the athletes, Carter "closed the door and threw away the key" to the summer Olympic games.

Writing this before he met with President Carter, Paige here expressed his views on the Olympic boycott.

By DON PAIGE

My feelings concerning the Olympic situation are one of a two-fold meaning. On the one side of the coin are my feelings as an athlete. The Olympic Games are the highest level of competition one can compete in if he is a track athlete. Track and Field is an amateur sport; there is no pro track, so therefore the Olympic Games represent the Super Bowl of football, the World Series of baseball, and the Stanley Cup of hockey.

On the other side of the coin, I am a citizen of the United States of America. If the leader of our country, President Carter, asks us, the athletes, to boycott the Olympic Games, I then would boycott along with the thousands of athletes that would be sacrificing the same as I.

I would like to point out and stress, though, that nothing can replace the Olympic Games. The talk of alternate competition is not an alternate solution. No other competition can match the competitive spirit, prestige, and joy of the Olympics. The alternate competition will just help relieve some of the pain and suffering that so many athletes have gone through in trying to reach one of their life long dreams.

Student Government Association

Where Will The SGA Go?

By P. J. WINTERHALTER
Student Body President

Now the halls are all empty, the maintenance takes the stage, packs it up and tears it down. The candidates are the first to come and the last to go working for . . . for what? Now the elections are over, what will happen, where will the Student Government go?

Perhaps the SGA has come to the crossroads. This year, in all realities, the assembly, which is supposed to have a constituency of the student body, had nothing; for the most part it was inactive for the entire year. Now the time has come, all the elected members of the new student caucus stressed in their platforms to advocate better communication to greater facilitate involvement of the student body. But this is a two way street; you the students of Villanova must get involved, must speak up for what you believe in. It is hypocritical to sit back and simply complain, and do nothing to solve what you're complaining about. This is why nothing gets done at this school.

Last Thursday, a new caucus, a new group of student senators was born at Villanova University. They are faced with the impossible task of pleasing every single Villanova student. This caucus has their work cut out for them. Then again, so does every caucus. The challenge is there, now the University must wait for the results.

For anything to get done, everyone must work, not just the members of the Student Government; but you, and your roommate, and your friends. For anything to work, there must be participation. Don't just complain, get involved! We can make this University better than it is, but you have to help!

I know. I was a fool, too. When elected, I thought I could save Villanova and the world. I paid no attention to the guy who came up to me during the campaign and said, "don't waste your time, no one cares." I was still undaunted when less than 20% of the student body voted. No matter what students said or did would discourage me from trying to save Villanova. What eventually did discourage me after a full year was the realization I was banging my head against a brick wall known as the Board of Trustees. During this year's campaign, I've heard candidates saying they want to set up better communication between the students and the Board of Trustees. Forget it. The Board of Trustees neither want to hear nor care what you think. Over the years, the SGA has proposed co-ed dorms, a more lenient alcohol policy and an appeal for active fund raising. Obviously, these are things the students need and want, but these ideas and others end up in the circular file of some conference room. Villanova is still a lumbering dinosaur in the area of student sensitivity and needs. We know what happened to the dinosaur. Will the same be true of Villanova? It seems to me that the Board of Trustees is leading us right into our ice age of sorts. They are killing off any student input or involvement for fear of loss of authority. As they say, power corrupts and that is certainly applicable here.

The second wall I ran into head first and probably which hurt the most was with students, such as yourself. I have found that as much as the student body is willing to complain, they are unwilling to help themselves. When only 400 out of 6000 students show up for a demonstration against a tuition raise, you know something's wrong. Everyone complains how ineffective student government is, but when it comes to unite against a common enemy, students are nowhere to be found. This is not to say that all students are apathetic. This year the S.G.A. has had more student support than the last three years combined. Some students are realizing how effective student government can be. Others are venting their frustrations on a student government that is wrongly being accused of not performing its duties in trying to expand student's privileges. If you really want to blame someone, blame those who won't listen to us; by now you know who they are.

So what do our new representatives have to look forward to? A lot of hard work, wasted time and frustration. If you want to save Villanova and the world, buy a cape and a mask. Maybe even a crash helmet. If you think you're going to make Villanova a better school, guess what? April Fool . . .

To Whom It May Concern

By MARK ZAPPY
Arts Senator

By the time you read this, elections for student representatives to the 1980-81 University Senate will be history. Once again, Villanova students will be led by aggressive young students whose fresh ideas will constitute major changes in the social and academic life of the University. I hate to burst the bubble of these newly elected, but they won't be able to get you full visitation; they won't be able to bring back Cat's Eyes; and they won't be able to lower tuition. If anyone truly believes they can do this, he's a fool.

Legal Info Center

The legal information center is currently offering free counseling on landlord-tenant problems and will give free assistance with completing income tax forms until the first week of April. The center is open Monday through Friday.

A.C.S. Apology

The members of the executive board of A.C.S. would like to apologize to all those who tried to attend the meeting on March 25 but found the North Lounge locked. The A.C.S. had this lounge reserved but no one unlocked the door for the meeting. It took us a while to locate a security guard to open the door and by that time most of you had left. Thanks for trying to attend and hope to see you at the next meeting.

Year End

By LEO KOLETAS
and LAURA STECKLAIR

We are now coming to the end of the school year. It is time for the executive board of the A.C.S. to disband. It is time to make room for the next group of elected officials. The members of the executive board should be looking forward to welcoming this turn of events, but instead they are not. The way things look now there will no longer be an Association of Commuter Students.

There are a few reasons why this group is in jeopardy of becoming extinct. One of these reasons is lack of interest in the part of commuters to run for an executive position. On the executive board there are seven positions. We have a president, vice-president, secretary-treasurer. These are all elected positions. We also have appointed chairmen. The committees they chair are communications, social, ad-hoc, and intramurals. Five out of the seven executive board members are graduating. There have not been many people who have approached the members of A.C.S. with an interest to run. Therefore, many of these positions will remain empty.

Also there is a lack of interest in many students to get involved in the organization. Many of our meetings have very poor attendance, yet many commuters sit around and complain that there are not enough events sponsored for commuters. Many of these people come to A.C.S. with their complaints and expect us to do the work for them. Yes, the function of the A.C.S. is to help the commuter student with his needs, but 10 to 15 people can't do all the work. Commuters represent 62% of Villanova's population. Where are the rest of these students? Why don't these people want to get involved and have commuters be represented better on campus?

The challenge is left to you the commuters. We have worked hard and accomplished much these past few years. Those of us leaving, with all our efforts, haven't gone to waste. We hope that more commuters will get involved and help the remaining members of A.C.S. to run the organization. It is up to you the commuters to get involved by either running for an office or to just do more in the organization than just attend a meeting every now and then. Get involved in the A.C.S. and help to make commuters needs be heard and this group to become a more integral part of campus life.

Clothing Drive

"TO LIVE IN JOY AND SERVICE TO OTHERS IN SPITE OF PERSISTENT OPPRESSION IS THE ONLY LIFE WORTH LIVING. WHEN WE BELIEVE THAT WE ARE OUR BROTHER'S KEEPERS THEN WE MUST LEAVE NO STONE UNTURNED TO HELP LEAD OTHERS TO THE PATH OF CHRIST."

Their faces are everywhere — in all our large cities, in every small town, at every crossroads truck stop. Yet somehow most of us never see them — these faces of the poor. We ignore them as if they don't exist unless and until they break out in some terrible act of violence in protest against their fate.

The affluent in the Third World aren't so "fortunate." Poverty is so pervasive that there is no way to avoid the poor. As the Bishops of Latin America pointed out at their Puebla meeting last year, "the situation of inhuman poverty in which millions of Latin Americans live" is "the most devastating and humiliating scourge."

This poverty is the result of economic, social and political situations which Pope John Paul II pointed out in his address to them that there are "links of interdependence not only within the nations but also outside them, on the world level."

The mandate is NOW!!!! Here at Villanova University the Association of Commuter Students is undertaking the task of responding to the needs of the poor in Latin America by having a Clothing Drive. The clothing (summer only) will be given to the Augustinian Missions in Chulucanas, Peru. The Clothing Drive will be held during the week of March 24th to the 28th in which boxes will be available in Dougherty, Mendel, and Bartley Hall Cafeterias.

There is no doubt that any solution to the "most devastating and humiliating scourge" of inhuman poverty for so many of the family of man must involve us. Somehow we must learn to care enough to share.

RSA

RSA Elections

By DON KRAFT

It's now official, the executive committee for 1980-81 has been elected and eagerly awaits its installation in office as we, the current officers, quietly step down. I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate them on their victories and also to wish them the best of luck in the coming year! This note however is directed not toward the new but the old; the executive committee, hall presidents and area reps who have constituted the RSA this year. I'd like to take this one last chance to comment on the year and experience currently drawing to a close.

The year began amid high hopes and some confusion as we held the dorm elections and began to recruit new members. While recruitment didn't go as well as it could have I was and still am very impressed by and pleased to work with this year's hall presidents. As the year progressed we grew into a smoothly functioning organization, certainly not trouble free but constantly growing stronger and of more use to the residents. Some of the highlights of the year have been "Mr. Villanova," the St. Patrick's Day trip to New York, coffee and doughnuts, movies, dorm socials, the re-establishment of the judicial board system, working with the administration to improve security (lights on the Simpson/O'Dwyer path), parking (for St. Mary's residents) and food services (extended hours) as well as our part in the Student Governing Organization and our representation on committees (alcohol policy and student organization budgets) serving the needs of the residents. We also have much still to come between now and May (picnics and an outdoor concert among other things).

This year has been a fantastic experience for me personally and (I hope) a good one for the organization as well. I would like to thank all the people involved with the RSA for making it the year it has been, for giving of themselves to support something they believe in — a student voice consisting of the students. I only hope that in some way I've proved myself worthy of the support and encouragement I've received by making some positive contribution to the RSA and the residents.

Once again, good luck next year, thanks for this year and get involved while you can!

Retrospect

BY THE RSA EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

In the spring old organization heads leave office and the new take the reins. The year is looked back upon with many thoughts and reactions ranging from a sense of relief and freedom from responsibility to one of great pride and accomplishment about the events well planned and the new friendships formed. It is also a time for thanking those who have worked tirelessly and at times, thanklessly to ensure that the goals of the organization have been met. Since Don has already thanked most of the people who worked with us this year, there is only one who has not been mentioned — Don himself.

To the person who kept his cool when the rest of us were in an uproar; who always managed to inject a bit of humor when the situation looked bleak; who kept us in line when we "were out of order"; who truly listened to us when we made suggestions or comments no matter how stupid they were; who attended all meetings and committees set up by other organizations and members of the administration in order that the RSA might have a voice in student governing at VU; who became a real friend to all of us; but most of all, to the person who worked long and hard to represent all resident students and ensure that the RSA would realize its potential — that of a viable organization representing resident needs and wants at VU we, the outgoing members of the Executive Committee, would like to express our heartfelt thanks and best wishes for whatever you do in the future. It's been a great year! Hopefully the next one can only get better.

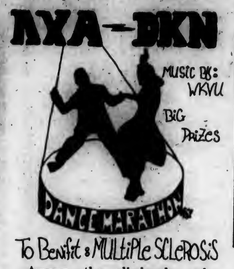
Dance Marathon

By BOB COUREY

The Greek organizations, LXA and DKN, co-sponsored a dance marathon on March 21-22. The proceeds from the 21-hour dance-a-thon went to benefit the Multiple Sclerosis Society.

This was the third year that LXA sponsored the activity. It was the first year for DKN to participate in the sponsorship. Tom Critelli, LXA and Jean Connolly, DKN, were the co-organizers of the marathon. The organizations expect to collect between $900 and $1000 for Multiple Sclerosis.

The dance lasted from 7:00 p.m. Friday night till 4:00 p.m. Saturday afternoon. Approximately 50 dancers participated in the activity, along with a number of spectators. WKVU provided the non-stop music free of charge.



To Benefit • Multiple Sclerosis

Among the die-hards, who danced for most of the 21 hours, were Carol Boyle, Karen Coleman, Diane D'Ascenzo, Lynda Frederick, Michelle Galdieri, James Guynes, Mark Handley, Kathleen Kerns, Jeanne King and Jim Russel.

There were a number of prizes awarded to the best and longest lasting dancers. First prize was 10% of the income from the marathon. A number of other prizes ranged from dinners for 2 to various gift certificates.

Tom Critelli commented, "This is the best marathon that we've had so far. Everyone really had a great time."

Athletes Named to V.U. Varsity Club Hall of Fame

By ROBERT J. CAPONE
Alumni Director

Nine athletes in five sports have been named to Villanova University's Varsity Club Hall of Fame. Club President, Charles Johnson, announced that the athletes will be inducted at a dinner Saturday, March 29 at the St. Davids Inn, St. Davids, Pa.

Selected for the Hall were: the late Michael Basca, '41; Solomon (Sol) Berman, '32, tennis captain; Anthony Stopper, '38, and Joseph Rogers, Sr., '50, both outstanding football backs; Hubert White, '62, ex-basketball captain; Donald Bragg, '57, and Edward Collymore, '59, track, and Richard McDonough, III, Esq., '64.

The nine will join 26 already enshrined in the Wildcat Hall of Fame since it was established in 1974. All nine had illustrious sports careers on the Main Line campus.

Basca, a native of Phoenixville, Pa., was an outstanding athlete in both football and baseball. He earned MVP in the Blue Gray game in 1940.

Basca played the 1941 season with the Philadelphia Eagles and kicked two extra points in the Dec. 7 game with the Redskins. Little more than two months later, he was drafted and later lost his life with General Patton's division in France.

Pessillano, a native of New Kensington, Pa., captained Villanova's first unbeaten football team as a defensive tackle. He was also a member of the track team. He is a graduate of Temple University School of Medicine.

Stopper came out of Williamsport, Pa., to become one of Villanova's stars as a halfback and punter in the Clipper Smith era. He earned MVP College All-Star game in 1938.

Rogers came out of Philadelphia's Roman Catholic High School to become an outstanding back under Jordan Oliver. He ranks sixth among Wildcat ground gainers.

Berman was the number 1 player on the Wildcat squad for 4 years and had a 24-5 record. He received Villanova's Loyalty Award in 1972.

White was captain of the 1961-2 basketball team and finished with 1608 points (20.6 game average) and played on both NIT and NCAA teams. He was also a triple jumper in track. He later played pro ball with the Philadelphia 76ers, San Francisco Warriors of the NBA, Miami Floridians and Pittsburgh Condor of the ABA.

Collymore is a native of Cambridge, Mass., who held both NCAA and IC4A sprint records. He equaled the world 60-yard record on Feb. 8, 1958 and that year ran the fastest 220 in the country.

Bragg won the gold medal in the pole vault in the 1960 Olympic games held in Rome. He won letters in track, football and basketball at Villanova. He also held world indoor and outdoor record in the pole vaults.

McDonough ranks as the outstanding performer in Villanova's long swimming history. He was named All-American ten times and established a world record for the 100-meter freestyle in 1963. He swam in the Pan-Am games in Peru.

Varsity Men and Women's Swim Banquet, sponsored by the Villanova Club of Westchester County, NY, is to be held on Friday, March 28 at the Larchmont Swim Club.

Varsity Club Hall of Fame will induct nine former athletes into the Athletic Hall of Fame at the St. Davids' Inn, St. Davids, PA, on Saturday, March 29 at 7:00 p.m.

Varsity Basketball Banquet, sponsored by the Villanova Club of South Jersey, will be held at the Connelly Center, April 21, 1980.

Women's Athletic Banquet, sponsored by the Villanova Club of Delaware County, will be held at the St. David's Inn, St. Davids, PA, on Wednesday, April 23, 1980.

For more information concerning the Banquets, please contact the Alumni Office in Austin Hall.

"Little Darlings" Grow Up

By [illegible]

Little Darlings, a delightfully corny movie about two 15-year-old girls' discovery of love, mutual friendship and the true meaning of womanhood through a season at summer camp.

The two girls are both spunky and unconventional. They come from diametrically opposed backgrounds and see the other as a threat to their respective defenses. Their animosity immediately creates a frolic of a first fight and a sense of fun.

Ferris, played by Tatum O'Neil, is a pretty, intelligent, wealthy girl of fifteen. She has been well educated, has travelled extensively and has lived for three years in Paris. She is looking forward to camp, yet she is terrified that she will be ostracized for being the "rich kid."

She arrives late at the bus depot, in the family Rolls-Royce, wearing a white pants suit and trendy white cap. Immediately her premonitions of doom come true, for she is labled as "tacky." Ferris particularly antagonizes and frightens a poor, tough streetwise girl called Angel Bright. Angel, played by Kristy McNichol, is terrified of being branded as a poverty case. She keeps her sense of cool through chain smoking and an unceasing array of vulgar expletives.

Their animosity is nurtured by an obnoxious, super-sophisticated 15-year-old model called Cinder, played by Krista Errickson, into an unusual contest. She intimidates the two girls into competing over who can lose their virginity first.

The contest is extremely corny, but surprisingly it works. It creates some hilarious situations. Such as a food fight that makes John Belushi in Animal House look like an amateur. There are also some priceless scenes where these two girls pathetically attempt to seduce the man of their choice. These attempts succeed in being terrifically funny while showing the bittersweet aspect of growing up in a modern society.

Little Darlings is a fun film that is strangely like a sophisticated version of the old Annette Funicello flicks. It will appeal to those with chronic spring fever who enjoy light, summery entertainment.

Tatum O'Neill and Kristy McNichol in "Little Darlings."

BOOKS

Possum Living

By STEVE COMBS

The idea that you have to work for somebody else in order to earn enough money to have time for yourself has always been repugnant to me. But I never saw much of an alternative to being a dues-paying member of society.

In Possum Living Dolly Freed tells how she and her father have been "living off the land without a job and almost no money" for the last four years. Now that's more like it.

Of course being a Possum means giving up a lot (money) in order to get a lot (self-sufficiency, freedom). But if you don't mind raising your own rabbits and chickens, or growing your own vegetables, then working for yourself might be a good idea.

Some things Possums don't do include; paying taxes, accepting charity, or destroying the environment.

It is said that the best things in life are free. Well, the cost of making a fifth of 100 proof moonshine is 43 cents and that's about as close to free as you can get. Dolly explains the moonshining process (simple) and gives tips on equipment and techniques.

Other chapters describe skinning and cooking procedures for everything from carp to cats. According to Dolly, "Cat is tough and tastes like mutton. There is an unpleasant odor when you skin one. We wouldn't kill a kitty but they do get hit by cars."

O.K., maybe that's a little repulsive, but shooting a rabbit, skinning it, making sausage out of the blood and brains, then roasting the hindquarters for dinner is much more appealing to me than sitting in an office while some bow-tie with a mouth tells me about my "attitude problem."

There are also chapters on health, housing, and law. The main idea behind Possum law is being right. As long as you're in the right, all you must do is get your opponent's attention so that he sees you're right. Getting someone's attention need not be violent but if all else fails it need not be passive either.

For the accountants in the audience, Dolly and her father spent $1,500 for their first year. That's not much and it doesn't take much work to get it. If absolutely necessary, a Possum can even work odd jobs in wintertime when the fishing is slow but as soon as springtime comes, goodbye.

As Dolly says, "Now that you know what a lazy, rotten, sinful thing I am, I'd like to pass on to you some of the ideas we've picked up to help you become just the same."

Sleuth: Clever Plotting And Dialogue

Stanley Oliver as Andrew Wyke and Tom Teti as Milo Tindle in the People's Light and Theater Company's production of "Sleuth."

By MARIANNE LAVELLE

Anthony Shaffer's Sleuth, now being performed at the People's Light and Theatre Co. in Malvern, is a play consisting of clever twists of plot and phrase.

It consists of only two characters, and a commanding setting which reflects the occupation of the two "games-playing people": detective story author Andrew Wyke, and his wife's suitor, Mile Tindle.

"So you want to marry my wife?," Wyke asks Tindle, who visits him for what turns out to be a night of games in which the ultimate stakes are death. Wyke's room is furnished with a billiard table, on one side, a dart board on the opposite wall, a chest full of costumes, and in the center of the room, his typewriter, where he fashions the exploits of his character detective: Inspector St. John Merrydo. Writing detective stories is the game of which Wyke is particularly fond.

But Wyke's favorite game, it soon becomes evident, is transforming "Detective Fiction" into "Detective Fact." Wyke wants to play his sleuth games with Tindle as one of the characters. He has Tindle dress in costume and act out a mysterious burglery which leads him to face what seems to be imminent death.

Unfortunately for Wyke, Tindle had learned some games of his own. "I feel myself tempered by madness," says Tindle. "For the first time in my life, I feel totally without responsibility."

The twists of dialogue are as important as the twists of plot in this play, and the actors could make or break this play. British-born Stanley Oliver is perfect in the role of Wyke, as he lapses into imitations of cockney-Britainers, American salesman, and Wyke's character St. John Merrydo.

Tom Teti, who has played such characters as Lenny Bruce, Tesman in Hedda Gabler, and Tybalt in Romeo and Juliet for the People's Light and Theatre, seems at first too stilted as Tindle. But one comes to realize that his stiffness may be due to the fact that Tindle, the businessman, the travel agent, is seen in contrast to the flamboyant artist, Wyke. The questions to be answered at the end is which one was the better gamesplayer?

Finally, the lighting and direction make Sleuth a success. The play opens in darkness; the only sound is Wyke's typewriter. Then, with each chime of the grandfather clock, the stage gradually lights. The play ends strikingly with the throbbing lights of police cars, and the laughing of one of Wyke's toys.

Not Just For Colored Girls

By EILEEN CUNIFFEE

Seven brightly-clad, very talented ladies brought the stage of the Shubert Theater to life on Tuesday, March 25, as they danced and spoke and felt their way through Ntozake Shange's intense "choreopoem," "For Colored Girls Who Have Considered Suicide When the Rainbow is Enuf."

The actresses are members of the Philadelphia-based Avante Theater Company, which recently returned from a tour of twelve cities with the show. John Grugliano, founder and Artistic Director of Avante, graduated from Villanova in 1972 and has been studying, performing, teaching, and directing drama for several years. He is directing the current production of "For Colored Girls," and is also responsible for the excellent choreography.

"For Colored Girls" was written to "sing a black girl's song, to sing the song of her possibilities," and it does so through a series of powerful poems, recited alternately by the seven actresses, which touch upon pieces of experience common to many black women in American society. The titles are as varied as "graduation nite," "latent rapists," and "somebody almost run off wit alla my stuff," yet the underlying message remains the same: the women on the stage are there to explore, at times to protest, and finally to celebrate what it is to be a woman and to be black.

Often throughout the play the words seem bitter and the outlooks seem hopeless. One poem states "i used to live in the world, but then i moved to harlem;" four others are entitled "no more love poems" — and they tell us why; "a nite with beau willie brown" (beautifully performed by Maxine Dillard) tells the story of one woman's fight to protect herself and her children from the man she loves.

Yet along with the bitterness there is always a touch of insightful humor, and always the consolation of knowing that the women are sympathetic to and supportive of each other. The final message of "For Colored Girls" is one of hope — hope on top of the many hurts and compromises which have been revealed, hope that there is enough strength and love inside to keep trying.

"For Colored Girls" will be at the Shubert Theater through March 31.

New In Sound

Pat Travers

Crash and Burn

By STEVE COMBS

This album has a schizophrenic quality to it. Side one is the sort of rock and roll that causes large cracks to appear in the earth's surface and boulders to fall from the sky. Deep rooted power surges through each thundering lick. Side two, however, shows all the authority and ability obvious on side one but it won't give your girlfriend a headache or cause your mother to start running the vacuum.

Starting things off, the title track is reminiscent of Robin Trower's In City Dreams lp. Yet the Travers band manages to put a fistful of forcefulness into that lonesome, wandering sound.

"Snortin' Whiskey" pounds along into an energetic aural onslaught that crushes all in its path with clean shots of vibrant rhythm. Amidst the rubble, "Born Under a Bad Sign" sends up a chorus of wailing, relentless guitar.

Bob Marley's "Is This Love" starts the flip side off. This tune just doesn't seem to have any direction, it sounds like two or three musical moods spliced together with little to bridge them. But you can just skip that track and go directly to "The Big Event." This instrumental deftly slides through odd harmonies without losing direction or becoming boring. Rather, it changes speed and course like a river, riding a current of swirling motion.

"Material Eyes" closes out the album in superb metophysical fashion. The strength of the first side returns with a final blast of flailing tones.

The only detraction from this album's sound seems to be a lack of unity between songs. Especially on side two, there is a need for an overriding musical vision as cohesive force to put the talent and power of the band together. If the Pat Travers Band comes up with that, look out.

Ramones

End of the Century

By MAURICE KELLY

What makes this Ramones album different from all the others? One man. Phil Spector. The man who served as the studio brains for the Beatles and the Ronettes now brings his famous "Spector Wall of Sound" to the Ramones. And guess what? In spite of all of the critics who said that mixing the talents of Spector and of the Ramones would be the musical equivalent of mixing water and vinegar, the combination clicked. As a result, End of the Century is perhaps the most progressive Ramones album to date. The band does not compromise any of the traits that have made them the long-standing favorites of Villanovans for Ronald Reagan. Yes, the Ramones can still play straight, narrow, simplistic rock and roll. Among the best cuts on the album are "Danny Says" and "I Can't Make it on Time." On these tracks Spector has deftly taken the guitar of Johnny Ramone and even more importantly, the unique vocals of Joey Ramone, and he has succeeded in presenting their styles in such a manner that no other producer has ever been able to do for the band. The only painful listening moment occurs during a bad remake of the Ronettes' "Baby I Love You." Face it. String arrangements do not belong on any Ramones album. Leave that insipid garbage to hard core disco producers.

This may not be the Ramones' best album to some, but it is not a bad effort at all. By using Phil Spector, the Ramones are definitely trying to broaden their appeal. This album may just do that.

HEROES ABOUND IN SPORTS

By PATRICK FLYNN

Last Saturday, Iowa and Purdue each lost basketball games and saw their respective seasons ended.

On Monday, UCLA lost a basketball game and saw its season ended.

But in-between, far from the glamor of the Final Four, away from the roar of the crowd, shielded from the television cameras, way out in upstate New York, Phil Scaffidi lost a bigger battle. He saw his life ended.

Scaffidi gained national notoriety this past season as captain of the Niagara University basketball team, not through any particular actions that he performed on the court, but because of his very presence on it. Struggling against leukemia, Scaffidi came back from massive surgery and a year away from the school and basketball to take the court again, armed with braces, bandages and a heart as big as The Falls that bear his school's name in an attempt to become Niagara's all-time assist leader. He won that battle. He'll be remembered for that.

Scaffidi's coach, Dan Raskin, reacted to the news by saying, "If my son could grow up to be Phil Scaffidi, I'd be a very happy man."

Now let's move to a warmer climate. Spring training comes and goes every year, loaded with unbridled optimism in all camps. It's a chance to dream about ambitions fulfilled, that shot at the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow. A chance for ballplayers to shake off the cobwebs of a long winter on the banquet circuit and relish the life of being a pro.

Darrell Porter walked away from all of that.

Porter, the starting catcher for the Kansas City Royals and an all-star performer as well, left camp earlier this month for unexplained reasons. This week, Porter's father revealed that Darrell is undergoing treatment for alcohol abuse. He won't return to the Royals until after opening day.

It's not the easy way out. Porter could have waited until another off-season to make his move. But he couldn't hide from the problem any more. His courage is amazing.

"Even if I never play another game of baseball," he told his father, "at least I'll be at peace with myself."

Now let's slip back to Indianapolis, where the other team, Louisville, is celebrating its NCAA basketball championship. For All-American guard Darrell Griffith it's a chance to revel in the glory of a life-long dream, to look forward to a glittering future in pro ball. But, more than that, it was a chance for Griffith to give a gift to a friend. Jerry Stringer, the manager of Griffith's high school team, is struggling against cancer. Griffith dedicated this tournament to Stringer. "It's the third quarter and he's losing," says Griffith. The senior superstar may not have been able to guarantee his friend an overtime period, but at least he gave him a time-out to enjoy.

As we plunge head-on into the 1980's, the prospects of finding heroes are not promising. Politicians continue to prove themselves unworthy of such reverence. The glory days of movie stars and war heroes are gone forever. At times we seem doomed to face the stark reality of our existence without a heart-warming beacon to make things brighter.

It's comforting to know that you can still look in the sports pages. Because buried under all the box scores, hidden behind all the standings, obliterated by legal rampages, strikes and scandals, you can still find heroes there.

Mary Hogan Shines as SYNCHRO SWIMMING STAR

by KYLE GOTHNER

In its first year as a varsity sport the women's synchronized swimming team has an optimistic outlook for the future. One of the prime reasons for the hopeful attitude is Mary Hogan. Mary Hogan has done so well in swimming that she has become an inspiration to younger swimmers.

Hogan is a senior economics major from Glens Falls, New York who began her swimming career when she was nine wanting to "start something different." Through her sophomore year in high school Hogan swam for the Coquins Swim Club in AAU meets.

During her freshman year at Villanova, she swam for the team which was, at the time, virtually nothing. Four or five girls competed primarily on the club level and Hogan was the only one with experience. By her sophomore year here the team had developed a great deal and competed in the Nationals, the Regionals and the States.

Senior Runners Meet Carter

By JERRY VENTRESCA

"You are invited to join the President of the United States at a meeting on the Afghanistan crisis and its relation to the Summer Olympic Games. The meeting will be held on Friday, March 21, 1980 in the East Room of the White House."

Three copies of the above mailgram were received by Villanova runners Keith Brown, Don Paige and Carey Pinkowski. Approximately 70 other Olympic hopefuls attended the meeting which featured speeches by President Carter, Zbigniew Brzezinski, assistant to the President for National Security Affairs and Lloyd Cutler, Counsel to the President.

Brzezinski, the initial speaker, spoke for approximately 20 minutes and related the boycott of The Games by the U.S. to the Russian's military involvement in Aghanistan. Both Brown and Pinkowski were very impressed with Brzezinski's responses to questions from the audience. According to Brown, "Brzezinski was excellent, giving a geographic view of Russia's acts and the possible danger it could lead to." "The symbolic nature of going to Moscow in 1980," added Brown as he summarized Brzezinski's speech, "represents our compliance that the Soviets are correct in their political adventure."

Pinkowski agreed with his fellow teammate that Brzezinski's speech provided "concise information about Russia's military objective" and the Americans' best move would be to boycott The Games.

Following Brzezinski, Lloyd Cutler spoke briefly, before being interrupted by the announcement that President Carter was about to enter the room. "I didn't like him (Cutler) because many questions posed to him from the audience were never clearly answered," said Brown.

Finally, the President came before the crowd and spoke for 20 minutes, then answered only three questions. Carter's comments were basically the same as Brzezinski's but what highlighted his oration was a question posed to him by an athlete.

According to Brown, "One guy got up and said, 'You haven't come to our aid (in terms of financial support), so why should we back you on your political stand?' Carter seemed touched and bothered but kept his cool." Carter's response was similar to a Brzezinski response earlier that the United States must act unitedly in believing what is right.

"That was a very foolish question;" said Pinkowski, "living in this country we have it better than anyone else." "I totally support the boycott; the scarifice is worth it," concluded Pinkowski.

Likewise, Keith Brown favors a boycott, as he always has. However Brown noted, "I was appalled at the lack of respect of the athletes toward the President, not clapping when he entered the room."

Following the speeches and a reception, a majority of the athletes voted 44-29 in favor of participating in Moscow.

Senior Don Paige was unavailable for comment.

Hogan and her duet partner, Laura Proske, placed first in the States and second in the Regionals. In her junior year, Hogan received more medals than ever. The States were held at Penn State University and she and Laura Proske took first place in the duet. The Regionals were held at Radnor Pool and Hogan and Proske took second in the duet and together with Susan Giordano took first in the trio. Last year the Nationals were held near Albany and Hogan and Susan Giordano placed sixth in the duet.

Now in her last year at Villanova, she is preparing for her final competition. She has maintained her winning style again this year. She and Susan Giordano placed first in the duet at the State meet this year, and would have probably placed first in the Regionals as well but they were snowed in. Hogan hopes that she and Susan Giordano can place fifth or sixth in the duets, as well as the solos, at the Nationals this week. The top three places are expected to be taken by girls from Arizona, Ohio State and University of Michigan, all of which have scholarship teams and recruit girls to swim.

The team faces many problems, especially the lack of experience and the lack of coaching help. Most of the girls that begin swimming all start at different levels and need to be taught everything which is too much work for one coach. Even with its problems, Hogan says the program is "a really good one, more people should look into it."

Mary Hogan

After her graduation Hogan would like to remain involved in swimming, especially if it becomes an Olympic sport. She has been corresponding with Bob Iger of NBC Sports, and thru him she feels that synchronized swimming will almost certainly become an Olympic sport by 1984. She will be 25 in 1984 and will be too old to compete, but she said that she would "love to be involved in another capacity, maybe publicity, informing the people."

Villanova Runs the Distance

By KERRY LYNCH

The sun was shining brightly and there was a moderate wind on Sunday, March 23 when the first Villanova Distance Classic was run. The course, pending final sanction by the A.A.U., is a scenic yet hilly 10 kilometers (6.2 miles). Held to benefit the local chapter of the American Cancer Society, the race was sponsored by Brooks and Rosemont Athlete's Foot. Eddie Kosak, a Villanova student, was the race director.

Most of the 216 runners were clad in the sharp navy blue and white race T-shirts which were given them at registration. The start, on Ithan Avenue, was signaled by a cannon shortly after 10:00 a.m.

It seemed as if the race had just begun when Jim Allahand, wearing No. 32, appeared in front of Good Counsel with no one else in sight. He ran across the finish line to win in 31:04, thus establishing a course record.

The next two finishers ran within 13 seconds of each other but were over one minute behind the victor. M. Hayden took 2nd place and Terry Delaney of the Youth Division placed 3rd overall.

Brigid Leddy was the first woman finisher by a wide margin. Leddy, of the Villanova womens track team, completed the course in a blistering 37:54.

Beverly Reilly and Katherine McManus, both of the Youth Division, placed second and third respectively among the women.

The Villanova Distance Classic was a success from several viewpoints. Over 250 registered runners of varying ability were able to enjoy the course and the company of other runners while helping the race committee donate $600 to Cancer Society. It also gave members of the community, runners and officials alike, a chance to interact with students and faculty from Villanova.

Tracksters Acclaimed by Track and Field News

By MELISSA ARAYA

"Which 4-year school climbed highest on the ladder of collegiate track and field success during the Seventies?" Bert Nelson, editor of Track and Field News, recently posed this question and wound up ranking Villanova's track program second in the nation, with University of Texas El Paso (UTEP) capturing first.

Nelson, who also founded the monthly magazine nicknamed "The Bible of the Sport," stated, "All five categories of competition are considered in determining the Best All-Around Track Program of the Seventies Award."

"The relay winner by a handsome margin is Villanova, guided by Jumbo Elliott." The Wildcats strongest category ranking was in relays, followed by NCAA Indoors (Villanova captured second at the NCAA National Indoor Championships, two weeks ago) and cross country.

Nelson emphasized Villanova's consistency during the past decade. Out of a possible 50 times per year that a team may appear in the top ten, UTEP scored 43 times, Tennessee 32 times, Southern Cal 28 and Villanova 26 times.

The UCLA Bruins, coached by Jim Bush, were the "NCAA Outdoor kings by the narrowest of margins — a mere half point over UTEP," according to the magazine.

The cross country champs were the Oregon team, under coach Bill Dellinger. The scoring is "based on the school calendar, counting 1978 x-c in the same year as 1979 track, for instance."

UCLA triumphed again in dual meet rankings, winning over UCLA and Oregon. UTEP, under the direction of Ted Banks, led the way indoors.

According to Nelson, "Overall, UTEP is outstanding, finishing first indoors, second in outdoors and cross country, fourth in dual meets and sixth in relays and winning the overall crown eight years. Only Tennessee and Washington State make the top 10 in four categories, while just Southern Cal, Oregon, Kansas, BYU and Villanova make it in there."

NADS ARE CROWNED INTRAMURAL CHAMPS

By BETH WHITE

Last Monday was a battle of basketball champions. Louisville claimed the NCAA Championship with an exciting 59-54 victory over the Bruins of UCLA.

But in the Villanova Field House, another playoff was being climaxed, another champion was being chosen. The Nads and Express climbed the intramural playoff pyramid to meet in a highly competitive and physical game.

The height and organization of The Nads carried them to a 87-75 final score, but neither team led by more than ten any time during the match.

The Nads' balanced offense was dominated in the key by Howie Long shooting forwards Peter Harrington and Jeff Sherry and guards Paul Juelis and Mike Fuoti. Sherry and Juelis broke the Express' zone by connecting consistently on 15- and 20-foot jumpers.

The Nads were handicapped early in the first half when Harrington slightly sprained his ankle. "I just came down on it wrong," Harrington explained. But he limped back onto the court and used his towering height to dominate the boards. Between Harrington and Sherry, The Express never had a chance at rebounding.

The Express did have their backcourt, though. Steve Scammer, Dave McHugh and Bill Duryea utilized the swing offense and popped for several outside jumpers of their own. Scammer's moves down the inside of the key and his pullup jump shot worked down the Nad's alternating zone and man-to-man defenses. The aggressive play of Chip Garry and Mike Boyle kept the Express in close range of the Nads.

The key to the game for the Nads was their accuracy from the free-throw line. Sherry and Juelis were near perfect in converting their attempts from the stripe. "This isn't basketball, this is a foul shooting contest," remarked one of the spectators.

"It was a good tournament. We played some really good teams; The Rags, The Assembly and DTD," commented The Nads. "We were underdogs throughout the whole tournament."

Cats Debut with Triple Victories

By ED McASSEY

Coach Larry Shane's baseball team opened their season last week with three wins while three other games were postponed due to rain. The "diamond squad" downed Swarthmore (25-3), Towson State (6-2) and Dartmouth. They have already embarked on a ten straight game stand.

"One key point is the performance of our freshmen infielders. (Don Casey 2nd base, Mike Craig shortstop, and Bob Whiteman 3rd base). They really got the hang of things much faster than we expected," remarks Co-captain Steve Skammer. "They've looked good not only defensively but have also been hitting well." Casey has been batting close to .500%.

As was the case last year, everyone has been hitting well in this early phase of the 30-game season. Bill Duryea had a grand slam home run in the Swarthmore contest. Bob Loscalzo and Dave McHugh have also been connecting in the first three contests as the duo went four for four in the Swarthmore romp.

Another bright spot has been the pitching performance. Freshman Charles McDermott got the win in the Swarthmore game after replacing Steve Skammer on the mound. Senior southpaw Ed Szmanski earned the win against Towson while Skammer went nine innings for the Dartmouth win. Tom Harrison, Bob Loscalzo and Bill Duryea all look good in the outfield.

"These next two weeks will be the key indicator of what type of season we're going to have. Our new pitchers are going to have to start. Also ten straight games will be tough," states Skammer. While rain has cancelled three games, it can be of some assistance in providing a day off during the ten game stand.

The Cat's will host Trenton State on Saturday and LaSalle on Sunday. Then it's off to Glassboro State (last year's Division III champs) on Monday. On Tuesday, Shane's squad will meet St. Joseph's at home and travel to Navy on Wednesday and Catholic University on Thursday. "All of these teams (LaSalle through Catholic U) are tough ones. We're going to have to keep hitting and our pitching well to be successful," offers Skammer. Last year the Cats finished 17-9.

Awards Spark Activity

By KATHLEEN STICKEL

Engraved pewter mugs will be awarded to each campus-wide champion of each event in the Resident Halls Olympics while each dorm champion will receive a ceramic mug when the events are all completed.

Assistant Dean of Men Tony Martin feels that the mugs will be more appealing to college students than a trophy that would just gather dust. Olympic shirts have also been purchased to award to the winning areas.

Martin praises the popularity of the five or six year-old resident basketball league and feels that through the Olympics, more underclassmen have been encouraged to join the league. Recognizing the value of team play, Martin would also like to stress the individual recognition that one may gain through these competitive events. "We're trying to identify the individual, and give him the recognition in the area of his skill," commented Martin.

Martin recognizes there have been problems with the program. It relied heavily on individuals willing to extend themselves to act as go-betweens and organizers beside initiating an interest that was shown in most of the events as was apparent by the turnouts. Two hundred students participated in the backgammon competition, about 450 men joined the basketball, 180 played pool and 23 teams were added to the intramural softball league. Martin added, "I don't like the elimination aspect of the intramural competition but for practical purposes of limited fields and daylight hours we can't create a separate league."

Points are awarded to each area for team entry, participation and victory. "We recognize participation and winning. Through the point system we emphasize a difference in winning — but just a small difference. We'd like to see more people involved with what they want to do," expressed Martin.

Basketball playoffs are already under way with inter-dorm playoffs for backgammon and foul shooting beginning soon. The pool, volleyball, ping-pong and softball competitions will start soon, with hopes of including swimming and track.

Amoroso Wins Presidency

By BILL CLARK

In an election which was almost discounted due to improper election procedures, Henry Amoroso defeated Dino Valente for the office of SGA President by a count of 1092-597 in the SGA elections held on March 27.

Henry Amoroso, the new SGA President

The controversy was the result of a protest filed with the SGA Elections Committee by Kevin Burke, Dino Valente's campaign manager. The protest centered upon three areas; 1) "the polls in The Garey School of Law did not open until somewhere between 1:20 p.m. and 1:40 p.m.;" 2) "The polls in the basement of Mendel did not open until after 9:30 a.m.," and 3) "The polls used for Engineering, in Tolentine, were closed for an unknown time during lunch." The polls were scheduled to open at 8:00 a.m.

Henry Amoroso, SGA, President-elect, said that "both Dino and I were read the complaints that were filed with the Election Commission and were informed that the election results were invalid. It was really a big surprise."

Amoroso continued by saying that "Dino wanted to hear the results of the election because it could help influence his decision about withdrawing the election protest. Apparently, they thought the results must have been close."

The official protest filed with the SGA also reflects the fact that the Valente campaign was concerned about a close election. "These areas (The Law School, Science, and Engineering Schools), all of them, were our strongholds. Much of the vote that we were counting on was to come from these stations. In essence we have been robbed of these votes and of course we feel this is grossly unfair."

After careful consideration, Amoroso said, Valente decided to withdraw the complaints. "He was fair," Amoroso said, "to take into account another week of campaigning." (The Election Commission was planning another election for SGA President the following week).

In explaining the complaints, Amoroso said that apparently Valente's campaign felt that I was weak in the protested areas. Commenting in this regard, the official protest states " . . . we would like to note that our opponent, Henry Amoroso, did not campaign at any of the locations cited in our list of infractions. Because of this fact and others our differential advantage at these places and on these voters was substantial."

Incidentally, of the votes that were counted in the disputed areas, Valente defeated Amoroso in the Law School by 42-10, but Amoroso defeated Valente in Science by 107-64 and in Engineering by 58-55.

The races for University Senate seats were marked by several close results. The three Arts seats were won by Kevin O'Leary (237 votes), Kim Kingsland (229) and Wayne Remai (229). Bobbie Pietropola (217) trailed in fourth place.

For the two seats open to Commerce and Finance on the University Senate, the winners were Lou Casari (406 votes) and Rich Carnali (260). Peter Cieszko (258) trailed in third place.

The sole Science seat was won by Mary Prah (96) over Michael Patti (68). The Nursing seat was won by Ivy Tischler (134) over Amy Incorvaria (26) and the Engineering seat was won by John Sweet, who was uncontested.

Commenting about his plans for next year, Henry Amoroso said that he plans to work "for the reorganization of the Student Government Organization. I am unhappy with the proposed reorganization ahd hopefully we can come up with some new possibilities."

"I also hope to work toward improving communication with the Board of Trustees," said Amoroso. "Perhaps there can be a standing committee with students to accomplish this."

Faculty Union Withdraws Petition

By FRANK J. DOHERTY

The executive committee of the Villanova chapter of the American Association of University Professors have withdrawn the petition for a collective bargaining election which has been filed with the National Labor Relations Board.

This action cancelled the pre-election hearings which were scheduled for March 31.

The petition was withdrawn without predjudice, and may be renewed at any time.

In explaining the move, the executive committee stated that lengthy hearings, along with subsequent appeals, might prevent any elections for years.

Dr. Manuel Avila of the executive committee said, "The recent Yeshiva decision was the main factor in the withdrawal of the petition." "It is unclear where we sit," Avila said. "We haven't given up."

The Yeshiva University decision of the Supreme Court determined that the National Labor Relations Act does not apply to the "typical mature private university" where faculty members are "managerial."

The national AAUP, along with the American Federation of Teachers and the National Education Association are undertaking efforts to amend the National Labor Relations Act in order to clear up the Yeshiva complications long before they can be clarified judicially.

Dr. William J. Rice of the Villanova AAUP executive committee said that the withdrawal of the petition "puts us back where we were before the petition was filed in January."

Rice said, "If we went to hearings at this time, it would involve considerable expense to both the university and the chapter."

Rice stated that the Yeshiva decision has made the law unclear and said, "The net result is hard to predict."

Dr. Theodore J. Kondoleon, member of the executive committee, explained that the national office of the AAUP felt it would be better to pursue other legal cases that would produce precedents that would clarify the Yeshiva decision and benefit the Villanova faculty.

Papal Cross Erected for Campus Religious Service

By JERRY DOUGHERTY

The cross which stood on Logan Circle during last October's Papal Mass in Philadelphia was brought to Austin Field last week for an Easter Sunday service.

Rising 37 feet high, the white cross was transported from a local warehouse to Villanova by means of a 66-foot-long tractor-trailer. A helicopter hoisted the cross into place on Austin Field, where a cement-encased steel pipe had been placed in the ground.

Dean W. Roach, owner of the St. Davids Inn, lent the cross to the University for the service. Roach purchased the cross from the City of Philadelphia, which constructed it for last October's Mass.

The Easter week viewing, the recent trip of Pope John Paul II to Philadelphia was used as a backdrop by helicopter to Villanova for its Easter service.

The idea for holding an Easter service on Austin Field "originated a couple of months ago," according to Rev. Michael Glessner, O.S.A., director of campus ministry. "Mr. Roach was looking for a place to put it (the cross) up for people to see." Roach has been active in University affairs, and this led him to choose Villanova as a location for putting the cross on display, Glessner said.

The Easter service, which was organized by the campus ministry and Glessner, had as its theme "A Message of Hope in Troubled Times."

In order to bring attention to the American hostages being held in Iran, 50 red roses were placed at the foot of the cross during the service.

An ecumenical character marked the service, with representatives from several Christian denominations in attendance.

GRE

Nearly 40,000 students throughout the world who took the Graduate Record Aptitude Test on Jan. 12 can now obtain a copy of the questions used in that test and a list of the correct answers.

Although sample tests have been available for many years, this is the first time that the questions and answers of the GRE have been disclosed immediately following a national test administration.

The Graduate Record Examination Board, which sponsors the test, today (March 15) released a 40-page booklet containing the questions that were counted toward the actual scores, a list of correct answers, instructions for obtaining "raw" scores and a table for finding scaled scores reported for the test. The booklet also includes a description of the test and explanations of the kinds of questions asked.

To date, less than 250 individuals from across the nation have ordered the materials. Order forms for the booklet and answer sheet were mailed to all test-takers with their score reports in early February.

The booklet costs $2 per copy ($3.75 if sent to addresses in countries other than the United States, Puerto Rico, Canada or Mexico). For $3.50, examinees in the United States and Puerto Rico can obtain a photocopy of their answer sheet.

Complimentary copies of the test booklet are being distributed this week to graduate school deans and department heads. At the same time, ETS said it would welcome comments related to the content, validity or appropriateness of any of the test questions brought by graduate schools or their students.

Governor Scheduled to Receive Honorary Degree

By RICH McDONOUGH

Pennsylvania Governor Richard L. Thornburgh will visit the Villanova University campus on Tuesday, April 15 to receive an honorary degree and to participate in the 75th anniversary observance of the university's College of Engineering.

Governor Thornburgh's degree will be conferred during a 2:30 p.m. convocation in the Villanova Field House. The Pennsylvania chief executive will speak during the exercises.

Captain Thomas Byrne, a retired alumnus who has been serving as a volunteer administrator in the College of Engineering, will also receive an honorary degree.

A luncheon, hosted by the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., Villanova's president, will be held prior to the convication in the Connelly Center, the University's new multi-million dollar social center.

Father Driscoll will speak during the noon luncheon which will be attended by 250 invited guests, including leaders in engineering practice and education, the school's board of trustees, alumni, student leaders, faculty, donors, and representatives of area high schools.

Following the luncheon, an academic procession will proceed the convocation ceremonies.

The Main Line school was founded as a liberal arts college in 1842. By the turn of the century, however, the industrial revolution had created a demand for professionally trained engineers and Villanova responded with an educational program designed to meet that need.

Today, the College of Engineering enrolls nearly 1,000 students in its undergraduate programs alone. Graduate programs are offered in all of the undergraduate areas — mechanical, chemical, electrical, and civil engineering. Dr. Robert Lynch, himself a product of Villanova's College of Engineering, is its dean.

Governor Thornburgh, perhaps better known for his skills as a lawyer, is also an engineer.

Lindback Award Nominees Picked

Five faculty members were selected as Lindback Award nominees by vote of faculty and seniors, juniors, and sophomores in the undergraduate full time colleges, held on March 31 and April 1.

The five nominees, listed alphabetically, are Manuel Avila (Eco.), James J. Clarke (Eco), Nicholas M. Rongione (B L), Burke T. Ward (B L), and Robert E. White (Che). The two winners of the Lindback Award for distinguished teaching will be selected by the president of the University and announced at commencement exercises in May. The two awards carry cash prizes of $1000 each.

Named to the honorable mention list in this year's voting are the following faculty members: John H. Fielder, III (Phi), Arthur Furia (Acc), Frederick W. Hartmann (Mat), C. Michael Kelly (Che), Joseph L. Lucia (Eco), James E. McEwen (BA), Daniel J. O'Mara (Acc), Bernard P. Prusak (R St), Wesley E. Schwarz (BA), Bernard Shanley (R St), Kishor H. Thanawala (Eco), and James P. Tuck (Psy).

The committee in charge of the voting for nominees was comprised of members of the Blue Key society and Joseph George, Jr., of the History Department, who served as chairman.

The Christian R. and Mary F. Lindback Foundation annually makes grants available to a selected number of colleges in the Delaware Valley to encourage effective teaching on the undergraduate level. The awards have been made on an annual basis at Villanova since 1961.

RSA Officer Resigns

By BRIAN R. QUINN

On March 28 Dean Valente resigned his position as president of Stanford Hall's Resident Student Association (RSA), and appointed Kevin Burke his successor, reportedly, in response to administration pressures aimed at him which were designed to prevent the second annual radiation day party from occurring.

On that same day Valente received a letter from Associate Dean of Men Anthony Martin which presented the RSA as the "sponsor of an outdoor 'keg party' in the vicinity of Stanford Hall during the weekend of March 29 . . . and . . . that . . . you as one of the representatives of the Stanford Hall Council have been one of the prime movers of this planning." The very last line of the letter "reminded" Valente "that any violation of university policy may be met with disciplinary action."

Valente stresses that the real reason behind his resigning was not this week's election results, but rather the treatment he received from various representatives of the Dean of Men's Office. Men's Office.

"I know his resignation had nothing to do with the election results because we discussed it before the election," stated newly appointed President Burke.

"The thing that upset me the most was Tony Martin's picking upon two people, Kevin and I, while we were put in a position to do something about an occurence we were not even involved in," stated Valente.

During an RSA meeting held on Thursday the 28 members got "the general impression from Ed Gallagher that the administration was going to allow the party to occur," stated Valente. "On Friday it appeared that they would not allow the party at all."

"How could Dean and I be able to stop the party under these conditions?" said Burke.

Student Speakers To Be Selected

By DREW MERRICK

The task of deciding which students should be awarded the honor of speaking at the class of 1980's spring graduation ceremonies is presently underway.

The colleges of Arts & Sciences, Commerce and Finance, Engineering and Nursing select only one speaker and an alternate to represent their respective colleges on graduation day. This year, fifty-seven students will be competing for the four enviable positions.

The process of selecting the student speakers began during the week of February 4, when all students meeting the cumulative grade point average requirement established by the various selection committees were notified by Rev. John Deegan, O.S.A. Vice-President of Student Life. The required cumulative G.P.A. in the colleges of Arts & Sciences and Commerce and Finance is a 3.5. All Nursing and Engineering students must have at least a 3.0.

Each college is represented by a selection committee consisting of the Dean of the College, two faculty members and the two student senators. The four selection committees then viewed the resumes submitted by the interested eligible students. After noting personal qualities such as individual scholastic achievement and extra-curricular involvement, the selection committees then invited approximately one-quarter of the eligible students to participate in the student speaker competition.

The competition trials are to be held during the week of April 9. Throughout the week, each of the contestants will prepare and deliver one five minute speech. The speech will be given in front of their respective selection committees. Upon completion of the last speech, the four selection committees will submit to Deegan the winners of the competition.

From Friday, April 18 to Friday, April 25, the fraternities and sororities on campus will compete in this year's Greek week.

Carter's Anti-Inflation Budget Cuts Analyzed

By RICHARD Di STEFANO

President Carter's revised anti-inflation Federal Budget for the fiscal year 1981 forecasts receipts of $628 billion and expenditures of $611.5 billion, resulting in a surplus of $16.5 billion. This would, if carried out, be the first budget in over a decade not operating under a deficit.

Dr. Alan Donziger

According to a Wall Street Journal editorial of April 1, this budget represents a $4.3 billion decrease in spending and a $28 billion revenue increase over Carter's January estimates.

What will be the consequences of this new budget? Dr. Donziger of the Economics Department, who conducts a course here in Public Finance, offered his thoughts on the budget.

"There are three problems with President Carter's budget. The first is that since inflation is caused by excessive government spending, there should be more budget cuts than have been proposed.

"Secondly, there is the political problem. I don't think the budget will go through, since this is an election year, and it is unpopular to make cuts.

"Also, there are more immediate needs to be met. The mood of the people is that something must be done; more could be cut out of this year's budget, which is operative until October."

Donziger believes that a balanced budget is the only way to arrest inflation, although he says that a Constitutional Amendment requiring this is a measure that is too extreme.

In conclusion, Donziger stated his belief that the Federal Reserve, which regulates the monetary policy that results in today's high interest rates, needs to be complemented by measures taken in the area of fiscal policy, which is in the hands of Congress and the President.

Author Lectures on 1984

By BILL ROCK

Jeremy Rifkin, author of numerous books on the future of mankind, delivered a lecture entitled "1984 . . . Coming" in the Villanova Center room of the Connelly Center on Monday, March 31.

The lecture, sponsored by the Villanova Union, used George Orwell's novel, 1984, as a springboard for Rifkin's ideas concerning the future.

Rifkin opened the evening with the statement, "In one hour I will change the way you view the world." According to Rifkin, all of our perceptions of reality are grounded in a mechanistic view of technology and science.

"Thanks to the writings of five men — Bacon, Descartes, Newton, Locke, and Smith, you all view the world mechanically," he stated. "Nature is, in his view, a giant machine that we must harness, use, and manipulate for our own ends. The world is reduced from quality to quantity."

According to Rifkin, world conditions soon will force us, after three centuries, to form a new world view. This new understanding of reality will be based on the concept of entropy. The law of entropy holds that every time you transform energy, you transform it from a more ordered state to a less ordered state.

"Entropy is irreversible," he stated. We must do all we can to slow it down. The highest moral imperative is to use as little energy as possible and spread it as equally as possible."

Rifkin authored or coauthored four books dealing with man's future. The first, The Emerging Order, studies America's massive religious revival, centering around the Charismatic evangelical movement, which is, according to Rifkin, "Amassing a base of potential power that dwarfs every other competing interest in American society."

The second, The Entropy Law: A New World View, deals with Rifkin's insistence on using less energy. The North Will Rise Again describes the confrontation now taking place between the unions and the public sector on the one hand, and the private investment community on the other.

In the last book, Who Should Play God?", Rifkin posits that we are moving from the age of physics into the age of molecular biology, highlighted by the growth of genetic engineering technologies.

"If we are to move into an age of genetics, we must allow someone to decide what are the good genes that should continue and what are the bad genes that should be eliminated," he stated. "I, for one, am not ready for that."

Rifkin tried to end the evening on a positive note. Despite all the pessimistic trends he traced, he said it was not too late if we realized what the law of entropy meant and how we must deal with it.

Cross

Glessner estimated that 2500 persons came to the service, which began at 9 A.M. Sunday and was open to the public.

The Papal cross was to remain standing through the end of this week, when it is to be returned to storage in its warehouse.

Roach eventually hopes to have the cross rected on the grounds of St. Charles Borromeo Seminary, at the heavily traveled corner of City and Lancaster Aves.

A Sacrifice of Individual Freedom?

Should We Boycott the Olympics?

"The imperatives of a free society are far greater than the imperatives of the athletes."

Sen. Bill Bradley (D) N.J.

Senator Bradley's comments concerning the status of American athletes competing in the 1980 Summer Olympics in Russia seem to reflect those of our President.

Our country is based on the ideals of a free society. Yes, the imperatives of a free society are important, but should we be forced to sacrifice the freedoms of our individuals? The importance of individual rights is perhaps the very reason for the founding of our nation. To date no other country of any size, economic stability, or political belief has yet to back American boycott efforts. We are forcing our amateur athletes to endure the punishment intended for the Soviet Union.

An Olympic boycott would be especially hard felt here at Villanova with our fine athletic program. At the present time there are at least thirteen present students or alumni in contention to represent the United States this summer.

Perhaps we should examine the overall result of an American Olympic boycott:

— Will the United States withdrawal from the summer games affect Russian actions in Afghanistan?

— Will the withdrawal at all affect the feelings the Russian people have toward their government — Without the United States, will the 1980 Olympic Games be cancelled?

— Finally, will a boycott alone be severe enough punishment for Russia?

The answer to all four questions is quite obviously no. Furthermore, according to the (United States Olympic Committee) USOC, the United States has yet affect overall trade relations with Russia except to reduce sales of excess grain. In fact, to date, the United States has maintained almost normal relations with the Soviet Union. The only action taken against the Soviets was the most visible, excess grain and the threat of an Olympic boycott.

Basketball players and boxers train for professional ranks, but swimmers and track athletes cannot. Many Olympic hopefuls have trained their entire lives for this year and are now told "We must make sacrifices." If it is indeed true that sacrifices must be made, then it should include everyone and not just our athletes.

The President has told our athletes that alternative games will be arranged to compensate for their loss. The only problem with this is that no one has the authority to do so. Our government, which contributes nothing to the training of our athletes, has yet to raise the possiblity that they will pay for these games. As for the arrangement of such an event, the USOC charter only covers them for arrangement of Pan-American and Olympic events.

A free society is very important. However, our individual citizens' rights are likewise very important. Our athletes should have the right to compete if we continue normal relations with the Soviet Union.

The United States can still display their disapproval by competing. Boycott only the opening and closing ceremonies. We stand a much better chance to obtain world-wide support for this than a total boycott. More importantly, every television commentator in the world would be forced to explain to his audience why the Americans were missing. Give our athletes a chance to beat Russia in the Russian stadium and allow our National Anthem to ring out over world wide television.

We do need a free world, and if an Olympic boycott will help, then our President is right in not wanting to send a team. However, don't stop there, force big business to break all contracts with Russia. Stop ALL grain sales. Sever all ties with the Soviet Union. We should punish the Soviets, but not our athletes.

Instead of a boycott why not make a more effective message as has been done previously. Beat Russia on their home land and destroy their spectacle, much in the same way Jessie Owens did to Hitler and Germany in 1936.

Basketball

Dear Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to thank Rollie Massamino and his entire coaching staff for preparing the Villanova basketball team for the banner year they had in the 1978-80 season. Also to the players for their attitude and dedication in this program. Plus their marvelous talents which carried them to the second round of the Eastern Regionals. And to Dr. Ted Aceto for his cooperation and backing "without which" the program would never have culminated. To Ted Wolfe who covered everything from the West coast in December to the Eastern Regionals in March. Also to Jerry Miles equipment man and Anne Geider statistician. To Father Laper for his prayers and spiritual inspiration. To the band, the cheerleaders, and Anne the wildcat for making my nights so pleasant in the field house. To all these people a thunderous ovation. The University and the community of Villanova can be quite proud for an outstanding season.

Frank R. Cummings

P.S. I hope Ted Aceto II is getting his arm in shape to lead his teammates to another championship year in the Radnor baseball league 1979 Champions.

Development

Dear Editor:

Now that we are all enjoying the Connelly Center I believe a "thank you" is due the much maligned Development Office. During the past four years of "tight money" they were responsible for obtaining 8.4 million in pledges. At the same time they maintained their annual fund-raising campaign with only a 20 percent attrition — annual drives that in most schools are suspended during a major campaign.

Congratulations and "thank you" for a job well done!

Professors Seek Energy Solution

Magnetic Propulsion System

Compressed Air Car

By BOB COUREY

It all began in 1968, starting solely as a marketing project. It was then transformed into a possible solution to stop air pollution. Now, it could be the only alternative to this country's energy crisis — a car that runs by magnetism.

This alternative is called M.A.P.S. (Magnetic Automotive Propulsion System). This system was invented and developed by Dr. Adolph S. Butkys, an associate professor of Business Administration in the college of Commerce and Finance.

This is the working model of Dr. Butkis' system, which was on display at Transpo '72.

Dr. Butkys started the project in the mid 1960's as a marketing project, and a possible way to stop air pollution. "Once we started moving with the project, we realized that we were way ahead of our time. The concept was too advanced to use solely for a way of fighting air pollution," stated Dr. Butkys.

For three years, Dr. Butkys worked to find an alternate method of transportation, trying everything from "the most expensive to the most absurd." Finally it was decided that electricity would be the best alternative. The main reason for this decision was "almost anything can be burned to make electricity, but only gasoline will make a car run," explained Dr. Butkys.

Dr. Butkys' car of the future will be a hybrid. It will run on the most efficient batteries that are available for use in the city, and employ Dr. Butkys' propulsion system for highway use.

For his system, many different alternatives of direct electricity were explored. Trolley-type systems, "third rails," and radio-wave transmitters were some of the things that were looked into. Most of these systems were inefficient for private transportation, and had dangers such as possible electrocution from third rails.

"The biggest problem we encountered in selecting a means of using electricity was that we kept restricting ourselves to conventional ideas, when what we needed was something truly revolutionary," commented Dr. Butkys.

The team started by first examining the electric motor. It is a relatively simple machine consisting basically of coils and magnets. Dr. Butkys explained that a magnet is moved by having electric current passed through coils wrapped around a magnet. In his system, coils are placed under the highway road, and a metal fin is placed in a slot in the road, thus propelling the car by magnetism.

With this idea in mind, Dr. Butkys went on to plan his hybrid car. His system has many advantages over any other kind of electricly powered car. Firstly, no electricity has to be passed into the car to run a motor, because the car and the road together constitute the motor. Secondly, there will be no exposed rails or wires.

"Although the basic plans are completed, there are many engineering bugs to be worked out," stated Dr. Butkys.

M.A.P.S. offers many advantages over the internal combustion engine car of today. This system will have a very high speed potential: a car could travel with an average speed of 250 miles per hour. The only moving parts of the car are the four wheels. M.A.P.S. not only propels the car but can also stop it. The switching system from city to highway driving (batteries to electricity) and vice versa will be fully automatic. Batteries will be recharged during highway use, so there will be no need to keep plugging them in to recharge. Most importantly, no electricity will be wasted when a particular part of a highway is not in use.

When asked about the benefits of the system. Dr. Butkys enthusiastically explained, "The savings would be immeasurable. If we can free society from gas, we've already saved. The system would be practically accident-free, so human suffering will be cut to a minimum. There would be no sound or air pollution from the cars to ruin the environment. Financial savings would be immense. There would be no gas to pay for, no maintenance, no parts and no insurance. The only expense would be electricity.

"People ask me about the electricity problem, wondering where we can get the electricity to power the roads," Dr. Butkys continued, "The U.S. has millions of acres of unused land sitting along its roadways. This land could easily be used as sites for solar collectors to power the roadways."

If this seems too impossible to happen, believe it can. A working model has been built and was on display in Transpo '72, the first international transportation exhibition in Washington, D.C. The booth at the transpo was manned by 10 Villanova seniors.

"The main thing that is holding us back now is money. If we were able to get some grants, we could continue with our research," stated Dr. Butkys.

Many factors started Dr. Butkys working on this project. One reason was his handicap. Since childhood, Dr. Butkys was restricted to a wheel chair, so to him, 'transportation is a way of life." Another factor was his interest in cars.

FACULTY FORUM

U.S. Must Accept Blame For Iranian Crisis

By DR. FRED CARRIER, PROFESSOR OF HISTORY, AND FLIP FERRARA

The prolonged turbulence in Iran since the overthrow of the Shah and the seizure of American hostages has raised a clamor for a tougher American foreign policy, including the renewal of the draft. Carter and Brzezinski have seized the initiative, using the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan for talk reminiscent of the Cold War, portraying the Soviet action as the first step in the encirclement of Iran and the entire Persian Gulf. The U.S., of course in defense of freedom everywhere, suddenly is in desperate need of "additional aircraft carrier battle groups, bases and associated facilities to protect the vital flow of Persian Gulf oil" (Admiral Long appealing to the Senate Armed Services Committee).

Apparently the born-again Cold Warriors believe that Americans who lived through U.S. aggression in Indochina have forgotten everything and that those under 21 will know nothing of that recent attempt to "save freedom" which left one million Vietnamese dead and hundreds of thousands of American casualties. That 30,000 people marched in Washington March 22 in opposition to war, imperialism and the draft indicates Americans have not fallen victim to collective amnesia.

The current Iranian crisis was provoked by U.S. meddling that goes back at least to 1953 when the CIA helped to overthrow the Iranian Premier Mossadeqh. Since then the U.S. government has supplied some $10 billion of weaponry to the Shah, thus acting as accomplice to his regime's crimes which resulted in countless numbers of Iranians being murdered, tortured and imprisoned. If there are Americans who still do not know these ugly facts, then all the more reason for Iranians to demand a full exposure of the Shah.

While the seizure of the U.S. embassy in Tehran is a deplorable terrorist act, it pales in comparison to the deplorable U.S. — backed Shah's reign of terror. While all Americans are united in desiring the immediate release of the hostages, it should not be a demand framed in ignorance that the U.S. has backed totalitarian police states hated by their oppressed peoples, not only in Iran, but all over the world, such as Nicaragua, Chile, Brazil, El Salvador, South Korea, The Philippines, and South Africa.

In the Persian Gulf region the reality of U.S. policy is stated by a 1977 Pentagon-sponsored study on "Petroleum and Security: the Limitations of Military Power in teh Persian Gulf." The danger, according to the study, is primarily from insurgents, some of them Marxist revolutionary groups, but the greater number "radical Muslim groups." To counter the threat to U.S. interests, the study recommends continuation of "the present policy of coupling significant arms sales to friendly Persian Gulf states, especially Iran, with military advice and assistance. This policy is enabling Iran to stabilize the region by actively opposing revolutionary forces." As for Saudi Arabia, arms sales are "designed to foster internal political stability, for they provide that monarchy the means to cope with insurgent threats."

What the talk of a revived draft presages is increased intervention in Saudi Arabia and other Persian Gulf states, to support unpopular regimes with American personnel. Such intervention by the U.S. needs manpower, the younger and more naive the better.

One Last Word

Attention Graduating Seniors:

After an overwhelming response from the S.G.A. Graduation survey, the 1980 Commencement Exercises have been rescheduled for Sunday, May 18th. This postponement leaves the Senior Class with a full week to relax and prepare themselves for their graduation.

Many Seniors expressed an interest to help plan special Senior festivities during this time period. Hence, the establishment of a "Senior Week" Committee was formed a few months ago.

The list of suggested activities for this week is very impressive. Seniors must remember that this year is the first time that there is an organized "Senior Week." Therefore, there are problems which must be resolved before definite programs are implemented.

The problems are twofold: 1) there is no University funding for "Senior Week." The current budgets of all the major organizations on campus do not grant any allocations of funds for these events. 2) Secondly, there is a definite shortage of workers. (It is perfectly understandable that Seniors do not want to work at events created for them to enjoy.

For this reason, underclassmen who are planning to stay for graduation ceremonies are encouraged to volunteer their services. If a successful "Senior Week" is to become a tradition at Villanova, all Villanova students should support this activity. In this respect, seniors could be with their friends possibly for the last time, and at the same time allow underclassmen to help say farewell in a social environment.

Seniors, this committee needs feedback as to what type of activities you wish to have. I urge you to complete this survey and return it to the S.G.A. office by Tuesday, April 15th. Thank You for your cooperation.

Student Body Vice-President

Balloon Day

12:00-3 p.m
Mall Area

Spring Fever Week 1980 comes to a close with our annual Balloon Day. Dedicated to the cause of World Hunger and sponsored by Campus Ministry, a carnival out in the Mall will provide plenty of fun for Villanovans of all ages. Various campus organizations will set up booths or tables with games of chance or goodies for sale. One yearly favorite is the Dunking Pool, sponsored by the good men of APO. Many campus celebrities will be giving you the chance to get even. The Day will climax with the release of the hundreds of balloons that Campus Ministry has been selling all week. So come out and join the fun. Remember, all proceeds of Balloon Day go to World Hunger.

Greatest Legs Contest

12 noon
Belle Aire Terrace — PBD

Villanova women, are you interested in the display of male flesh? Then be in the Belle Aire Terrace at 12 noon to see the men in your classes vie for the title for Greatest Legs on Campus. It should prove to be an "exciting" lunch hour!

Thanks

The Spring Fever Week Committee has been running around like a bunch of crazy people for the last several weeks or so. We've had a lot of help from a lot of very generous and very, very patient people. We would like to thank them for all they've done. So a round of applause for our friends:

ACS

By LEO KOLETAS

You may be wondering to yourself, "Why is this kid writing another supplement? I thought that the last one was the last one he would write". Well I'm writing this one because nobody else wanted to. Besides, I didn't write very much of the last one. It was, as they say in journalism talk, censored. But anyway, I feel I do have a few things left to say, that are of some importance and since I'm graduating in four weeks I figured what the hell, one last time.

First of all, we have the elections coming up April 17. It is important to have a big turnout. Why, you may be asking yourself. Because the university bigwigs have to see that this organization is getting commuter support. These upcoming elections are the way to show it. How can we change what you want without the necessary support behind us. What better way than to show your support for the incoming officers of the organizations. Without you, the A.C.S. does not exist. With you, we can become the strongest organization on campus.

Next, you may be wondering to yourself, "Oh, sure, they can have an election, but can they party?" Yes Virginia, the ACS is finally sponsoring their long awaited party! It will be at the Villanova Center (No, I'm not sure where it is either). It will be a free dance concert. That's right, a freebie from Villanova University. Catch it while you can. Munchies and soda will be made available. The group is called "Numbers." It will start at 8:30 p.m., April 17.

Now it's time for me to ascend to my own astral plane.

Genny Cures Spring Fever

By SHARON WINTERS

Genny, Miller, Bud and Mick seem to have many V.U. devotees.

The beer party is one of the most hallowed institutions to college students. It is perhaps the most frequented institution by many V.U. attendees. That beer and students have a tendency to congregate together has been noted by the local beverage companies.

As might be expected, the beer-buying student is most likely to buy brew prior to holidays or week-ends. Also, spring tends to bring an upsurge in the students' desire to quench their thirst.

Beer is purchased in both kegs and cases at the local establishments. Beer Mart has noticed a tendency for college students to buy kegs on the weekend and cases during the week. V.U. customers usually buy the same popular brands in bottle and on tap at the Mart as well as at other distributors.

Local companies follow the policy of carding those customers that appear to be under age. Some have prominantly placed signs stating their carding requirements: they request a picture ID for customers that look to young to buy beer.

The major problems that beverage companies seem to have concerns equipment. Fifteen dollar and shopping carts vanish along with the kegs and cases. Beer taps are not always returned promptly; the indication is that some taps never find their way back to the distributors.

M.A.P.S.

In summing up his project, Dr. Butkys stated, "I have put many years of hard work and sweat into the project. I'm very content in knowing I've been able to help society. I see this system as 'the gas-less carriage of the future.' I would really like to see student involvement. If anyone has questions, I would be more than happy to answer them."

Health Fair

The Student Nurses Association, SNAP, and the College of Nursing are holding their second annual Health Fair aimed at meeting the health needs of the students and faculty of the University. The fair is being held today in the North and West lounges of Dougherty Hall from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m.

The goal of the fair is to provide students and faculty with the opportunity to find out what kind of shape they are in and to gain information for attaining or maintaining optimal health. The health fair committee, chaired by Mary-Jo McClay, a senior nursing student, has enlarged on the program offered last year. They have looked at the health needs of the University population and have designed the Health Fair to meet those identified needs.

Some of the agencies attending are: the American Diabetic Association, American Cancer Society, American Lung Association, Temple University, School of Dentistry and Speech and Hearing Center. Screening will be provided by the Philadelphia College of Optometry, American Heart Association, and many more. Students in Community Health rotations will also be active participants in the fair as an alternative clinical experience.

It is hoped that this will continue to be an annual event. This is one way that the College of Nursing can offer to the University a real service and at the same time practice and demonstrate its skills.

The Sounds of Sun, a singing troupe sponsored by Sun Company, Radnor is currently holding auditions. The troupe debuted on Sept. 9, 1979 in Philadelphia at Super Senior Sunday, which was sponsored by the Sun Company, a city fair attended by more than 100,000 people. The Company will reimburse transportation expenses, to and from rehearsals and performances. For further information, please call 293-6129 and ask for Maureen Walton.

Hey Snugglebear,
Thanks for coming back from Easter my special person again. It really makes life worthwhile for me.

New York Gets 'Simonized'

By MARY JANE GAVENDA

The delightful "Chapter Two" is Neil Simon's latest undertaking for the screen. Set in New York City, the film tells the semi-autobiographical story of two people trying to turn the page of their past to the next chapter of life. James Caan who plays George, a recently widowed novelist, and Oscar nominee Marsha Mason, who portrays Jennie, a newly divorced actress, team up in the film as two individuals on the rebound who find each other and fall in love.

But neither the start nor the continuation of their relationship is an easy one. After numerous disastrous love matches fixed for George by his well-meaning brother (Joe Bologna) and urging on Jennie's part by her friend Fay (Valerie Harper), the couple meet over the telephone. A series of humorous phone exchanges between the intrigued George and wary Jennie follow, and the two decide to look each other over on a five minute "trial date." It's love at first sight and after a whirlwind courtship, the couple marry and then honeymoon at a breathtaking island resort.

The storybook phase of the relationship ends as ghosts of the past emerge for George and he finds himself caught in present limbo between memories of the past and his future life with Jennie. As George silently struggles to overcome his doubts about himself and his feelings, Jennie wisely but painfully watches and waits for George to come to terms with himself.

At this point the movie gets bogged down in some overly long emotional scenes, but for the most part they manage to stay touching and insightful as the tension between George and Jennie mounts and is finally overcome. Yet Simon's most memorable messages come through his comedy, not his drama and indeed this is when the movie is at its best. Caan and Mason engage in the lively Simonesque banter in superb fashion, and the funny, wonderfully timed "five minute date" is the film's high point in non-stop wit.

James Caan gives a low key, believable performance as George, and his quiet wit reminds one of Neil Simon himself. Marsha Mason lights up the screen with her naturalness and energy as Jennie, and earns the Oscar nomination she received for the part. In the supporting roles, Valerie Harper is pure New York neurotici m as Fay, Jennie's soap opera star friend, while Joe Bologna lends some earthy character to the film as George's fast-talking wisecracking, womanizing brother, Leo.

As usual, Simon's visualization of New York and the people it breeds is comically flawless. When Simon gets serious, the effect isn't as great, but it still more than contributes to the enjoyment of the film.

Society Hill Playhouse

SHOWCASE 80

By MAUREEN FAGAN

From now through April 12, the Society Hill Playhouse has taken on an ambitious program entitled "Showcase 80." The Showcase consists of a total of nine one-act plays split into two bills and presented on alternating evenings. If the first evening is any indication, then the showcase certainly succeeds in "running the proverbial gamut" with mixed results.

The opening night presentation led-off with Edward Albee's The Sandbox, a fine piece which too seldom gets produced. Grandma's encounter with death in the person of a good-looking, if slightly stupid, Young Man while Mommy and Daddy sit on the beach and wait is potentially a very powerful piece of theatre. This production started promisingly, with a good fusion of music and movement as the Young Man (Ed Gudonis) went through a series of Mr. America warmups. The lights then went up on a stark set; the wood blocks, steel cubes, and simple "sandbox" creating a fine atmosphere for the surrealistic action. Unfortunately, the rest of the production did not live up to the promise of its opening. In the roles of Mommy and Daddy, Marian Tracey and Jim Miller never got beyond caricatures of the shrill matron and her ineffectual husband. Joyce Bloom, in the pivotal role of Grandma, fared somewhat better. She brought out the black humor of the piece with her amusing delivery of some of Albee's choicer lines. Ultimately, though, her Grandma was an unbelievable character, undercutting the sympathy/empathy which the role could spark in the audience.

The next two pieces, Noon by Terrance McNally and The Actor and the Invader by Robert Patrick, were entertaining bits of fluff and, as such, worked very well.

Noon deals with the sexual shenanigans which occur (or almost occur) when five disparate types invade the same apartment in answer to "personals" placed by one "Dale." Dale never makes it — but the fun and games of mistaken identity, mistaken sexual preference, etc. make for a lively time. While the play seemed a little long for its premise, director Enid L. Reid kept things moving at a quick pace. The ensemble cast worked well, both individually and as a unit. Special mention should be made of Craig Fols' Kerry, the token homosexual with the inflatable air mattress, and Drucie McDaniel's Beryl, the Westchester housewife who's into leather, whips, and submission.

The Actor and the Invader takes the stereotype of the Broadway producer as man-eating monster and translates it onto stage, literally. In a clever introduction, the audience at Society Hill Playhouse was left in the dark, listening to eerie space music ("The Invaders" theme?) and the sound of crunching bones. The Monster, amusingly played by James Pyduck (complete with scales, red eyes, etc.) has just eaten the producer of a show that Arnold (Drucie McDaniel again) wants to audition for. As the tenacious actor who mistakes the Monster for the producer and is willing to try anything to get that part McDaniel is very funny. Can the Monster convince her he really is? (a monster, that is). Will she get the part? When the battle is this funny, who cares?

The final piece of the evening, Grandma Faust by Edward Bond, was a tremendous letdown, both emotionally and artistically. The piece appeared to be an attempt by Bond to write an allegory on the black condition in the United States. The writing is heavy-handed: interminable preaching "asides" to the audience, references to being sold for "thirty silver dollars," bad guys named Uncle Sam and Grandma Faust (the devil incarnate). The production was also heavy-handed. The majority of the cast seemed unable to invest their characters with any depth or interest beyond the ponderous lines given them. The sole bright spot was Rich Floyd as Paul, the simple black man who loses and then regains his soul from the devil. With his fluid movements and voice full of the blues he was able at times to rise above the material and infuse some life into an otherwise tedious piece.

Opening at Vasey

John Carrozza is restrained by Beverly Alfano in a confrontation with Tim Wade, restrained by Thomas Rooney, in the upcoming production of "Dinner Habits." Production dates are April 9-12, 16-19. Curtain is at 8 p.m.

Students Present Broadway Revue

By EILEEN MCCAFFREY

Do you miss the fun and excitement of high school musicals? A Villanova student is attempting to establish an annual student-run musical to give undergrads an opportunity to come together in a good production. Broadway Marquee, the first such production, will be presented in the Connelly Center next week. The show reviews five major Broadway musicals of the seventies — Chicago, A Chorus Line, Evita, Pipin, and Jesus Christ Superstar. It will be a truly undergraduate student production, since it is acted and financed by the 20 mostly undergraduate cast members and their student director Ralph Spinosa. Spinosa himself serves as script writer, choreographer, director, and business manager. He also acts in the show.

"We hope to impress people" with the cast's discipline and talent, said Spinosa. Only four have been in Vasey productions; for many of the others, their only background is high school plays. Unlike Vasey, this is mainly an undergraduate phenomenon. It offers a unique opportunity for students with little experience to participate in creating a high-quality production. Each performer has at least one lead besides being in the chorus. From A Chorus Line they are presenting "At the Ballet," "I Hope I Get It", and "What I Did For Love". Ralph feels that the audience "will see that these kids are having fun on stage," and be interested in trying out for a show next year. The cast is incredibly dedicated, he says. They are working hard, and having a lot of fun.

Spinosa spent the summer after his high school graduation in summer stock, which involves doing a different show every week in resort area theaters such as Jones Beach and Beach Haven. "Most places won't take 18-yr.-olds for summer stock," says Ralph, partly because you must live away from home. Summer stock is considered the equivalent of off-Broadway theater. Before that, he had directed and acted in high school plays, and played semi-professional theather in New York. Ralph

If you need a nice relaxing evening next Friday night, drop in at the Connelly Center and listen to Lynda Kanter. A Villanova nursing student who has played the guitar for 8 years, Lynda has done recording and has performed in such diverse settings as coffeehouse, cruise ships, a Democratic party fundraiser, radio commercials, and the University of Pennsylvania. "I never took (guitar) lessons," said Lynda. "I just picked it up on my own." She has been writing songs for five years (most of which are copywritten) and will mostly perform her own music at the Connelly Center, along with the works of such artists as Janis Ian and Dan Fogelberg. Presently Lynda is preparing a demo tape for the Main Point, where she will appear this summer.

Another hobby of Lynda's is selling pen and ink drawings of people's homes. She has also done medical illustrating. All of this comes naturally, since her father is a doctor, her mother is in real estate, and her uncle is a famous Canadian artist.

In spite of her artistic talent and success, Lynda plans to be a nurse midwife, mainly because she loves to work with people. Many of her songs are drawn from experiences with people. As she said, "I'm always inspired by something." However, she plainy wants to keep up with her music. "I would like to make music a part of my life."

Lynda Kanter will be at the Connelly Center Friday, April 18, at 8 p.m. There is no admission charge.

Win $500 for your vacation this summer. No obligation. To receive entry form send self-addressed, stamped envelope to Summer Sweepstakes, P.O. Box 750, Cueur D'Alene, Idaho 83814.

Softball Swings Into Spring

By ANN WOLFORD

Looking forward to the new season the women's softball team is hoping to improve last year's 8-5 record. Coach Debbie McKee says, "My team is young and exciting and shows a lot of potential."

Five returning starters will be joined by a great crop of freshmen who hope to combine their youth and experience to produce a strong team.

Top returning hitter, senior shortstop P.J. Beaty, batted .381 last year. Sophomore second-baseman Nina Weiczorek joins her to provide excellent defense up the middle. Senior Susie Stroud and freshman Kathy Byrnes round out the infield at first and third.

Two sophomores, Patty Nowlan and Karen Clabbers, again plan the use of their speed in the outfield where they will be joined by powerhitting freshman Kathie Beisel and sophomore Patsy Dugan.

Last year's returning pitchers are junior Eileen McEvoy and sophomore Diane Messina. Fastballer McEvoy struck out 39 in 43 innings last season. Messina finished her initial season with a 5-0 record. Freshman Shaula DeMarco, with a .97 ERA in high school, hopes to add to the excellence of the pitching staff.

A big vacancy was created by the graduation of catcher Sandy Arena, the all-time leading batter who holds or shares every offensive record. Freshman Denise Reid and sophomore Chris Toth will attempt to fill these shoes.

The 13-game schedule includes eight home games and the Penn Tournament. The team finished third in this tournament last year.

The toughest tests this season are Salisbury State, Temple and Trenton State. The Trenton State game is scheduled for 1:00 p.m. Sunday at St. Mary's field. The team is looking forward to an exciting and successful season.

Netters Tackle Tough Schedule

By BOB CONWAY

The Villanova men's tennis team has gotten off to a good start. The netters are currently sporting a 4-1 record. "Getting off to a good start was crucial for us," said senior co-captain John Mulliken.

The reason getting off to a good start, which was aided by a few rainouts, was so important is that the netters have a murderous schedule which includes 29 matches in 35 days.

Coach Langran, who collected his 200th win last season, has a squad with good depth. The team is strong right through to the sixth man.

Tom Feiger is the team's number one seed. He has won all his matches except one. That sole loss came against Lehigh, a loss which prompted one teammate to explain "was due to an unfair advantage." Feiger is overpowering and usually has little trouble with his opponents.

Sophomore Shawn Friel is the team's second seed. He is also playing exceptional tennis. John Mulliken is one of the two seniors on the team. He has contributed to the squad's four victories by winning three of his matches so far this year. Bill Sullivan and Bill Monde are sound players who are very steady. Jerry Kramer is the other senior co-captain. He is the glue that keeps the team together.

The netters have defeated Penn State, Rider, Ursinus, and Textile. They are undefeated at home, but have a long road trip which they will have to endure in the coming weeks.

The players are pointing towards the Rider Invitational Tournament which will take place April 18 and 19. Last season Villanova finished second in this tourney and are hoping they have gained enough experience to enable them to capture the number one spot this season.

TRACKSTERS TRIUMPH AT COLONIAL RELAYS

By DAVE COSKEY

Freshman Carlton Young termed last weekend's Colonial Relays as "a warm-up, a primer for us." Head Coach Jumbo Elliott considered the overall performance "not bad for the first meet."

But the statistics prove that the Cats were primed and were better than 'not bad.'

Villanova's perenially powerful tracksters came home from the transplanted track with six first place finishes, two seconds and one third on the way to establishing three new meet marks.

Not too bad for a team that is only priming up for their spring schedule.

The first record to tumble came on Friday when John Hunter (1:51.2), Anthony Tufariello (47.0) and Mike England (2:57.8) combined with Don Paige's anchor leg (3:59.9) to out-kick Sos Bitok of Richmond and establish a meet record of 9:35.9.

Earlier Friday, Joe Mitrovich placed third in the javelin at 70.9 meters. Mitrovich's mark fell of the winning mark of 77.44 by NCAA defending champion Mike Joskos of Glassboro.

Saturday's performances could be termed nothing short of brilliant. Of Villanova's seven entries, the Cats came up with six first place finishes. The first mark to drop came via the hands (or actually, the feet) of Sydney Maree.

The junior distance ace fought off teammate Amos Korir (who finished second with 28:35.2) and Kenyan Hillary Towei of Richmond to establish a new meet mark of 28:33.2 in the 10,000 meters.

Senior Don Paige also continued his torrid pace on Saturday, anchoring both the sprint medley (3:19.9) and the two mile relay to victory. The latter was the third meet mark shattered by the Cats, posting a new time of 7:23.0.

Outstanding individual efforts came from senior Carey Pinkowski and frosh Rodney Wilson. Pinkowski took the 5000 in 14:01.2 and Wilson, an underdog in the 110 high hurdles to fellow Bartram High School graduate Kerry Bethel, captured the race in 13.9. "I really wasn't supposed to win, but I'm really glad it worked out," said Wilson.

Four harriers from the Wildcat (IC4A) champion Cross Country team combined to win the four mile relay. John Hunter (4:11.7), Kevin Dillion (4:06.7), Mike England (4:19.6) and Carey Pinkowski (4:09.9) combined for a 16:49.9 to edge George Mason University.

"Overall we're pleased," added Coach Elliott. "It was our first meet and we're looking forward to the Dogwood Relays next week." After the Dogwoods, the Cats return to the area for the Rutgers Relays April 18 at Rutgers Stadium in New Brunswick, New Jersey.

Commentary
The Greatest Game

By BOB CONWAY

Baseball is not without its share of philosophers.

With Opening Day upon us and the baseball strike in the air, I would like to invite everyone to sit back and relax and enjoy a few of baseball's many stories. Here goes.

Earl Weaver, after losing to the New York Mets in 1969: "You can't sit on the lead and rup a few plays into the line and just kill the clock. You've got to throw the ball over the plate and give the other man his chance. That's why baseball is the greatest game of them all." Chuck Tanner, Pittsburgh Pirates Manager, talks about his philosophy of life! "You can have money piled to the ceiling, but the size of your funeral is still going to depend on the weather."

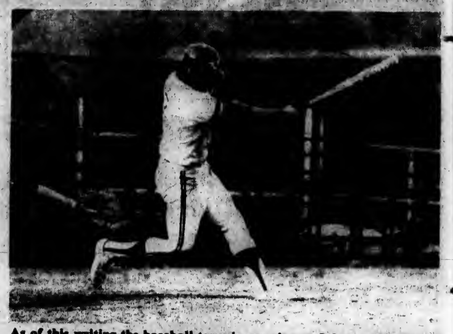
Power-hitter Johnny Mize: "Sure I got hit in the head a few times. Those things will happen. Harry Gumbert hit me once; Brecheen hit me once. Were they thorwing at me? I don't know. But one of them was a sinkerball pitcher; the other one was a control pitcher. And on each occasion I'd hit a homerun the time before. Take it from there."

Carl Erskine, former Dodger pitcher, whose lifetime record was 122-78, speaking at an oldtimers luncheon: "These oldtimers games are great. They remind me of a scrapbook my mother kept when I was pitching in the big leagues. In that scrapbook my record was 122 wins and no losses."

Now, don't you feel better? I hope so. Baseball has a way of brightening up a dull day. Maybe this season a new Babe Ruth will come on to the scene.

Whatever the case, keep Billy Martin in your prayers. He will need them. He is managing the Okland A's. Martin's idol will give us one final thought. "At this time a year ago (Casey Stengel said in 1950) I figgers I ain't got enough outfielders. Now this year I'm beginning to figger I got too many, and they're the same fellers."

You figure it out, and enjoy the season.



As of this writing the baseball team is carrying an 8-2 record, achieved by solid hitting and fine performances by starting and relief pitching.

Congratulations

The Villanova Sailors took to the Schuylkill River April 5 and 6 and won the Schuylkill Laser Invitational last weekend. Former team captain Lou Sander raced in the A division and tallied two first place finishes, three seconds and one fifth. In the B division, John Conte and Rich Hogan combined for a first, second, and two thirds and a fourth and sixth place finish. Other schools competiting in the regatta were Drexel, Suffolk, Haverford, Swarthmore and Lehigh.

Senior Carolyn Murray will lead the women's sailing team into the Women's Tiger Bowl on April 12 and 13. The meet will be held at Princeton.

. . . to Villanova basketball sensation John Pinone, who was named the Eastern Basketball Outstanding Freshman for the 79-80 season. Pinone's stellar performance on the court helped to lead the Villanova Wildcats to a 23-8 season and to the second round of the NCAA post-season tournament.

. . . to Villanova's cheerleading squad, who was voted the "greatest" all-around squad on the East Coast by EASTERN BASKETBALL magazine.

Broadway

would like to follow theater as a profession, but values an education as something to back him up.

Since the show is financially independant of the Union, "there is almost no way that the Union could lose money on it." Each cast member is required to sell one $20 patron. The show's budget is $500 for everything from sets and costumes to publicity. Sets will be minimal so that the actors will create more of the show. The Union serves mainly as a financial backup in case anything goes wrong. Money from ticket sales will be put toward the budget for next year's show.

Besides providing a place for students to exercise their acting, dancing, and singing talents in a musical production, the show is unique in that it is run for and by students. Spinosa and his cast are creating the show from nothing simply because they want to do it and it's a lot of fun.

Broadway Marquee will be at the Connelly Center cinema April 16, 17, and 18 at 8 p.m. Tickets are $2 and are available through the Connelly Center Ticket Office.

Junior Phil Sertori is this week's Budweiser Athlete of the Week. Before the Temple game, Sertori was the team's leading relief pitcher, snagging the team's record for saves with three. Even though his first start was against Temple, Sertori allowed only one run in the first inning and pitched a shutout the rest. Sertori has an ERA of 0.45 and was nominated by Ted Wolff.

President Orders Appointment

English Professor Hired After Search Committee Rejection

By VINCENT HAUSMANN

In a break with academic tradition, Vincent Sherry, a graduate of the University of Toronto, has been added to the faculty of the English department by means of Presidential appointment.

Sherry, a Wynnewood resident, was rejected by a department search committee attempting to fill two full-time positions. The committee went on to select Dr. James Kirscke and Dr. Margaret Erhart, as full-time assistant professors.

Sherry was appointed by Father Driscoll in March and accepted the position after having received a rejection letter sent by the search committee and signed by the chairman in February.

Sherry is a member of the Keating family. Daniel Keating Jr. serves on the Villanova Department Council.

Keating Company is also the contractor recently employed in the construction of the Connelly Center.

Sherry's attempts to secure a position follow what are known to be at least two previous inquiries into obtaining faculty positions at two Main line colleges — Harcum Junior College and Rosemont College.

Keating is on the board of Trustees at Harcum and Josephine Connelly, Connelly's wife, sits on Rosemont's Board.

A source at Harcum who wished to remain anonymous revealed that last year Sherry's resume was brought before the English department and he was offered a position to teach English and work in public relations. A contract was extended, however, Sherry declined the position.

Harcum College, however, is unlike Villanova in that faculty are basically chosen by the President and the department heads then give approval.

Villanova has basically chosen new faculty members on department committee recommendations which are then forwarded to the Dean of the College and Academic vice-president for approval.

"Technically speaking, he (Father Driscoll) has the right to appoint, but academic tradition has been that the department makes the recommendations," stated Dr. Joseph McGowan, head of the department of English. "Sherry wasn't our first choice nor did he rank among the finalists considered."

Sherry did not make the top fifty candidates considered in a search process which used degree, teaching experience, and publication material as part of its selection criteria used for over 550 applicants.

"As President, Father Driscoll is within his rights," noted Dr. Earl Bader, a member of the search committee; "However, he violates all other rights by his flagrant move."

"We can only assume," continued Bader, "that Father Driscoll must have considered the risks involved and decided to take them."

The risks not only involve a break with academic tradition and disturbing faculty, but include bringing an individual into an already overcrowded field (Modern British Literature), surpassing part-time members who placed above Sherry in the search process, and risking possible lawsuits by the Association of American University Professors (AAUP).

"Sherry comes into a crowded field and jumps over better part-time people, those who have put in years of service in good faith," continued Bader.

Bader also stated that there were rumors that if the English department did not hire a woman,

Regulation Track Under Consideration

By MARIANNE LAVELLE

Improved stadium facilities are under "active consideration by the Board of Trustees" said Father President John Driscoll this week.

"The decision on the stadium will be made in the context of the total needs of the University," said Driscoll. "It is a high priority, but any decision on development has to be made in that context. We are fundamentally an academic institution," he said.

The Board of Trustees' proposals for upgrading the athletic facilities were discussed on the University Senate floor, November 9, 1979. One of the recommendations presented to the Senate by Thomas LaBreque, chairman of the Trustees ad-hoc committee on athletics was "Conversion of the football stadium into an all-weather, year-round facility, with modifications including better drainage, an NCAA specification track, an all-weather playing surface, and the installation of lights." Labreque said then that the preliminary cost estimate for the football stadium renovation would be $1.2 million.

The Senate, at its November 30 meeting, voted to recommend that the Board of Trustees delay any decision on the athletic proposals until it received a report from the Senate. The rationale for delaying the decision given by the Senate was "the importance of the relationship between the costs of the University's athletic programs and the allocations of resources for other programs and the deep concern of the University Senate that it respond appropriately to the issue."

A new track surface may be installed in the football stadium.

Bush to Speak in Center

By MARIANNE LAVELLE

Republican Presidential Candidate George Bush is to speak and answer questions at the Villanova Center of the Connelly Center on Monday, April 21. His visit here, the day before the Pennsylvania primary, was arranged by Bruce Keogh, president of the Villanova Political Union.

Keogh said he expects Bush to deliver a brief address and to answer questions from the audience on such topics as inflation, registration, and the draft. Admission will be free and seating will be reserved for the first 450 people to arrive at the auditorium. Bush is not receiving payment for his visit to Villanova.

George Bush was director of the CIA in 1976 and 1977 and U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations in 1971 and 1973. He was a member of the U.S. House of Representatives from Texas from 1966 to 1970. Bush served as chairman of the Republican National Committee in 1973 and 1974. In 1974-75, he was chief of the U.S. liaison office in the People's Republic of China.

George Bush, candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination.

Bush was a U.S. Navy carrier pilot in the Pacific during World War II. He graduated from Yale University. Before election to Congress he was president of Zapata Offshore Company, an oil-drilling equipment firm in Houston. He was born in Milton, Massachusetts in 1924.

Keogh contacted all of the presidential candidates in December, and was only able to assure arrangements with Bush.

Yearbook Distribution

The 1980 Belle Air yearbook will be distributed on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, April 23-25, from 10-4, in the North Lounge. If you've already ordered a yearbook, bring your recipt; if you haven't ordered one, extra books will be on sale for $15.00.

George Bush to Speak

George Bush will be coming to Villanova University on April 21 at 9:30 in the Villanova Center of the Connelly Center. The Political Union sponsored event will last approximately one hour and all are invited. Admission is free, and all are encouraged to attend. Come and listen to a major Republican candidate for President. After a short speech, Mr. Bush will respond to questions from the audience.

Thornburgh Addresses Engineers

Govenor's Speech Highlights College's 75th Anniversary

By BILL ROCK

An address by Pennsylvania Governor Richard L. Thornburgh highlighted the convocation ceremonies marking the 75th anniversary of Villanova's College of Engineering in the Field House last Tuesday afternoon.

Thornburgh spoke after he and Captain Thomas Byrne, a retired alumnus of the College of Engineering who has served as a volunteer administrator for the last five years, received honoring degrees.

The day's activities began with a luncheon, hosted by Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., Villanova's president, in the Connelly Center. The luncheon was attended by over 200 invited guests, including the Board of Trustees, alumni, faculty, student leaders, and community leaders in engineering practice. Following the luncheon, an academic procession to the Field House took place.

Dean Robert Lynch opened the convocation ceremonies with a welcoming address. Lynch cited a recent statement by President Carter which declared that a strong engineering education was essential to the future of the nation. Lynch stated, "With faith in God and ourselves coupled with the support of faculty, students, administration and those outside in industry, we will continue to provide a strong engineering education here at Villanova."

Dr. Raymond F. Adams of the electrical engineering department welcomed Thornburgh on behalf of the faculty. R. Steven Santoleri, president of the Engineering Joint Council, also delivered a welcoming address, his on behalf of the student body.

After these speeches, Byrne and Thornburgh received their honorary degrees from Fr. President Driscoll.

Byrne expressed fond memories of his last five years here. "When I came back I knew no one," he said. "I was not too sure what to expect. The school had changed so much since I was a student. However, I was made to feel at home right away."

Following Byrne's remarks, Thornburgh delivered about a 30 minute address. In it he reviewed his engineering training in college, calling himself "a former slide-rule soldier."

He referred to the "engineering method" which is useful in all fields, including government. He stated, "As we face crises let us use the inherent skepticism of engineers to avoid quick and easy solutions. Such solutions just do not really exist."

He concluded by praising independent institutions like Villanova. According to Thornburgh they fulfill several important roles. They provide necessary competition for state schools, provide students with a meaningful choice and relieve the State from providing for all higher education," he explained. "Finally, they are free to innovate, to not only deal with the needs of today, but also tomorrow."

Governor Richard Thornburgh receives honorary degree from Father President Driscoll.

By DREW MERRICK

"I believe that America has the responsibility of seeing to it that the dreams and aspirations shared by both my father, Robert F. Kennedy and my uncle, John F. Kennedy, do not go unfulfilled," so spoke Michael Kennedy, nephew of Presidential candidate (Edward M. Kennedy, to an enthusiastic audience of approximately 100 Villanovans on April 14 at the Connelly Center.

Kennedy, a senior American history major at Harvard University, arrived at Villanova in search of support for his uncle's bid to win the April 22 Pennsylvania Democratic presidential primary.

Because of a driving rain, Kennedy cancelled his plans to mingle with students outside the Connelly Center — Kennedy Mall area, and went directly to the Villanova Center, where he delivered his address.

Kennedy began his speech by saying, "Students, you have the opportunity to go past the mystique and honor of the Kennedy name and see for yourselves who Senator Ted Kennedy is, and what he stands for. . . . Ted Kennedy will be a forceful, effective President in the thick of the action, at the center of all the great concerns our people share."

Kennedy assessed the Carter Administration by terming it "one of vacillation, confusion, and inconsistency. The Afghanistan situation didn't just happen; it is a result of weak, previous responses to other Soviet actions, such as the timid reaction to the discovery of Soviet troops in Cuba."

When asked how his uncle can reduce defense spending and still maintain an army capable of containing the global thrust of Soviety-backed aggression, Kennedy replied, "Nuclear superiority in the arms race will not contain the Soviet thrust. The only effective methods to front the Soviets are sound economic policies and industrial programs at home and abroad."

Professor Views State Primary

By BILL DWYER

As the month of April draws to a close, voters attentions are turned towards the upcoming Pennsylvania presidential primary.

Despite a field of many canidates, it seems as though the race has been narrowed down to four men. The incumbent Jimmy Carter and Edward Kennedy are vying for the Democratic Presidential nomination, while George Bush and Ronald Reagan are battling for the top spot on the Republican ticket.

The Villanovan asked Dr. Hopkirk, chairperson of the political science department, to give her views on the coming election.

Despite the fact that Carter has been projected as the winner, Dr. Hopkirk feels that Kennedy still has a good chance of winning in Pennsylvania. "All of the predictions had Carter as the winner in the New York primary, but Kennedy surprised them and won the nomination," she pointed out.

Dr. Hopkirk stated that Philadelphia Mayor Bill Green's endorsement of Kennedy could produce a larger turnout and possibly swing the vote towards the Senator. She does feel however, "that unless something drastic should happen, such as Iran killing the hostages, Carter should win the national Democratic nomination."

"Even if Kennedy does lose in Pennsylvania, he'll stay with the fight all the way to the end," Hopkirk believes.

In the Republican race, Dr. Hopkirk feels that Ronald Reagan will most likely be the winner.

When asked if George Bush's television townhouse meetings would have any effect on voters, she said that "they will only reinforce views that people already have and not change peoples' minds."

She feels that Bush speaks out against Carter more strongly than aginst Reagan because he is keeping the communication lines open for a possible Vice-Presidential nomination in the event that he fails in his present endeavor. If Bush loses in Pennsylvania, Dr. Hopkirk feels that he will drop out of the Presidential race.

Son of GOP Candidate Reviews Campaign Effort

By SHARON WINTERS

During a visit to Villanova on April 9, Neil Bush, the son of Presidential candidate George Bush, recounted his eleven months of campaign experiences.

For the first nine months, Bush helped build his father's campaign effort in New Hampshire. He felt that the loss of that state's primary was a "letdown."

New Hampshire also held a very memorable experience for the younger Bush; he met his fiancee whom he plans to marry this July.

Bush's experiences on the campaign trail have given him an "opportunity to get closer to the people." He has swept through thirteen states in the last two months. In Scranton, Pennsylvania, Bush obtained a first-hand view of the lingering after-effects of the 1972 Hurricane Agnes flood. When he was in Mobile, Alabama, he was able to see the hardships caused by a hurricane in September. These experiences as well as others have made Neil more aware of the varied needs of people in this country.

A 1979 graduate with an MBA at Tulane University in New Orleans, Bush cites interests in areas other than politics. He is convinced that the son of a President can have a life independent of the press. His manner of dealing with this situation would be to "try to avoid Washington."

Bush is confident of his father's nomination to the high office, "Reagan is a long way from winning; this is a volative political year."

"John Anderson is a kind of phenomenon," according to Bush. "Anderson lost his home state" and hasn't yet won a primary. In his opinion, anyone voting for Anderson would effectively be aiding in Reagan's campaign efforts.

While at the Villanovan office, Bush addressed various issues beginning with inflation, the rate of which he feels is "unbelievable."

Although there are "no easy answers" for inflation, the key seems to be to "limit Federal spending and hold the line on growth." Bush said that his father favors increases in defense spending and programs that help people, such as the handicapped.

The three major moves to reduce inflation would be to hold the line on extra spending; to cut excesses of regulation that add cost and discourage people; and to give tax cuts to stimulate job training and conservation.

The Iranian situation has the Presidential hopeful "very frustrated." Carter "vacillates" in foreign affairs and "sends signals of appeasement around the world," Bush said.

Neil Bush visited the VILLANOVAN office last week.

Jeff Page Photo

Bush feels that his father did a good job as director of the Central Intelligence Agency. George Bush made many positive changes in the organization.

We "must gather the best information" possible in Bush's view. There has been a failure in the last three years in this area. The events in Iran, Nicaragua and Cuba are not only evidence of the failures in foreign affairs, but also witness to Bush's capabilities in gathering information, according to Bush. He believes that his father's CIA experience is a sizable political benefit.

Bush said that his father recognizes the energy problem but feels that we "cannot afford to turn our back on any sources of energy." The candidate would study commission reports on the nuclear issue; make recommended changes; and find storage for the waste. It would be simplistic to shut off nuclear power until we have technology to replace it, cited Bush. George Bush favors the Olympic boycott for moral reasons, his son said.

Campaigning has been a full-time job recently for Neil Bush. Prior to visiting Villanova, he spent time at Drexel, Temple and the University of Pennsylvania. He left V.U. to speak at Haverford that afternoon.

When the question of the low 18-21 year-old turnout at the polls came up, Bush said that he hoped that students would look into the future. Issues like the inflation rate would be affecting them sooner than they realize, he believes.

The Board, however, at its December 11 meeting, approved a proposal for a special, non-public fund raising campaign for the financing of the stadium renovations as described in the Athletic Committee Report.

In correspondence to Dr. Angelo Armenti, chairman of the University Senate, Driscoll reiterated the "Board of Trustee's basic policy is to make resource allocations in the light of approved institutional priorities." The University priorities set by the Senate in 1973 were first, a student center, followed by an athletic facility.

Sources now say that the funding for the facility would come from the revenues of Phase II of the Covenant Campaign, a program which is still in the planning stages.

Lecturer Supports Liberation Theology

By KATHI IANNACONE

The philosophy department presented the last lecture of their semester series on Monday, April 14. The lecture entitled "Liberation Theology and Philosophy" was presented by Professor Enrique Dussel.

A native of Argentina, Dussel is now in exile, presently residing in Mexico while teaching at the National University of Mexico. Dussel is the author of a five volume book called Ethics of Latin American Liberation and another book, Philosophy of Liberation.

Dussel said he spoke in the name of those people who suffer and die in the desire for liberation, especially his brothers and sisters in Latin America.

To begin the lecture, Dussel provided a historical background explaining the capitalist philosophy that exists today in America. According to Dussel, our deep rooted capitalist sense stems from the philosophical rationalization that existed during the expansion of Europe.

Dussel used 1492 as the key date for this expansion period. He explained that at this time Europe began widespread colonization, considering themselves the "I" destined by God to conquer and civilize. They considered those natives in the various colonies the "other" or "barbarians" who needed to be reformed and taught the European way of life. He continued that this alienation between the I of our world and the other that exists outside our world still prevails extensively today.

The poor of the Third World nations are not real to us, they do not touch us and therefore are the other, Dussel claimed, saying that we must abandon this manner of thinking because it perpetuates the impoverished conditions of the Third World. We will not attempt to help and liberate the poor until we stop considering them as the other, we must expand our narrow view and include them in our world, he argued.

Once Dussel explained how our lack of recognition of those outside our world prevents our hearing their cries for help, he then began describing Liberation Philosophy.

Dussel stated that the philosophy of liberation is one of "critical discourse. It is a concrete articulation of reality." Liberation philosophy places much stress on praxis, the putting of theory into practice, more specifically treating all men as equal he explained. Dussel reminded his audience that unless we hear the cries of the hungry and answer them we will not enter heaven.

Dussel stressed that we must broaden our way of thinking to make our view more realistic by acknowledging the existence of the poor and oppressed. We must also free the poor from their hunger and allow them to develop without hindrance, he urged.

Candidate Ready

Villanova University Professor John Logue is going down the home stretch in his campaign for the Democratic nomination for the United States Senate.

Villanova students will be among those working for the Villanova political scientist on Tuesday as Democratic voters choose among eight candidates to run for the seat being vacated by Senator Richard Schweiker of Montgomery County.

United Nations reform and restructure has been a major theme of Logue's Senate campaign and, he says, it has been getting "a very satisfying response." He says that a strong UN could deal effectively with problems like the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan or the seizure of American diplomats by Iranian militants. He says that "under the present international system we have two equally unsatisfactory alternatives, i.e. doing nothing or having American young men play the role of world policemen like Gary Cooper at High Noon."

Logue has also been hitting hard on domestic issues, calling for price, wage and profit controls and "rationing of gasoline at fair prices."

The Villanova professor feels that media coverage of the Senate race has been sparse. However, he says, coverage has been picking up in the final days of the campaign and he estimates that he has appeared on ten television stations around the state and in many newspapers. His modest media budget has been devoted to newspaper advertising and some radio commercials.

Whiskey Co. Wins Drill

By FRANK J. DOHERTY

Whiskey Company, The Villanova University NROTC Unit Drill team, was awarded the American Veterans Memorial Trophy at the 32nd Annual Illinois Invitational Drill Meet, which was held on April 11 and 12 at the University of Illinois.

The trophy is presented to the unit which accumulates the highest total scores in the basic and trick squad drill categories.

The Illinois drill meet is one of the largest in the world. Sixty-two teams were scheduled to compete. The meet was hosted by Pershing Rifle Company C-3 of the University of Illinois NROTC Unit.

Whiskey Company took first place in the squad trick drill competition and second place in squad basic drill. The team from Villanova was awarded second place in the platoon basic drill competition and third place in platoon trick drill.

The Villanova Unit was the only one to place in both categories of platoon drill. Whiskey Company had the smallest contingent, yet took home six major awards, the most of any team at the drill meet. Whiskey Company's silent trick drill routine was unique to the meet.

Lt. Col. Phillip S. Makowka, USMC, the Villanova drill team moderator, described the drill meet as "a real challenging experience."

"The size and scope of the meet was larger than anything we've gone to in two years," he said.

Whiskey Company took first place overall and first place in both the platoon basic and platoon trick categories at the Second Annual Crossroads of the American Revolution Invitational Drill Meet which was hosted by Seton Hall University on March 29.

Villanova freshman Patsy Van Bloem was awarded second place in the individual drill competition. There was no distinction made between men's and women's events.

The team of Richard Regan and Scott Shoemaker won second place in the two-man trick drill competition.

Regan and Shoemaker also took second place in the two-man trick drill competition at a drill meet hosted by Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute. Shoemaker was awarded first place in the individual drill competition at Brooklyn.

Whiskey Company was victorious in recent Illinois drill meet.

Business School Hosts Seminars

As a service to area businesses, the College of Commerce and Finance at Villanova University is sponsoring a series of five continuing education seminars this spring.

Each seminar is a comprehensive two-day program featuring noted authorities from some of the nation's most prestigious businesses and educational institutions.

The titles and dates of these programs are: "Purchasing Policies, Procedures and Techniques for the Smaller Company," April 17-18; "The Job of Controller," April 30-May 1; "Effective Construction Management" and "Maintenance Planning, Scheduling and Control Systems," May 19-20; and "How to Develop Marketing Skills," May 21-22.

The market management seminar will be taught by Villanova professors Dr. Frank Eby and Mr. William O'Neill of the Business Administration Department. In the past decade, Dr. Eby and Mr. O'Neill have co-directed around 100 market research and sales forecasting seminars.

According to program administrator Mrs. Sally McBeth, an administrative assistant in the College of Commerce and Finance, the response from both large and small businesses in the greater Philadelphia area has been favorable. "Many area businessmen expressed a special need for such instruction when they registered for the courses," she says.

Companies from outside the area also are interested in the seminars. "People from as far as Buffalo, New York and York, Maryland, are registered for the programs," she notes.

All seminars will begin at 9 a.m. and conclude at 4:30 p.m. Participants will be issued instructional notebooks and supplementary material to take with them to use as reference tools when they return to work.

By completing a seminar, participants usually can earn professional credits toward certification in their designated field.

Dougherty Future to be Studied

By MARGUERITE ESMONDE

A committee to study Dougherty Hall has been formed, chaired by Fr. Robert Martin, dean of student activities.

"We're studying the entire Dougherty Hall facility in terms of needs and services," Martin said.

Committee recommendations will be given to Fr. John Deegan, vice-president for student life, and the planning office.

"The committee's recommendations should be made by about the 30th of April," Martin stated. "I expect that we could write a program for the building by the end of the summer."

The Dougherty committee consists of three subcommittees: office space and small conference space, meeting rooms and dining areas. "Each subcommittee studies various parts of the building, collecting data on use and expressed needs," said Fr. Martin. "For example, a club may request office space. They're also studying traffic patterns within the building."

Until final recommendations have been made, vacated space in Dougherty is being used temporarily. "In the short run, the pool room will act as a meeting room," Martin said. "Also, the Pie Shoppe is closed on weekends as a result of food services realizing it wasn't getting enough traffic."

Concerning the faith of the Pie Shop, Les Gies, director of food services, believes "it's too early to tell exactly what will be done." "Business there has dropped off by about 55% since the Connelly Center opened," Gies said, "but little by little we're getting some of it back."

"I know for sure there won't be any changes before the end of the school year," Geis stated. "The reason we're not jumping into this it because of the commuter. The Connelly Center is not large enough to seat everyone."

The Dougherty Hall committee includes representatives from the administration, faculty and student body. Members are Lucy Gorski, Henry Klehm, Donald Kraft, Fr. Robert Martin, Fr. John McKenzie, Edward Murray, Terence O'Toole, Laura Stecklair, Thomas Trucks, Marc Tuchman, P.J. Winterhalter, Dr. Michael Burke and Catherine Oblaczynski.

preferably two, that there would be lawsuits.

Kirscke, a Vietnam veteran, and Dr. Erhart, a woman, satisfy title IX and affirmative action obligations. While "Sherry is the worst possible choice in satisfying Title IX," stated Bader.

Bader, did note, however, that for an AAUP suit to be brought against the school one must prove flagrant violation over a period of time.

Dr. McGowan recently met with Father Driscoll to discuss the situation: "I have assurances that it won't happen again," stated McGowan.

McGowan also stated that he was satisfied with Driscoll's assurance that there would be prior consultations before any similar move in the future.

Sherry is expected to teach freshmen English composition courses next Fall.

Spring Week Blooms On Campus

By BILL DWYER

Villanova came to life as Spring Fever Week hit the campus last Friday. The Spring Fever Week committee, in conjunction with other campus organizations, such as the Villanova Union and the Resident Student Association, scheduled enough activities to give even the most apathetic student something to look forward to. Friday started off with Quad Wars, a battle of the decibels between Sheehan and Sullivan, which was sponsored by radio stations WMMR and WIFI. Members from both stations were on hand to judge and hand out frisbees and T-shirts. After that the action moved to the day hop cafeteria where the Union sponsored another BYOB dinner. Later that evening, the musical facilities of the Connelly Center were christened with a concert by Livingston Taylor.

On Saturday WKVU hosted a Sock Hop in the East Lounge. Anyone who dressed up in era clothing was given a 50% discount on admission.

The R.S.A. held an "all you can eat" picnic on Sunday in Kennedy Mall. The price was $2.00 and the picnic featured the band Montage. The Gong Show made a return appearance Sunday night in the Day-hop, with a $50 cash prize for the winner.

Monday and Tuesday featured the Greatest Legs contest sponsored by P.B.D., a Simon Sez contest organized by Bob Scheaffer, and the Union's annual Big Event talent contest in the evening in Kennedy Mall.

On Wednesday, there was a cultural arts presentation in the Connelly Center's Belle Air Terrace which featured local music groups. Broadway Marquee, a totally student produced musical, opened in the cinema in the Connelly Center, and the movie Deer Hunter was shown in the West Lounge later on Wednesday.

Spring Fever Week concluded yesterday with Balloon Day, an outdoor carnival sponsored by the Campus Ministry.

Tom Shortell, secretary-treasurer of the Union.

STUDENT COMMITTEE FOR ORGANIZATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Preserving Academic Tradition?

No one can understand why Villanova never seems to generate enough income. It's not that we don't have generous friends — look at the Connelly Center.

Still, 98 percent of the school's budget is derived from student related sources: tuition and fees, room and board, athletics. And the cost for a student to attend Villanova increases by 10 percent every year.

Villanova's endowment, at 6.8 million, is no where near that of schools like Bryn Mawr at 38 million, or many of the schools that we should be comparable to: schools with academic traditions.

Villanova has some traditions of its own. One of the better ones is that new faculty members are chosen on recommendations from experienced members of the academic departments. These experienced faculty, after screening each applicant's resume, are best qualified to pick the teachers who would satisfy the needs of the department. One of Villanova's better traditions — until recently, at least.

In the case of Vincent Sherry, Father Driscoll chose to bypass the search committee and personally appoint him as a member of the English faculty. Sherry had received a rejection letter from the committee in February. In March, he accepted Father Driscoll's appointment.

Father Driscoll bypassed the search committee to choose as a faculty member someone who was not even among the top 50 candidates ranked by the search committee. The individual chosen by Father President will be added to one of the most crowded fields in the English department. The appointment of this individual satisfies neither Title IX nor affirmative action obligations for Villanova.

No one can understand why Villanova can't generate enough income. What do those big, famous schools have that we haven't got? We have generous friends, good friends, just like they do. One of the first priorities of our development office and our administrators is to preserve those friendships, such as that of the Keating families.

Was the appointment of Vincent Sherry in an effort to preserve these types of friendships?

Ensuring a superior education and hiring an excellent faculty for the students should also be a fairly high priority of the administrators. But you can't run a school without money, they say.

Perhaps not. But perhaps the reason schools like Bryn Mawr are so financially sound is that what they work to preserve first are not the friendships, but academic tradition.

Letters

Durland Answers

To the Editors:

In view of the many letters you have received responding to my letter of February 1 to The Villanovan in which I opposed the institution of NROTC sponsored by a Christian University, I would like to make a concluding clarifying statement.

My letter was not an attack on the personal morality of any individual NROTC student. Recently I had the good fortune to welcome ten NROTC students to four of my classes to present their personal opinions on the NROTC. I would like publicly to praise the manner in which they conducted themselves.

However, as a Catholic Christian, I am called upon to witness to the teachings of Jesus, as my conscience sees them, against militaristic institutions of which the NROTC is one. I have served in the ROTC and in the army and have held ranks from private to captain. I was only able to do that because my family, government and Church said it was right to do so. I am embarrassed for P. S. Makowka, a Villanova graduate who assumes in his letter to you of March 28 that I am unfamiliar with the "just war" theory of Augustine and Aquinas, and that otherwise I would follow it. As a biblical theologian and constitutional lawyer, I am familiar with it. I did follow their theory through the army until age 38 when I realized that Church teaching is contrary to the teachings of Jesus on non-violence and love of enemy (Mt. 5:38-48) and against the accumulation of military possessions and property for the purpose of deterrence. To spend 60 billion dollars alone for 30 nuclear submarines with 720 nuclear warheads stretches our commitment made each Sunday to ask only for our daily bread. We are taught not to be anxious about our life but to seek first his kingdom and his righteousness (Mt. 6:25-34) not our political security or earthly survival.

I wish to thank The Villanovan for its generous printing of these exchanges of letters and hope that it has contributed to a learning process. From this point on I believe my thoughts should be directed to the President of the University, for the whole matter seems to me to hinge on our understanding of Jesus.

Peace and love,
William R. Durland
Assistant Professor of Religious Studies

Response

To the Editor:

With reference to the joint statement by Dr. Fred Carrier and Flip Ferrara in the Villanovan's Faculty Forum of April 11 concerning American responsibility for and reaction to events in the Persian Gulf area, it should be noted that not only the United States but a large portion of the world, including the Third World, has voiced alarm at the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. In the Security Council of the United Nations six Third World states sponsored a resolution (vetoed by the Soviet Union) calling for the withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan, while the vote in the General Assembly condemning the Soviet action was 104 to 18. This demonstrates that the fear and indignation inspired by the USSR's move is far from being the invention of born again Cold Warriors.

If the thrust into Afghanistan were an isolated act of imperialism it would be a cause for concern. When taken in conjunction with the development of a huge Soviet base in Marxist South Yemen, Soviet naval activity in the Indian Ocean, and the Soviet-Cuban intervention in behalf of a Marxist regime in Ethiopia, it becomes still more disturbing, unless, that is, one swallows the doctrine that every extension of Communist power, whatever the means employed, is a benign effort to liberate oppressed peoples.

Few advocate a knee-jerk American military response to every Marxist coup, but there is sound reason for asking if the cause of peace or justice would be served by a U.S. decision to act merely as a spectator of world events unless attacked on its own shores.

Best Wishes

To the Editor:

If you will allow me the use of your column, I would like to extend sincere best wishes to my former students who will be graduating this May 1980. Because I am currently involved in a faculty exchange at a college many hundreds of miles away from Villanova, I will be unable to participate in this year's commencement exercises. Regretably, I will therefore not be able to share in the happiness of this important occasion. To those many seniors, however, whom I have come to know in the past four years, I salute you. May your future years be filled with much joy, health, and prosperity.

Sincerely,

Appreciation

Dear Editor,

We, the residents of Fedigan Hall, would like to extend our heartfelt appreciation to Fr. President Driscoll for his interest and participation in celebrating Fedigan's fiftieth anniversary. We would also like to thank those who made our celebration possible, especially Fr. Reilly, John Delaney, and Ed Wallace. We would also like to take this opportunity to wish Fedigan Hall another fifty years of participation in campus life at Villanova.

Sincerely,
The residents of

Request

Dear Editor,

We, a couple of concerned seniors, would like to request that the "Missing Chains" in front of Dougherty Hall be replaced by our graduation date, May 18, 1980. Since the completion of the new C.C., there has been a total change in the basic mode of hanging out at Villanova. Chains somehow tend to give a more relaxed attitude than sitting stiffly on a cement wall, totally barren of good green grass.

As we leave Villanova, we would hate to see the future hangers known as "Wallers." To "Chain Hang" is to "Cat's Eye" and as we leave this year, we've already had one of these, if not both, taken away. We would hate to lose two great institutions so very dear to us.

If per chance the chains aren't replaced, we urge the class of '81 to continue the Villanova tradition of "Chain Hanging." For now, seniors live it up because we're almost at the end of the rope. With the beautiful weather upon us, let's get the chains back where they belong and spend our last few days "Chain Hanging."

Signed
A Couple of Bummed Seniors
P.S. LONG LIVE THE PIE SHOP!!!!!!

Special Olympics

To the Villanova Community:

The Special Olympics Committee for 1980 would like to extend an invitation to all Administration, Faculty, Staff and Students alike whose families have been touched by a "Special" child or adult. In the process of registering participants for our annual Special Olympics to be held on Sunday, October 5th, 1980 on campus we would like to first turn to our own community.

The only limitations for participants are that they be between 8 and 60 years of age and be a resident of Pennsylvania. Our games will host the Pennsylvania State Soccer Skills Championships as well as a Frisbee Skills contest for our participants.

Registration may be made through the Villanovans For Life Office (Ext. 760) room 206 Dougherty Hall. Our final registration date for Villanova family and friends will be Monday, June 30th. Any questions may be addressed to Linda Deady or Lisa Duprey c/o Villanova Special Olympics VFL, Dougherty Hall, Villanova University, Villanova, Pa. 19085.

All of our "Special" sons, daughters, brothers, sisters, nephews, nieces and friends are more than welcome to our Special Olympics which proves itself special for all involved.

RSA Picnic

Dear Editor:

This past Sunday the Resident Student Association sponsored an outdoor picnic and concert. I would like to take this time to thank all those who helped me, without whom the event would not have been such a success.

I would first like to thank the weathermen for being mistaken in their weekend prediction for rain. All of the Departments here at Villanova, especially Food Services, Security and Maintenance. They were extremely helpful and cooperative in all my requests. The people in the Student Activities Office, who patiently put up with my many questions. "Montage" for providing excellent music. Finally an extra special thanks to all those who stood alongside of me in our battle to feed the many hungry picnickers.

Thank you,
Craig Hudson '82

Commemoration

Dear Editor,

This "poem" was written by Judith C. Connelly, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John F. Connelly who donated most of the money required to erect the Student Center on your campus. John F. Connelly is presently President and Chairman of the Board at Crown Cork and Seal Company, Inc. in Philadelphia. Your readers might enjoy her words, written on the occasion of the opening of the Connelly Center, March 9, 1980.

I Never Thought I'd See the Day —

I never thought I'd see the day when Mom and Dad would actually pay to give college students a place to play
Things sure have changed
Growing up was tough — for between me and you
Ours were the strictest parents anyone knew.
Curfews were early — and when ever time flew
Our welcome home would be Dad in a stew!
Many a date would leave on the double—
Mr. Connelly, looking sleepy, somehow spelt trouble.
So perhaps you can see why it's a humdinger that after putting six of us through the wringer now mom and a dad — each is a swinger—giving the students of dear Villanova such a beautiful stage on which to act Casanova!
All I can say is — have fun while it lasts for before you know it, college days will have passed and justice will prevail!
O lucky coeds, hear this advice so sound—
"If you spend too much time in the Center—
if you play the clown
if you start cutting classes and your marks slip down
When you're looking for a job — Don't try Crown!!!

In the meantime — have you realized the Connelly Center is the first building on Villanova's campus named after a woman — n.b. — Josephine and John Connelly.

Best wishes,
Sister M. Henrietta

U.S. to Blame for Iran?

By ROBERT A. MONSERRAT
Chairman, Conservative Party
Villanova Political Union

Jimmy Carter, in an effort to extend human rights to Iran, kept the Shah from using conventional and traditionally effective methods of dealing with and restraining revolutions. The natural result followed. The unpopular Shah was deposed and the revolutionaries now hold the reins of power in Iran.

Since then, have the revolutionaries reciprocated, extending human and civil rights to their people? Quite to the contrary, the Ayatollah, and dictator, Khomeini also uses brute force to gain obeissance from his people. A repressed and thoroughly cowed populace accepts the farce of representative government at gunpoint.

Indeed, Khomeini, in gangland style, has violated our diplomatic sanctuary, seizing and holding hostage U.S. citizens in a barbaric and cowardly act of terrorism, internationally condemned and unprecedented in the annals of civilized government. Is this new regime, then, any more considerate of human rights than the last? Certainly not. Did Jimmy Carter's naive attempt at fostering human rights help either the United States or Iran? It changed nothing for the better, nay, it made things far worse for both Iran and the United States.

That the Shah was a monarch of the most absolute means goes without question. Reflect, however, on the dramatic changes in the fortunes of both countries that have resulted since his deposure.

For 37 years, beginning in 1941 and ending in his abrupt and untimely departure in 1978, Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlevi was the staunchest supporter and closest ally of the United States in that region of the world. With him as the cornerstone of our containment policy in the Middle East, we were consistently able to stop cold the constant Soviet military, economics and insurgent pressure to expand towards the world oil supplies and ultimately more importantly — warm sea water ports on the Indian ocean. Through those decades, Iran was both physically and fiscally strong, gaining wealth through her oil export industry and best of all, she was at peace. Let's not forget either that the billions of dollars in arms purchases Iran made throughout those years employed tens of thousands of Americans. The United States also enjoyed a secure oil supply protected on land by a highly disciplined, well trained and equipped Iranian army and at sea by the fleet that rules the waves — the U.S. Navy. The prestige and influence of this country was never higher. Our flag was feared and respected everywhere. Americans could travel safely. Indeed, our relationship with the Shah made us the aribtors of power in the Middle East and we, as a people, economically benefitted from it tremendously.

Now that the Shah is gone, the situation is hardly recognizable. Terrorists, mere hoodlums, attack our embassies and people abroad with startling and alarming impunity. A group of fanatically religious old men threaten to cut off our oil supplies which would bring our economy to a grinding halt, thus throwing the world's richest nation into a depression that would make the 1930's look like 'the good ol' days.' Incompetently led by a vacillating and inept weakling clearly unable to defend our interests and citizens abroad, the United States is rapidly becoming the laughing stock of the world.

In the Shah's absence, the Soviet's conquered Afghanistan and now stand a mere 300 miles from both the oil fields and the Indian Ocean. Iran, retreating into a 'never-never land' of 14th century religious puritanism is nevertheless plagued by unemployment and racked by a rapidly collapsing economy and faces rebellion in the outlying provinces. She must now deal with the ever encroaching Soviets, previously to the North and the West, now also to the East and is practically at war with Iraq. Finally, the oppression of the people has not ceased. Under Khomeini, it has exacerbated.

It seems that in changing one despot for another, Iran has gained nothing and lost everything. What has Iran gained in deposing the Shah? How wrong then, was the United States in backing the Shah?

If the U.S. must "accept the blame" for the crisis in Iran, the finger must point directly at Jimmy Carter. Innocently, he thought that being humanely considerate to radical Muslim revolutionaries would bring Iran's people freedom and a basis for a new U.S.-Iranian relationship. From my heart, I laud President Carter's intentions to elevate the human conditions in the world. Unfortunately, international politics operate on a different moral plane. The superior threat of economic power and coersive force of arms, not love between men, dictates international relations. Jimmy Carter's inability to appreciate the harsh realities of real politics has led him to blunder, grossly miscalculating the consequences of his actions and exposing this country to a sincerely grave and long lasting threat to our national security.

Editor's Note: This article was written in response to last week's Faculty Forum column written by Dr. Fred Carrier and Flip Ferrera, titled "U.S. Must Accept Blame for Iranian Crisis."

TKO Sponsors Big Brother Day

Activities Prove Beneficial to All

By BETTY RUTKOWSKI

At 7:30 a.m. last Saturday morning, most of us were recuperating from hangovers, or catching up on sleep lost in the night before. Not so with the brothers of the Tau Kappa Omega fraternity.

They were driving all over Montgomery County assembling little boys between the ages of eight and fourteen for a Big Brother program in St. Mary's gym.

The day began with a basketball clinic in the morning run by Assistant Basketball Coach Pete Gillen. He ran the boys through various basketball drills and exercises.

Gillen was later joined by Head Coach Rollie Massimino and other members of the coaching staff. Massimo had just flown in from Boston that morning for the program, and was absolutely wonderful with the boys.

"It's really important that you all learn to be good guys," said Coach Massamino to the boys. "And the only way to do that is to work hard and practice, just like in basketball."

"I'm so happy to see the kids happy and smiling. That's what it's all about!"

Villanova varsity basketball player Stewart Granger also helped out at the clinic, dazzling boys with a display of various basketball tricks.

The boys then went through various drills with the help of their "Big Brothers," ending in shirts-skins scrimmage games. You couldn't tell who was having more fun in these games — the Big Brothers or the boys themselves.

"I'm so happy to see the kids happy and smiling. That's what it's all about," said Jay Connaghan, public relations director for the fraternity. "They've never been exposed to this kind of thing before."

The day continued with a basketball film provided by the Athletic Department and ended with an outside barbecue in the afternoon.

The brothers of TKO had been planning this day since last semester. According to Jack Daley, one of the brothers, they're going to try to make it an annual event.

Tau Kappa Omega was just approved as a fraternity here at Villanova this past February. Their aim is a balance between being a social and service fraternity.

"We want to bring back the old spirit to Villanova," explains Jeff Sherry, one of the original organizers of the fraternity.

Several service projects have already been completed this year, but the Big Brother day was their biggest effort.

The brothers worked in conjunction with the central office of the Big Brothers Association of America, located in Norristown.

According to Roxanne Bobak, staff worker, "not many organizations want to run programs like this. It's a shame, because the kids get a lot out of it, and so do the Big Brothers."

The boys in the program Saturday were some of over one-hundred boys waiting to be assigned to Big Brothers.

Thanks to the brothers of Tau Kappa Omega, it turned out to be a wonderful day for all involved from the Big Brothers to the little brothers to anyone watching what was going on.

In the midst of all the "emergency" runs to the bathroom, and watching Jeff's team win the scrimmage, there was a beautiful rapport established binding those kids of all ages together.

Running Develops Your Mind

By SHARON MILLS

Graduate students enrolled in the Masters Program for Counseling were treated to a special aspect of psychology this past Saturday. "Running and Psycotherapy," a presentation given for Dr. Morgan's counseling course, examined the relationship between the mind and the body through running. Dr. Austin "Ozzie" Gontang, a psycotherapist from San Diego, gave a very enlightening program on the psychological aspects of running, and how it enables an individual to become more in touch with his or her own body.

Gontang's ideas center around his belief that, "Your body reflects your mind reflects your body." According to him, running becomes a practice for some people, with concentration as the key. In his treatment of some psychological disorders, he uses the running process as the beginning of treatment. First he runs with his patient, under the condition that he or she will run a number of times on their own between sessions.

The whole idea is to start the person on a path of self-realization, and running shows the patient that they need no one other than themself as a crutch. Through this, a discipline gradually develops, something that Gontang feels is present in our culture through people doing things they personally like to do. When a patient discovers he or she enjoys running, a discipline develops that flows into other aspects of the patient's life as well.

Besides the psychological side of running, Gontang also explored some physiological proponents of it. One aspect he discussed was the breathing process. Through his studies, Gontang has found that people cut their breath off because they're trying to gasp for air. The road to correct breathing is to control it through rhythm. Naturally present in many activities such as singing and dancing, rhythm becomes the key element in regulating and controlling exhalation. Gontang's view is to use your mind and nature to control things like breathing.

Another physiological aspect developed by Gontang was muscle control, particularly in the area of the lower spine. Runners tend to compress the body down, which results in the jamming of the lower spine. Rather than allow this to occur, Gontang suggested that "holding your body up" is the best posture alternative. As far as other muscle control goes, psychological concentration on a

Public Relations Promotes V.U. Image

By BARBARA ANNE HIGGINS

Interpreting university ideals and objectives to the press, acting as a liaison to the media, and promoting an honest, upstanding image for Villanova: these are the duties of Eugene Ruane, Director of Public Relations. The job requires a tremendous amount of foresight and communication knowhow, plus a true understanding of the needs of both the public and the students. And from what I saw of Mr. Ruane in my brief interview with him, he more than fits the bill.

From his office in the basement of Alumni Hall, Mr. Ruane explained to me the general functions of the Public Relations Office. Primarily he sees his job as a representative for the press, a media mediator, if you will. Along with his staff, including assistant Catherine Taylor Brown and staff writer Mary Lou Pendlyshok, he has the ongoing job of editing both the Squires (the alumni publication) and Reflections (the faculty and campus staff publication). They also assist other departments with promotional or informative publications, such as newsletters or flyers.

Mr. Ruane started out at Villanova as a member of the Sports Information Office in the 1950's. In 1955, he personally created the office of Public Relations, which he has headed ever since. Also during this period he had the job of moderating the then very conservative campus newspaper, our own Villanovan. Even at this time, he was displeased with the task of censorship which he had to impose on the paper, but says he's happy to see how times have changed.

Eugene Ruane, director of public relations.

Reflecting on these changing times and the past two and a half decades he has spent in his job, Mr. Ruane recalls the late 60's and early 70's as "the greatest challenge of his career." Handling the press coverage of on campus peace demonstrations and sitins during these difficult war years was a delicate task, one which had to be handled with tact.

Despite some trying times, Mr. Ruane seems pleased with his position and the job his office has accomplished over the years. He has had the opportunity of meeting and working with many celebrated people, including Gerald Ford, John F. Kennedy, and Martin Luther King.

Although college enrollment is decreasing rapidly as the years go on, Mr. Ruane seems confident in Villanova's ability to continue to merit community support. And with people like him promoting our public image. There is no doubt that it will.

Last Friday, the Villanova Union, along with WMMR and WIFI radio stations, sponsored the first annual Quad-War. Starting at 4 p.m., Sullivan Hall blasted WMMR out of its windows, and Sheehan Hall blasted WIFI in return. Frisbees, pins, bumper stickers, bookcovers, calendars, and night lights were given out.

On the right are members of LESP, who moved their living room out into the quad to root WMMR on to victory over WIFI.

CENTER FOR CONCERN

Draft Symposium To Be Held

By PERRY HAZELTINE

In the wake of the crises in Afghanistan and Iran and in light of the draft registration that is going through congress right now, a lot of us have much to think about concerning our views on military service. I am not an alarmist suggesting that anybody is going to be hauled off to basic training tomorrow, but I am saying that we have the responsibility to ourselves to begin thinking about our own moral, patriotic and Christian ideology.

I believe it is wrong to think that anyone who is seriously questioning their personal involvement in the military service is some radical idealist who is out of touch with real world reality. When is there a better time to question these things than when faced with them as a possibility, yet when there is ample time to search our hearts? Or how can it be somehow anti-American to question the draft registration, since our country is founded upon the ability and need for the people to question the government. Each citizen not only has the right, but they have the responsibility to question their government.

Questioning something does not necessarily mean that one will not accept it. But everyone must seriously look at one's country, one's church, and one's self, to form an informed moral decision that is one's own. It is my hope to encourage people, who have not already begun, to begin thinking about the draft registration.

During the last two months I have been a part of a small group of teachers and students who have been concerned with helping the Villanova University Community think about questions surrounding the draft registration. We have come up with the idea of having a symposium entitled Registration/The Draft: Making an Informed Decision. The symposium, which will be held on Monday April 21 will consist of three speakers addressing different areas, with each followed by questions and discussion.

The first speaker, Jay Richard Rosner ESQ, will give information on the new registration legislation and talk about citizens legal rights as they pertain to the registration. The second speaker, William Durland Ph.D.J.D. will bring out the Christian perspective, giving the traditional justification for military service on one hand and on the other he will offer justification for conscientious objection. The third speaker Bernard Walsh will talk about his personal experience as a Catholic conscientious objector during the Vietnam War.

The Symposium has been designed for anybody who wants to do serious thinking about the draft registration. Special emphasis has been placed on discussion about conscientious objection because this option offers unique problems and is hard to gather information about. At the symposium, handouts will be available with information for those wanting to follow up. Also lists of names and organizations of people who are willing to give personal counseling will be offered.

The symposium will be held from 2:30 to 4:30 in the Connelly Center Cenema and will be sponsored by Campus Ministry and the Center For Concern.

Anyone interested in getting information about the registration or who wants to make a conscious decision about registering is encouraged to attend.

Art Majors Exhibit Work

After four years of art studies, senior art majors must present an exhibit.

The first art exhibits in the new Art Gallery in the Connelly Center are now on display. The six graduating seniors in the BFA Program will exhibit their art work from April 10 through May 13, 1980.

These art exhibits are the culmination of a studio art major's studies. Each studio art major is required to mount a major exhibit of their art work produced over the four year program of studies. The "Senior Project" which is part of the Student's exhibition, is an investigation of a theme in two or more media.

Last week the work of Candace Butler was featured in the new Art Gallery. Yesterday, Sandra Jahnle's exhibition opened. Her "Senior Project" deals with characters from the Beckett play, "Waiting for Godot," as depicted in sculpture and drawings. Next week Martha Miller's cloud studies in drawings and paintings will be mounted followed by the still-life flower works of Shelagh Warren. In late April and early May the works of Joan O'Brien and Ed Kleissler will be displayed.

All members of the University community are invited to attend and enjoy these exhibitions. The new Art Gallery in the Connelly Center is located on the Plaza Level of the Connelly Center.

DTD's Dual Purpose: Social and Service

By DEIRDRE FLANAGAN

What is it about the Delta Tau Delta Fraternity that attracts the young men of Villanova University, not to mention the girls? Why do these men pledge the famous Delt fraternity? Their desire doesn't reside in being the first on their wing to wear the official "frat hat." Chris Connor, ex-president of the fraternity, says it's because, "the Delts are leaders. They're regarded nationwide as one of the strongest fraternities in existence, and that's an unbiased, objective statement from a Delt." Not only are they the defending champs of Greek Week and intramural hoop-ball, they're also the defending socialites on and off the V.U. campus. If you haven't attended a Tech HI-FI cocktail party, you haven't had the "Delta Experience."

The members of the fraternity believe involvement is important so they organize as many functions as possible. Some of their successes were the roller disco party, and the St. Patty's Day excursion to N.Y.C. To guarantee the comfort of their passengers, they even included a bathroom on the bus. This not only counter-balanced the weight of the kegs in the front, but it also eliminated dancing the aisles.

On the community service level, the Delta Tau Deltas hosted parties at homes for the mentally retarded and handicapped. The Entertainment featured the famous guitarist, Joe Corcoran, and his pledge pals who helped in coordinating a "sing along, and then showered the patients with drinks, munchies, and gifts." On two consecutive weekends, inner-city children were bussed to V.U. for a day of programmed activities. Wayne Piseo said, "I personally feel that the program's aim was for us to experience life from the giving side, instead of the receiving end."

Some of the members of the DTD Fraternity.

Pledge Ed Joel commented, "It was a very enrichening experience, and it increased my concern for mankind."

Brother Tom Croonquist wrapped it up by saying, "It was an altogether transcending experience."

Presently the fraternity is in the middle of pledge season and has twenty-one candidates. When asked what pledging consisted of, Mr. Connor disclosed a general outline of the pledge's duties. Their dress code entails a jacket and tie on Mondays and Fridays, and the traditional cap which is worn all the time. To make sure their pledges keep up good grades, DTD requires a three hour study session Mon.-Fri. in the reserve room. From there the pledges visit the various homes, socialize with the "Big Brothers, and generally help around the house," concluded Mr. Connor.

Though some may consider Delta Tau Delta a rather encumbersome fraternity to pledge, Mr. Connor regards this as a necessary test to measure the pledge's endurance. "In life one has to be willing to work hard to attain his goals, and pledging DTD runs along the same lines. In the long run those who do subsist and become brothers appreciate their success and value their attainment more so." In a word, Mr. Connor feels being a member of Delta Tau Delta Fraternity is a worthwhile accomplishment.

Besides lecturing, Gontang also led the group in some running and exercise activity. All who participated seemed to develop a better idea of the interaction between mind and body. Psycotherapy and running proved to be an extraordinarily interesting topic.

Fedigan Celebrates 50 Years

By MICHAEL A. CATALANO

One hundred and thirty-eight years ago, Villanova started as a small urban high school. Today the campus has grown into a large University consisting of 43 buildings. Of these 43 buildings, 18 are resident halls. This year Fedigan, a resident hall for men is in its fiftieth year. As a fiftieth anniversary present the dormitory received hallway carpeting and painting in preparation for this past weekend's celebration.

In recognition of one half century's tradition, the residents of Fedigan and their friends joined in a recreational and spiritual celebration. Saturday afternoon the fun began with a party on St. Mary's field. In spite of the dim predictions of rain, the party began at noon, and the weather managed to stay nice throughout. With a crowd of about 75 people the day was highlighted by various games of softball, football and volleyball. Music accompaniment also added in making it a fun time for all.

The weekend festivities came to a close for Fedigan residents and guests Sunday morning, with a special Mass celebrated by Father Driscoll. Father spoke on the need for us to appreciate the purpose of a Catholic University: namely to incorporate our faith in Christ in every aspect of our lives. Father Reilly and Father Enright assisted Father Driscoll in concelebration. The instrumentation for the Hymns was provided by Bob Philburn, Paul Anatrella and Dave Hutnik with the guitar, clarinet and violin respectively. The Mass was further enhanced by the readings from Val Reisig, Andy Martin and Scott Parrish.

Afterwards, everyone who attended the Mass was invited to a reception in the Coor Hall Lounge. Coffee and donuts were served throughout the duration of the gathering.

The success of the weekend helped to create new spirit in our lives at Fedigan and in dormitory life in general; a spirit that we hope will continue to grow on the campus of Villanova University.

Liv Taylor At Connelly Center

Dave Coskey Photo

Livingston Taylor in concert at the Villanova Center Friday, April 12.

By SUE WARD

Livingston Taylor took the Connelly Center in style Friday April 12. Sporting a navy three piece suit, Taylor was introduced by Ed Shockley, disc jockey for WIOQ. Performing to two capacity crowds this talented musician played guitar, piano, and banjo. Taylor composes approximately 70% of his own material, but two of his most popular songs were written by others: "First Time Love" by a friend Pat Alger and "Out of this World" by Alger's wife.

Preferring to play alone, "L.T." rolled from selection to selection to selection, at one time breaking into a medley of "rambling half songs". In addition he performed "That Story Don't Ring True." "I Got My Pajamas On" and an a capella rendition of "Fifth and Vine." Noting the original songwriters, Livingston reworked "The Wanderer", "You Send Me" and "Somewhere Over The Rainbow" in unusual meter and tempo. He also sang a favorite cut "Carolina Day" from his first album.

The 29-year-old artist quickly established rapport with his audience. Many of his humorous anecdotes were based on awkward teenage experiences. A minor criticism of Taylor's performance might be the consistent mellowness of his music, although this was counterbalanced by the audience's clapping to Liv's banjo playing. The coffeehouse atmosphere of the Villanova Center enhanced the confortableness of the concert and even the half hour delay in starting failed to disturb the crowd. Taylor received a standing ovation at the end of an hour and a quarter performance.

In an after-the-concert press conference Taylor preferred to talk politics rather than music. Despite his country boy appearance Taylor's views on world issue are anything but simple. He strongly advocates the nationalization of the oil companies, nuclear power, and the relocation of all energy production facilities to space.

Beyond his interest in his world is his fascination with his job as a performer, "I love my job," he said on stage. That showed in his performance.

Ronstadt Keeps Rocking

By BILL ROCK

Since the release of her latest album, Mad Love, the talk has been of a new Linda Ronstadt, one that has changed under the influence of New Wave. Gone are her curly, shoulder-length locks and, supposedly with them, the wispy innocence that has captured the hearts of males throughout the world for over a decade.

Riding this new image, Linda Ronstadt rocked her way into Philadelphia last Thursday evening to appear live at the Spectrum along with Danny Kortchmar.

After a 30 minute set, Kortchmar's band retired and the stage was set for Ronstadt. Not knowing what to expect from this supposedly new image, the fans anxiously waited to see if Linda had indeed changed.

The wait was not long. The lights dimmed and a spotlight found the shapely, sensuous body of Ronstadt on center stage. The hair was short and straight; the clothes were black and tight. Was this indeed a new Linda Ronstadt?

Opening with "Mad Love," the title song from her latest album, one had to wonder. But any fears were soon put to rest. She broke into that unique blend of country and rock-n-roll that has made her the First Lady of modern music. Linda Ronstadt is Linda Ronstadt. There could be no changing that.

She got the crowd clapping and stamping its feet to "It's So Easy," and then drew a collective sigh from every male in the audience with Hank Williams' sentimental "I'm Still in Love With You." With a masterful balance of fast and slow, rowdy and mellow, rock and country, Ronstadt captivated every person in the Spectrum.

Perhaps two songs stood out during the evening. First, she mesmerized the crowd with "Blue Bayou," a song that epitomizes Ronstadt's ability to bring a tear to your eye and lust to your heart. Then she announced a song with which she claimed to have had a love affair. "For a long time, I could not get enough of it," she said. "Then, for a while, I got very tired of it and took it out of the act. But like a lover, it came back again." The song was "Silver Threads and Golden Needles," and its performance was beyond words.

Ronstadt closed her regular set impressively with "You're No Good," "Back in the USA," in which she proved she can rock with the best, and "How Do I Make You." Her encores consisted of "Heat Wave" and "Desperado." The latter impressed on every fan in the Spectrum that short hair and leather could never change Linda Ronstadt's unique way of bringing a song to life.

Norris Theater Renovated

After three years as a porno house, the Norris Theater, 125 W. Main St. in Norristown has been refurbished and converted into a pop-music concert hall. Bill Catanese, the theater's new owner, wants to make the Norris "a showcase of talent" with "a young-person theme." A longtime Norristown resident, Catanese put a lot of money into the theater to regenerate it after its three years as a porno palace. The Norris is 50 years old and was built around the time that talkie movies first came out. Two murals and two stained glass designs tell stories about entering the modern era.

In many ways the Norris has what Cantanese described as "a utopia-type of situation." It is the only suburban concert hall that plays pop and rock groups. It is closer and safer than Philadelphia plus it is easily accessible by public transportation. With four large high schools in the area (Plymouth-Whitemarsh, Norristown High, Archbishop Kennedy, and Archbishop Kenrick) Catanese would appear to have a ready-made market. However, he stated that "only 10% of the people who come here are from the local area."

Man acts charge such high prices that only very large houses could afford to book them. In order to pay for Cheap Trick, for example, he would have to sell tickets for $20 because the theater only holds 1750 people (275 seats can be added). When they first took over the Norris, Cantanese and his employees worked very hard to bring in concerts. However, they are disappointed in the returns they are receiving for their efforts. Also, Catanese feels that the groups were paid too much. Therefore, he has told the people who book bands that if a group is passing through Philadelphia on tour and needs a place to play, then if the time and price are right he is interested. "We're not going to work at the energetic pace we were," Catanese said.

Catanese is especially puzzled that the public is not supporting the Norris. "On concerts we make just enough to lose". For Maynard Fergusen he needed to sell 1200 seats and sold 960. "For the first two months we had people calling up saying 'that's not the real Kool and the Gang at the Norris?' "

"When I first said I wouldn't do porn, many people commended me. But those same people have never been inside the theater."

If concerts cannot become financially viable by January 1, 1981 the Norris will fall back on films, since "Movies have done well for us." "I don't want this to sound like sour grapes, because it's not," he said. However, Catanese cannot understand the lack of community response. Every show had been professional, "there is not a bad seat in the house, and there has not been one altercation." Catanese is beginning to think that "maybe the area really doesn't care."

Rick Nelson and the Stone Canyon Band will be at the Norris April 19, and David Bromberg with Scott Jarrett will be there April 25.

Dark Side of Nijinsky

By IRENE KING

If Herbert Ross' film, Nijinsky, intends to bring the legendary Vaslav Nijinsky, male ballet dancer par excellence, to life, it is, indeed, a disappointing effort. The average movie-goer, possessing limited background knowledge of ballet, would come away from this film with a conception of Nijinsky as a homosexual madman rather than the artistic and eccentric genius he was reputed to be. Instead of emphasizing the brilliant talent that made Nijinsky famous, the film limits its focus to the love triangle between Nijinsky, the domineering entrepreneur of the Ballet Russe, Sergei Diaghilev, and Romola de Pulsky, the woman who idolizes Nijinsky and later marries him.

Hugh Wheeler, the screenplay writer, based the storyline on Nijinsky's own diary and memoirs as compiled by his wife, Romola. The film attempts to recreate young Nijinsky's rise to ballet stardom under the wing of Diaghilev and his world-renowned dance company, and the subsequent breakdown of his mental health, his relationship with Diaghilev, and his dance career. Nijinsky played by George de la Pena, a talented dancer but not so talented actor, is a Polish peasant who is discovered by the mentor of the Ballet Russe. He is an intense brooding youth whose only close friend is Diaghilev. Nijinsky relies solely on this man for the emotional support and affection he craves in his transitory dancer's life. Alan Bates, adeptly and convincingly, assumes the role of the protective, often overpowering Diaghilev. The relationship between Diaghilev and his protege, Nijinsky, runs smoothly until Diaghilev chooses a new young boy to dance the lead in an upcoming premier ballet. Words fly and the two part on angry terms.

On the rebound, Nijinsky confides in an understanding corps ballerina, Romola de Pulsky, and marries her on an impulse. Leslie Ann Browne, of Turning Point fame, portrays the young dancer. Unfortunately, she receives no opportunity to display her dancing talent and doesn't take advantage of the opportunity to display her acting ability; her performance in Nijinsky is a letdown after the Turning Point.

When Diaghilev learns of Nijinsky's marriage, he acts on his motto that "no man is indispensible" and terminates Nijinsky's contract with the Ballet Russe. At the same time, unfortunately, Nijinsky realizes how much he needs Diaghilev; he is miserable without him. Romola, seeing her husband's anguish, begs Diaghilev to reconcile with Nijinsky and to allow him to continue dancing with the company. Being the proud man that he is, Diaghilev refuses to accept Nijinsky. Hence, Vaslav Nijinsky, unstable to begin with and devastated by Diaghilev's rejection, retreats into insanity. He spent the last thirty-three years of his life in mental institutions.

While the film successfully recapped the negative aspects of Nijinsky's life, it failed to do justice to the positive aspects. Nijinsky choreographed many famous ballets and was a magnificent performer himself, but, unfortunately his contributions to the dance world were underminded by his "scandalous" homosexual relationship with Diaghilev.

Leslie Browne as Romola attempts to comfort her husband, Vaslav Nijinsky, portrayed by George de la Pena, in Paramount pictures "Nijinsky."

Warren Zevon

Bad Luck Streak In Dancing School

by AMY MACLACHLAN

The Rock world is filled with many celebrities. Some have real talent and others don't. Those who fall from stardom rapidly make up the lower class of the rock society. The jet set, those who attain real success, band together and work with each other to produce the perfect sound found on their brilliant releases.

Warren Zevon is an important link in this chain of stars. His latest release, Bad Luck Streak In Dancing School, reflects more facets of talent than the star of India. The Eagles, Linda Ronstadt, Jackson Browne, and Joe Walsh all participate in making this album a big plus for record collectors. For Zevon fans this album reaffirms his total brilliant insanity. If genius is one step from insanity Zevon has taken that step more than once.

The title track Bad Luck Streak In Dancing School, is an apologetic plea that reverberates with the well known, "Swear to God I'll Change!" Sure Warren! This song is followed by the FM hit "A Certain Girl". Zevon adds a touch of humor to the tender subject of being a secret admirer. "I've tried to make her time and time again, but still were introduced as nothing but friends." The last song on the first side, "Play It All Night Long" is possibly the most sarcastic selection of the album. This is a very blatant cut on country music. "Sweet Home Alabama, Play that dead band's song, Turn those speakers up full blast, Play it all night long." Jeanie Needs a Shooter, is a ballad that Zevon cowrote with Bruce Springsteen. This is a very interesting combination of Springsteen's brilliance and Zevon's insanity. It tells of a shot-gun romance that ends abruptly with a very angry father. "Her father was a lawman, He swore he'd shoot me dead, 'cause he knew I wanted Jeanie, and I'd have her like I said." Gorrilla You're a Desperado, is an added bonus to this very interesting album. Zevon speaks of a very unusual role — reversal. Somehow he is mugged by a gorilla at the L.A. zoo who trades places with him. The gorilla runs off with the BMW and the apartment keys while Zevon is left in his cage. Possibly this is where Zevon really belongs.

Musically and lyrically, this album is a gem. Warren Zevon has been around for a while participating but not actually standing in the spotlight. Although this release was not terribly popular with some other critics, I believe that it could nonetheless make it big for Warren Zevon.

Elvis Costello

Get Happy

by Robert Ballard

Elvis Costello, everybody's favorite yet least lovable emotional fascist, is smiling. Swear to God, check the cover of his new lp, "Get Happy", and you can detect a slight trace of a grin. You might also notice by inspection that what is listed as side one on the album cover is side two on the vinyl, and vice-versa. Yet these are the only two inconsistencies on what is Elvis' best structured and most cohesive effort to date.

On "Get Happy", Costello abandons his armed and angry forces and singlehandedly challenges the perils of love in a lonely, but hard fought battle. His artillery: the English language, which he warps and manipulates to his advantage, then drills at his foes in machine gun rapid fire. Through twenty songs, ten on each side, Costello emotionally jabs and spears his way through dangerous battlefields of love and lust.

Some songs on "Get Happy" ('I Stand Accused', 'Beaten to the Punch') explode with the same intensity of past favorites, such as 'Goon Squad' and 'Pump it Up'. Likewise, new cuts 'Can't Stand Up for Falling Down' and 'Human Touch' boil over with frustration and urgency similar to "This Year's Model" 'Lipstick Vogue' and 'There's No Action'.

However, on "Get Happy" there is a shift in emphasis from the familiar hard driving songs, with Elvis practically spitting the words, to smoother, more somber melodies, similar to 'Alison' (My Aim is True). Steve Naive's church-like organ is effective in 'Opportunity' and 'Secondary Modern', two quister cuts which demonstrate Costello's versatility as a singer and a songwriter.

'New Amsterdam' and 'B Movie' might be the top tracks on an album with no weak cuts. But every song catches your ear eventually. However, with ten songs on each side, the album requires a number of listenings to get into. Perhaps Costello and producer Nick Lowe are at fault for this strategy. Fortunately, there is no loss of sound quality due to long playing time.

"Get Happy" is not Costello's best album. But it is a unique and enjoyable album nonetheless. Elvis's bittersweet vocals and the Attractions' pulsating rhythm, like always, cannot be denied. Besides, twenty Elvis songs for the price of seven to ten is a good buy for your entertainment dollar.

Sabotage

By CHRIS SLAWECKI

John Cale's performances in the ground-breaking Velvet Underground and on various Nico, Stooges, and Patti Smith albums would probably have made him an underground legend regardless of his solo career. His solo albums are as awesome and diverse as the musicians contributing the backdrop for Cale's tortured images. In Chris Spedding, Phil Manzanera, Brian Eno and Phil Collins, Cale mined an extremely rich musical vein. And, he is best described as a murderous showman since the night he decapitated a live chicken onstage during a particularly intense gig in Texas.

Cale

So, why does John Cale bleed for the few at CBGB's, while the Knack goes platinum? Because Cale is simply too good at depicting scenes we'd all like to leave in our nightmares to escape being the Elephant Man of rock. Lines like, "It's enough to make them wann kill you/But not enough to make them wanna die for you", are not suitable for framing in today's rock sensibilities, but ones like, "Rock and roll is goodtime music/Listen to it!" are?

Sabotage is about the nightmare of war, and it easily adapts to Cale's mayhem. Unfortunately, Sabotage sounds like it was recorded inside a metal trashbin and this, along with the disorientation that his frenzied guitar playing is approaching, does much to blunt the razor's edge that Cale skirts during this show. "Mercenaries (Ready For War)" opens the set, and Cale is so accurate in his portrayal of a controlled, mindless killer that you can hear his eyes gleam when he proclaims, "My rifle is my friend."

Sabotage is not pretty, and probably won't be too popular, but it's as intense and forbidding as its creator. This is a grim prophecy, underpinned by Cale's sardonic humor and psycho-rock. Just remember what Joe Louis said to Billy Conn before they fought for the heavyweight crown: "You can run, but you can't hide."

Heart

Bebe Le Strange

By JERRY ARTH

Heart, a Seattle-based band, has a distinctive, if repetitive sound. Ann Wilson's incessant, driving vocals, her sister Nancy's guitar, and the unique ability of the group to harmonize, create a sound which has not changed with four albums. Heart's latest release, Bebe Le Strange, proves to be no exception to the tried and true formula.

There is no divergence on this album from the mixture of simple, hard chords, a thumping beat in the background, and the inimicable soaring vocals of Ann Milson which can be found on all of Heart's previous works. There is no deviation, either, from adding three or four touching ballads to balance the record. Heart is simply re-hashing the same material over and over again, album after album; yet they remain so damned listenable and appealing.

The title track of Bebe Le Strange is archetypical Heart at their best. The guitars meld and clash, the beat goes on, and the singing alternately rises above and dips below the music. This one song could be used as the complete anthology of Heart. "Rockin Heaven Down," an intense celebration of rock music as a whole, highlights the band's unique talent for ethereal harmonization. One of the most pleasant surprises on the first side is a quiet acoustic guitar solo by Nancy Wilson, "Silver Wheels". The little song is as refreshing as a sip of wine in the midst of a long, heavy meal.

"Even It Up" is the standout cut on Bebe Le Strange's second side. The bitchy, virulently liberated facet of Heart rocks out through the staccato vocals, simplistic and almost dogmatic. The remainder of this side is mellow music, thoughtful but numbing. "Raised On You", done entirely by Nancy Wilson, has a hypnotizing piano beat, but on the whole, the side is somnolent.

Bebe Le Strange is a predictable album. Heart has tried nothing new or inventive, just stuck to the same recipe that made their previous albums so successful. If you don't object to hearing the same thing over and over again, then I would recommend that you rush out and buy the album.

Rush

Permanent Waves

By MARK WERNER

The musical entity that is Rush is not an easy thing to define. It may well be that the only term loose enough to encompass anything of the concept of Rush is simply "progressive rock."

Rush — the Canadian power trio with ten years, a handful of U.S. gold records, a classification by WMMR as one of the three most underrated bands, and next to no radio airplay behind them — have nine albums' worth of hits, including the six miniepics on their recent LP Permanent Waves (Mercury), currently the 10th best selling album in the country.

Permanent Waves overflows with a kind of self-confidence. A near-perfect marriage of heavy-metal rage and arty Britrock maneuvers directly descended from Yes and Genesis, the album not only finds blonde, cherubic, classical guitar aficionado Alex Liefson finally stepping out confidently from Jimmy Page's shadow and the almost-ugly Geddy Lee sanding off some of the more rough edges of his high rooster's crow, but it is Rush's most accessible offering to date.

Side 1 begins with the song that opened Rush's musical gates to the AM-FM audience. The Spirit of Radio provides the listener with a fine example of the album's fortuous rhythm changes, bombastic riffing, scattered musical "hooks" and lyrical excursions into mythology and philosophy ("For the words of the profits/Are written on the studio walls" implies the radio programmers' and FM prejudice against Rush). Musically, Neil Peart — drum kit extraordinaire and main lyricist — offers some very nice percussion work here complimented by Lee's Chris Squire-type bass runs.

Free Will is one of the few tracks that actually moves. Initially, the new sound of Rush is quite evident — a powerful guitar intro laced with a string ensemble, added to smooth vocals. Then, a short but effective bass guitar bridge brings back the sound of old Rush, complete with a classical electric guitar spree and Lee's rough bizzare voice.

Jacob's Ladder, the last cut on the side is very reminiscent of "Cygnus X-1." If there is to be a boring (gasp!) song on the disc, this is it. A haunting bass, an eerie voice, and slow rudimental snare drumming are only an intro to repetitive power chording.

Entre Nous opens up side 2 and offers at the least a very, very catchy chorus. Basic guitar chording, some background acoustic work, and effective spurts of the synthesizer make up the entirety of this song.

Different Strings the only cut that comes close to being a ballad is a typical Geddy Lee song. A very nice acoustic guitar piece complimented by a catchy piano part and Lee's very smooth vocal and bass contribution ultimately focus on a classical guitar exercise that ends the song much too abruptly.

Probably the most adventurous and most interesting piece of work on the disc is Natural Science, a three-part epic that concludes Rush's ninth album effort. Part 1 combines the sound of a 12-string acoustic and Lee's reverbed/delayed voice with the sound of running water to create an almost pretty picture. A quick tempo change and soon one is experiencing hyperspace. Here, at last, the song really starts to move and Rush has already painted their picture. Peart finally has some space to display his very underrated talent with a nice drum break that effectively leads to a guitar solo featuring some very impressive double picking. Another tempo change starts part 3, creating a whole differed mood, again featuring the flying fingers of Lifeson and an incredibly powerful ending where, at one point, Peart very efficiently plays at least 8 drums.

At the very least, Rush's Permanent Waves is "an exercise in self indulgence." The band found a suitable irony in the album title. "As far as I can see," offers Lee. "new wave old wave yellow wave — it's all the same. The water doesn't come and go. The waves do."

On The Road

It was easy enough to sit there listening to hour after hour of irrelevant gibberish. No danger here . . . These dumb bastards didn't know mescaline from macaroni.

H.T.
Fear And Loathing In Las Vegas

An apt analogy — Hunter's account of a Las Vegas drug forum for cops and my impression of Where the Buffalo Roam. Where indeed. And why are they roaming? Why did we? Lured to Philly to see this twisted screening, we enter the city with dwindling supplies of cash and chemicals.

There are sinister forces at work in this strange and evil land. The car we had left strategically on a city sidewalk was abducted and we were left with nothing but an oil spot. Adrift in Rizzo's wasteland, unarmed and white, we were doomed. And the doomed are just somebody else's lunch.

Mescaline and macaroni. This cheap, inaccurate, bastardization of a legend best forgotten is less a chronicle of Hunter Thompson's career than a sensationalist flick aimed at the hard core drug fiend who might just as well hallucinate in a movie theater as anywhere else.

Perhaps I'm not being fair, but then who was fair with us? I don't know why our car was towed but one that wasn't had a bumper sticker that said "GENTILE."

Bill Murray is on drugs. A horrible thing to say but the alternative is that he isn't on drugs and that the dazed mumbling and borderline incoherence he presents as acting is the product of a legally straight but morally, philosophically, and professionally bent mind. You can do better than that William, come on, I love you. Now get out of here.

If the factual basis for Murray's character was a little removed, the basis for Lazlo, Thompson's revolutionary lawyer, wasn't even the right color. A buffalo is brown. And, similarly, so was Oscar Acosta. Brown and proud of it. But just so they could sell a few more tickets to white kids on pot, the creators of this blasphemous mess turned him from a Chicano prophet into a Hungarian weed lawyer. His white, teenaged clients are shown being sent up the river for nothing more than possession of pot. As if there's something wrong with that. I'll say this much — When the day comes that ignorant young punks on drugs aren't put in jail — then, our society will be one toke over the line. But that's best left to another time. A time when we have the guns. At this point Bill Green's Junior Fascists still have the guns. And our car. All we had was five dollars, some low grade fireworks, and a fistful of rubber checks. Fortunately that would be enough to do the trick. Which is pretty much what the Universal Pictures boys were doing — tricks. Whore-ing their way down Market St. with this painted lady of the movie.

I would be remiss if I didn't mention that I really enjoyed this flick. But I really enjoyed wandering through Philly at night looking for a way out of this sinkhole of depravity that any city truly is. It doesn't take much to please me.

The most sickening aspect of all this theatrical waste is that as long as Thompson gets his royalty check, he doesn't care. The suicidal bastard has allowed this foul drama to unfold like a celluloid blotter and now even the bad reputation he had is on the line.

"Broadway Marquee" Sparkles

By EILEEN MCCAFFREY

If you don't see Broadway Marquee you're missing a great show. Be prepared to be impressed, for this is not an amateurish student production. Director Ralph Spinosa obviously knows how to put on a polished show.

Broadway Marquee is a review of five major musicals of the 70's — Pippin, Evita, Chicago, A Chorus Line, and Jesus Christ Superstar. The cast is almost entirely undergraduates whose only previous experience is participation is high school plays. Spinosa himself is a freshman at Villanova who has been in summer stock (the equivalent of off-Broadway) and semi-professional theater in New York. With the help of minimal set and costumes and a small band, the cast creates an amazingly good show.

Initially the players were stiff, but they soon loosened up. Pippin (Gary Villapiano) came into his own during the song "Right Track," performed with the Lead Player (Ralph Spinosa). Villapiano has never been in a show before, yet he has two leads as Pippin and Peter in Jesus Christ Superstar. The chorus worked well together from the beginning, but really began to click well together in the "Finale" of Pippin.

The mood of Evita is entirely different from that of Pippin, but the cast conveys the change well. Velma (Marisa D'Orazio) and Roxie (Paula G. Garell), the female leads in Chicago, are excellent, as is the male lead Billy (Robert J. Virbroker). All have stage presence, good voices, and relationships with the audience. All the numbers in Chicago are so entertaining, humorous, and well done that it is difficult to choose highlights. In "Cell Block Tango," six murderesses tell the stories of their crimes. "Roxie" and "Both Reached for the Gun" are also very funny and very energetically performed.

A Chorus Line really tests the company's ability to work together as a chorus and they are so stunningly good that one no longer believes this is a student production. "At the Ballet" is nearly flawless, and the choral numbers are all impressive as are the very humanly funny solos by Diana (Theresa Burger) and Val (Debbie D'Arcy). Diana's solo, "Nothing" tells of her experiences in acting class trying to be an ice cream cone or a tree and not feeling anything "except . . . that this bullshit was absurd." Val explains that she never made shows before and found out why when she saw that her dance card said "Dance: Ten, Looks: Three." To solve that problem she had herself done over by a plastic surgeon.

Certainly the funniest song from Jesus Christ Superstar is "King Herod's Song." John F. Hardman as Herod does a hilarious striptease while playing a difficult part superbly. Again, the chorus works together well, especially during "King Herod's Song" and "Superstar."

As an actor, Spinosa (who plays the Lead Player in Pippin, Che in Evita, the M.C. in Chicago, Zach in A Chorus Line, and Judas in Superstar) is superb. His voice, stage presence, and ability to communicate to the audience nonverbally are all professional. Such numbers as "Magic To Do" and "Glory" from Pippin, "Oh What a Circus" from Evita, "Heaven on their Minds" and "Superstar" from Jesus Christ Superstar demonstrate his versatility and his ability to shift mentally from playing a light, happy role in Pippin to more melancholy brooding ones in Evita and Superstar.

Whatever the show's minor flaws, they are more than made up for by the energy, dedication, and enthusiasm of the cast. Where else could you see the major numbers from five Broadway musicals in one night for $2? If Spinosa carries out his plan to direct a musical every year until he graduates, we are in for some good shows.

Streak Continues

By PETER J. RYAN

Off to one of the first starts in recent years, the Villanova Wildcat baseball team currently sports a 12-2 record. Recent victories over Temple, LaSalle, Georgetown and Widener have put Coach Larry Shane's men well on their way to improving on last spring's 17-9 mark.

A young team, the Cats have made a name for themselves thus far by overpowering opponents. Scoring an average of better than nine runs a game, allowing only four, the Wildcats stand a fine chance of competing in post-season play. The team's batting average is an impressive .326 with Bob Loscalzo (.466 average, 5 triples, 4 homers) leading the way. Bill Duryea and Tom Harrison are pacing the team with four and three home-runs, respectively.

Junior Phil Sartori's one earned run in thrity innings pitched was recently awarded with Budweiser's Athlete of the Week award. Behind Sartori's one earned and the 2-0 record and a 0.30 ERA are Charlie McDermott (3-0), Steve Skammer (4-1) and Ed Szymanski (3-1). Sartori has also picked up the team's only four saves.

The Villanovan baseball preview of March 21 pointed out the inexperience of the infield as the main obstacle to a winning campaign in '79-'80. Thus far, the Cats have committed twenty-nine errors for a respectable .933 fielding percentage. The ability of the younger players to work together has been the key to this year's success.

Villanova's strong pitching staff led the Wildcats to a 14-6 victory over Drexel last Wednesday. Charles Guida Photo

Today the Cats are competing in the EAA Tourney after recent games against Army and Drexel. Future opponents include Fordham, Delaware, Rutgers, and Princeton.

Laxmen Suffer Losses

By BRUCE MURRAY

Thus far the men's lacrosse team (0-4) has had a tough season. The laxmen have suffered losses to Lehigh (16-10) Drexel (15-5) Swarthmore (10-8) and Monclair State (13-8).

According to Coach Lee Stevens, the Montclair State game has been best effort so far. Senior Co-Captain Bill Hook scored five goals from his crease attack position and senior Bob Adams had four assists in the game. Hook finished second last year in NCAA Division I statistics in goals scored (51 and Adams led the nation in assists (45). Other goals in the game were scored by junior Chris Clark (I) sophomore Mark Jonasaka (I) and freshman Dennis Connor (I).

"On the bright side", Coach Stevens claimed, "Goalie Bob Hughes played the best game of his Villanova career and probably the best game of his life. Hughes made 24 saves on the day many of which were critical to our staying in the game."

"We've had a rough start and we've made some mistakes," Stevens continued, "We're hoping to turn things around and win the next six games."

This year the laxmen are members of a newly formed league, the Mideast LaCrosse Conference, of which Coach Stevens is treasurer. Other members of the new league are Montclair State, Morgan State, Kutztown State and C.W. Post (Wednesday) and Morgan State (Saturday), two very important games.

The next home game will be on April 23 against Kutztown State.

Olympics Wind Down

By BOB CONWAY

The Resident Hall Olympics is slowly nearing the completion of its initial year. Assistant Dean of Men Tony Martin's project has not been without its share of difficulties, but it has added a new dimension to resident living.

The major problem with the Olympics itself is the lack of communication but that problem seems to be diminishing as the Olympic concept continues to catch on with the students. Tony Martin is hoping the RSA will take the Olympic concept and impliment it into their programming next year. Martin said, "The area representatives will know what to

Six Cats Named All-Stars

By JIM FEMIA

The Villanova ice hockey team, who finished runners-up to Penn State in the quest for the Hannigan Cup this season, placed five out of six players on the MACHC All-Star Team. The Icecats also captured six individual honors in their best season in the team's history (14-6-3).

Senior Assistant Captain Steve Carr (Seton Hall Prep) who got off to a slow start, carried the Cats through the final part of the season before being knocked out of the playoffs with a torn knee ligament. Carr, who was elected first team center, finished the season with 8 goals and 8 assists for 16 total points.

Senior Mike Kane (Norristown, Pa.) was elected first team left-wing. Kane, who was one of the most consistent forwards in the league finished the season with 12 goals and 16 assists. Kane gained opposing coaches and players respect for his outstanding checking and defensive skills. Mike was also known for his quick shot and aggressive style.

The first team right-wing was sophomore Tom Curran (Chelmsford, Ma). Curran, who was the most feared forward in the league, finished the season with record breaking statistics. Curran netted 24 goals, passed out 18 assists for 42 total points. Curran shattered many MACHC records when he scored seven goals verse the Univ. of Delaware. Curran was also awarded the Most Valuable Player in the league.

Sophomore defenseman Paul LaFond (Arch Bishop Williams, Hingham, Ma) was elected first team right defenseman. "Festus" broke a Villanova record this season for most points by a defenseman with three goals, 15 assists for 18 total points. LaFond was also voted Most Valuable Defenseman.

The first Team goaltender was junior Tom Margiotti. Margiotti, who played for Herentals, a Division I club in Belgium last season, and was the leading goalie in the Belgium Cup, compiled a 3.76 goals-against-average, which was second best in the league. Margiotti is also a strong candidate for the Most Valuable Player of the playoffs. Margiotti kept the Icecats in the playoffs with three great performances in the finals versus Penn State.

Freshman Chris Mancuso (Bricktown, NJ) was selected second team center. Mancuso was second on the team in total points with 21 goals, 18 assists, for 39 total points. Mancuso was also voted Rookie-of-the-Year. The sneaky center scored many clutch goals throughout the entire season, including a brilliant performance in the finals. Mancuso, along with Tom Margiotti, is being nominated for Most Valuable Player of the playoffs.

Villanova Coach S.J.O. Probst was also the proud recipient of Coach-of-the-Year honors. Probst, the winningest coach in Villanova history, posted his 75th victory this season. When asked about the future of the Icecats, Probst commented, "We'll miss the five seniors next year but with all the younger players returning from this year, we should be all set. We also have a few recruits coming in next year including a goaltender from Chicago, a forward from Sweden and a defenseman from Finland."

Hawks Die Again

By ANN WOLFORD

The women's softball team opened their 1980 season by defeating St. Joe's 23-7. St. Joe's opened the game by scoring an unearned run in the top of the first inning, but the Wildcats retaliated by scoring four runs in the bottom half of the inning.

The rally was started by a lead-off walk to Patty Nowlan, followed by a single by Kathy Byrnes. P.J. Beatty then cleared the bases with a triple. The scoring was completed when Kathie Beisel hit a home run in her first time up in her college career.

Villanova continued to score as they tallied five runs in the second inning, four in the third, five in the fifth, and five in the sixth inning. The offense was led by Beisel who scored four runs and had three hits including a triple and home run. Beatty also scored four runs and Shaula DeMarco had four rbi's.

Eileen McEvoy was the starting pitcher. She was relieved by Diane Messina in the bottom of the fourth. DeMarco finished up the game pitching the last two innings. All three pitchers did very well with McEvoy striking out six, DeMarco allowing only one hit and one walk, and Messina picking up the win.

The Wildcats next game was a 10-0 loss to West Chester. Villanova picked up only two hits — singles by Nina Wieczorek and Messina. The high point of the game was in the second inning with Nova losing 1-0. There was a West Chester runner on second and the batter lined a clean single up the middle, centerfielder Nowlan fielded the ball and fired a perfect strike to catcher Denise Reid who blocked the plate and tagged the runner out.

The Wildcats next game was a 10-1 defeat of Widener. The scoring did not start until Widener opened up the top of the fourth with a home run.

DeMarco pitched the entire game picking up her first win. She struck out seven, while allowing only three hits and one earned run in her first complete game.

Villanova evened their record with a tough 4-2 loss to Trenton State in a well-played game. Trenton opened the scoring with a run in the second. They then scored two in the top of the sixth.

Meanwhile the Cats were playing tough defense, but could not get their bats going. Finally in the bottom of the sixth, they broke out of their slight slump when Nowlan and Beatty scored on a bases-clearing double by Beisel.

Charles Gant Photo

Trenton picked up another run in the seventh, making it 4-2. It appeared as if the Wildcats might pull it out when Jean DeSanctis led off the bottom of the seventh with a single. But Trenton bore down and retired the next three batters to end the game.

Gridders Gear Up For Fall

By ROBERT L. P. WALSH

The Villanova gridders began their annual spring drills on Tuesday, April 8 in preparation for the 1980 football season and the familiar ring of shoulder pads and helmets can once again be heard at the Wildcats' practice field. Head Coach Dick Bedesem views spring training as having three primary objectives; finding replacements for graduating starters, experimenting and making changes and establishing an even distribution of talent on the team. Because spring training is limited to only twenty days within a period of thirty, Coach Bedesem is anxious to achieve these goals quickly before spring training culminates in the annual Blue-White game at 1:00 on May 3.

The football team loses a talented foursome of senior starters consisting of safety Bernie Hober, tackle Steve Duda and end Tom Jensen on defense and tight end Paul Columbia on offense. In order to plug these holes in his squad, Coach Bedesem may rely on members of his incoming freshman class. Villanova's recruiting has been limited to twelve freshmen, but Bedesem feels that they are all quality players and that several, including Kevin Ingram of Dobbins Teach of Philadelphia will develop into outstanding talents.

The Wildcats' spring practice has been hampered somewhat because of the limited number of players available to suit up. Receivers Willie Sydnor and Tim Robinson are currently on duty with Jumbo Elliott's track squad, quarterback Bob Loscalzo is now playing baseball and ten other Wildcats are lost because of injury. Coach Bedesem has been experimenting with his limited offensive squad by breaking formation and altering the look of the Villanova wishbone attack. A wing back in motion and a double split end are some of the offensive sets being developed.

Looking ahead to the 1980 season, Caoch Bedesem is hoping to have more than a winning season by keeping his team competitive in every game against a schedule which includes the likes of Maryland, Navy and Temple. Pointing to a lack of depth which the major football powers are not troubled by, Coach Bedesem states, "Eleven on eleven we can play with anyone, but overall depth hurts us." "If we can stay healthy, we'll be really tough."

Tracksters Capture Fifth

By KERRY LYNCH

Battling a strong wind, the Villanova women's track team captured fifth place at the Delaware State Invitational on Saturday. The competition was as stiff as the wind with over 15 teams entered. Weakened by injuries, the team's effort was especially hampered by the sidelining of injured senior, Brigid Leddy.

Villanova's one entry in the field events was freshman high jumper Peggy Stewart. Clearing the bar at 5'6", she took second place.

The hurdles were no obstacle for Amelia Cain and Stewart. Cain placed fifth in 400 meters and Stewart sixth in 100 meters.

As usual, the Villanova women fared better in the distance events.

Jennifer Whitfield led her heat at a blistering pace throughout the 800 meter run to be overcome at the line by Carolyn Hughes from Catholic University. In addition to Whitfield's second place, Daria Varaitis took fifth place.

In the 1500 meters, Sue Shea took the lead from the gun. Close behind her were two other Villanovans, Bev Reilly and Carol Gilsinger. Ahead for the majority of the race, Shea was overtaken by Delaware's Mary Shilly 200 meters from the finish and had to settle for second place. Reilly and Gilsinger stayed strong throughout and finished third and fifth respectively.

Known for their two mile and distance medley relay teams which hold several meet records and a National Collegiate record, Villanova's Wildcats succeeded again in both these events.

Varaitis, the freshman replacement for the injured Leddy, ran the one mile anchor leg of the distance medley; bringing the baton in for a strong first place finish. The team of Whitfield, Cain, Shea and Varaitis completed the 2 1/2 miles in 12:00, establishing a meet record.

The two mile relay team of Cain, Reilly, Shea and Nancy Gallagher led throughout their race finishing first, well ahead of Howard and last years winners, Rutgers.

ALUMNUS STARS FOR CELTICS

By DAVE COSKEY

Growth and experience are normally achieved through living everyday life. For those gifted few who are able to excell in their endeavors, success can have strange effects. Especially when that field is professional sports, the once-meek can become monsters.

Such is not the case for one Villanova graduate. After almost ten years in the NBA, Chris Ford would have no trouble fitting in back at Villanova. "I've always tried to stay the same, and just be myself," says the 1972 graduate.

One of Chris Ford's highlights at Villanova was scoring his 1,000th point. Here he is shown being honored by former hoop coach Jack Kraft.

Ford's high school coach Bill Deibert, who has known Chris since his CYO days at St. Micheals in Atlantic City says, "Chris was always a super kid, easy to coach and talk with." According to Deibert, Ford's least polished skill when he came to Holy Spirit was what he is known today, shooting. This really is not so ironic. For Ford was the kind of kid who had to work hard for everything he wanted. While being a talented player in high school, it was hard work and long practices which led to his success in later life.

Ford arrived at Villanova in the midst of its basketball heyday. In fact, in his junior year the Cats lost in the NCAA finals to UCLA only to have that ranking revoked because senior Howard Porter had already signed a pro contract. "We knew nothing about it (the Porter incident), in fact we found out about it like everyone else-in the papers," says Ford. Although slightly overshadowed by the likes of Howard Porter, Ford was a steady team player. Enough so that he still ranked eleventh on the Cat all-time scoring list and still holds Villanova's assist record. "I've always tried to be a team player and do whatever my team needed," adds Ford.

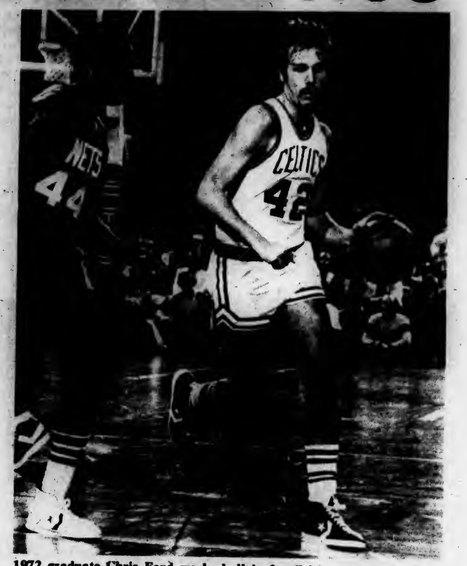
"I chose Villanova for two reasons, first the fine academics and secondly because they had a good athletic program with great people," says Ford. He still has vivid memories of life on the Main Line "Greatest four years of my life," he says. Among those things that still stand out the most are Kelly's, Beef and Beer, parties, Fieldhouse games, fun and "most of all, the people." Ford goes on to explain that "Villanova has got to have the finest group of people, on a whole, that I have ever been associated with."

Sounds like something out of a recruiting brochure, but he really is sincere. More importantly though, the people who speak about Ford say the same things about him. "I've known him almost all his life and he always has and always will be the same," explains Deibert. He goes on to explain how Ford still comes home to talk to area kids and help them out when he can. Ford also still finds time for his friends from school and at times you may even find him involved in a pick-up game with a few of them. Funny, but even today as the father of two, Ford spends off seasons the same way many Villanovans do "I still spend my summers at the shore. Usually I just lie on the beach, maybe play a little tennis."

Drafted out of Villanova, Ford ended up with the Detroit Pistons. Detroit was turmoiled, at times using up three coaches during Fords tenure there. He handled the situation pretty well though, being elected captain by his fellow teammates. Respect through the NBA started with the Pistons and culminates today with a new team. He left Detroit in a trade for Jack Tatum.

Today Chris Ford is in an elite fraternity. This one includes Dave Cowens, Pete Maravich and rookie sensation Larry Bird: Chris Ford is now a starting guard for the Boston Celtics. "Hard work and team play make for longevity in sports, but alot is still luck and getting the right breaks," according to Ford.

Starting tonight in Boston, Chris Ford will have a chance to overcome the loss to UCLA at Villanova, erase a winless freshman record at Holy Spirit, and forget the problems at Detroit. Tonight the Celtics square off against the Sixers and have a good shot at going all the way. As for Chris Ford, as his high school coach says, "it couldn't happen to a nicer guy."



1972 graduate Chris Ford works ball in for Celtics against the Nets.

Olympics

expect and they will be able to forward the information on."

Another problem with the Olympics is that it only includes male residents. To make the Olympics campus wide would add a great burden, "With the ideal situation we still had problems," said Tony Martin. "Commuters have a legitimate complaint and we hope to include them in the future, but the concept will have to click with the residents before we can branch out."

Many of the events are in its final stages. A champion will soon be crowned in backgammon and basketball. Foul shooting was completed Monday. Sam Morial of St. Mary's had the hot hand and captured the foul shooting crown. Second place was won by Ken Dewyngot. Trailing behind in third place was Sullivan Hall's, Mike Lanigan.

Basketball, a long time favorite, has begun its play-offs. Many good teams are competing for the most prestigeous crown of the Olympics. The team to beat is Atheletes Foot. This team went through the St. Mary's competition without suffering a loss.

Commentary

Kuhn to Blame

By PAT FLYNN

The 1980 baseball season is under way, for a little while, at least. The players have threatened to strike next month and the outlook for settlement is not good. Yes, the big green taffy-pull is on again and the fans will end up the ultimate loser, hands down.

So who's to blame? The players are easy to condemn. They're paid too much and they keep wanting more. But, what the heck, there's more than one name on those contracts and there has yet to be a report of an armed player storming an owner's office and demanding the loot at gunpoint. So let's examine the owners.

When this whole free-agent fiasco began several years ago, the owners moaned and rang the alarms, pointing fingers at the players as greedy low-lifes with no regard for the future of the game. Then, just as abruptly, the owners fanned the flame by letting the salary structure of baseball get way out of hand.

So the Yankees signed Catfish Hunter to a big contract and the latter responded with a 63-53 record over five seasons before calling it quits last year. Hardly a great investment.

Even worse was the beating that the Atlanta Braves took in their Andy Messersmith deal. They signed the right-hander to a $1.75 million contract and received a grand total of 16, count 'em, 16 victories over two years before dumping Messersmith into the Yankees' lap.

Not to be outdone, New York gobbled up Don Gullett, who turned in one good year and has since disappeared off the face of the earth with a bad arm. Cleveland took a shot at Wayne Garland, who has chipped in with 19 big wins over three years. Sorry, Tribe.

Sure, there have been successful free-agents. Don Baylor and Reggie Jackson, for instance, have performed well. Moreover, these players put fans into the park, alleviating the owners' liability.

But does anybody race out to the stadium to watch Milt May? The San Francisco Giants must think so, since they signed him to a multi-year contract worth a backstop made of gold. And the San Diego Padres must have John Curtis confused with Lefty Grove. Why else would sane minds offer a long-term bonanza to a mediocre southpaw with a losing record?

Obviously, some restraint is in order and the owners are not capable of it on their own. Nor should the players be expected to lower their demands. Don't look a gift horse in the mouth. There must be another source of sanity. Enter Bowie Kuhn.

In case you've forgotten, Kuhn is the commissioner of baseball. He runs the game. Or at least he's supposed to. He shows up at the All-Star Game every year. And at the World Series. But in-between?

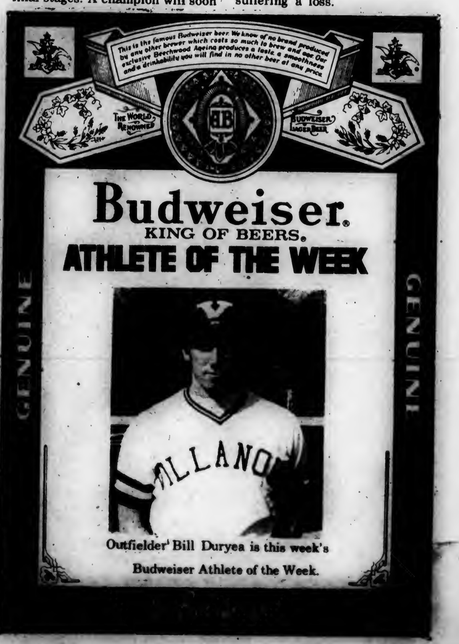
Well, he does other major tasks, such as fining Baltimore Orioles' President Jerry Hoffberger for allowing the governor of Maryland to throw out the first ball at a Series game. He tells the youth and former-youth of America that Willie Mays has no integrity because Mays works for a hotel that has a casino. He botches up trades and makes sure that Texas has to send its leading hitter (Oscar Gamble) to the Yankees when the Rangers only intended to unload some minor-leaguers. In short, he doesn't contribute much to the state of the game.

In other sports, commissioners like Pete Rozelle and Larry O'Brien have helped to curb the effects of free-agency through measures that have been generally accepted by players, owners and fans alike. But in baseball, a man with quite an impressive legal background fails to get involved.

The players may be greedy, but they're not stupid.

The owners may be stupid, but at least they put up a fight.

And the commissioner sits in his ivory tower, minding small details, and watching the game go down the drain.



Outfielder Bill Duryea is this week's Budweiser Athlete of the Week.

Bush Visit Stirs Campus

By SUZANNE TAVANI

George Bush, Republican candidate for President, addressed and fielded questions from a Standing Room Only (SRO) audience of Villanova students Monday morning in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center. Bush stumped the area for support for his floundering campaign prior to Tuesday's critical Pennsylvania primary in which he upset Ronald Reagan with 54% of the popular vote. The Villanova Political Union sponsored the appearance.

Dressed conservatively in a light gray suit, the former Director of the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) began his address with a humorous anecdote regarding the coincidence of speaking in the "Connelly" Center, in reference to his former opponent for the Republican nomination, John Connally of Texas.

But Bush quickly changed the tone of the morning attacking President Carter and rew a thunderous applause when he declared, "the number one objective,, and I believe it transends party, is to get rid of Jimmy Carter as President!" Other verbal assaults at Carter focused on what Bush referred to as his treatment of Congress "like the Atlanta legislature for three years," and his shirking the responsibility of taking blame for a United Nations (UN) resolution in which the U.S. posted an anti-Israel vote.

A theme of strength of family, belief in God, and the strength of and service to country pervaded Bush's address in which he stated support for the voluntary army, and the drafting, when time calls for it, of both men and women. In response to one student question, Bush commented that "ghetto kids shouldn't take up guns while the rich kids get Ph.D's," referring to Vietnam era draft regulations.

Bush in an interview with Chris Cherry of WKVU, blasted the Carter administration for tripling inflation, driving interest rates to an all-time high, and "inventing the Economic Misery Index where he added unemployment to inflation and did nothing right." Bush however proposes the use of tax revenue, a $20 billion supply tax cut,s avings credit, and a cut in government spending to stimulate the recessionary economy. "Carter talks economy and doesn't act it," continued Bush, "it's a lot of Georgian rhetoric."

Questions on foreign policy received a great deal of attention, with Bush calling for a U.S. policy built on deterring the Soviet Union and "a three ocean navy, an oceans alliance, and a restoration of cuts which would give a position not of weakness but of strength." Bush further blasted Carter's "naive thinking that intelligence is immoral," and stated that the Iranian crisis is not a failure of U.S. Intelligence.

After the questions and answer session, Bush lunched in the Belle Air Terrace with Political Union Officers, Marianne Lavelle, editor-in-chief of The Villanovan, Fr. Robert Martin, dean of student activities, and Marc Tuchman and Graham Poole of the Connelly Center.

Center Film Screenings In Doubt

Marc Tuchman, director of the Connelly Center.

By FRANK J. DOHERTY

Due to the costs of using the Connelly Center Cinema, the Villanova Union did not show films there this year, and may not show them there next year, according to Mike Mercurio, visual arts coordinator of the Union.

In order for an organization to present a film in the Connelly Center Cinema, the organization must hire a Connelly Center staff projectionist.

Mercurio estimates that the cost of hiring a projectionist for the 1980-81 film series would take one-fourth of his department's film budget. "I cannot justify spending $500 to $1,000 right off the top for window dressing," he said.

He also said that such a large amount of money off the top of the budget could cause either a decrease in the quality of films presented, or an increase in the cost of admission, or both.

Mercurio said that in addition to not being able to supply their own projectionist, the Union would not be allowed to man the ticket booth outside the cinema.

This year, the Union was not permitted to show the film "Animal House" in the Connelly Center Cinema, because the film "would not set the right tone for the building."

Mercurio said that the management of the center would not accept the film for presentation in the cinema for that reason.

Lucyna J. Gorski, program director for the Villanova Union, said that the Union would move the film series to the cinema if they could get a clarification of the scheduling policy of the center.

Fence Alteration Topic Of Last Senate Meeting

By JERRY DOUGHERTY

A debate on the wisdom of removing barbed wire from the fence located along Lancaster Avenue marked the University Senate's final meeting of the academic year.

The meeting, held in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall last Friday afternoon, defeated a motion calling for the removal of the barbed wire but later approved a modified motion calling for a study of alternatives to the wire.

Outgoing SGA President P.J. Winterhalter proposed a motion asking that the Senate "recommend to Father President Driscoll that the barbed wire located in the hedges along the front of campus parallel to Lancaster Avenue be permanently removed."

After an extended debate which centered on the question of how such a removal of the wire would affect safety along Lancaster Avenue, Winterhalter's motion was defeated by a margin of 13-6, with 10 abstentions.

Dr. Jeff Hahn, political science professor, offered a revised motion. It read, "The University Senate recommends to Father Driscoll that he urge the administration to seek alternatives to the barbed wire parallel to Lancaster Avenue because it is aesthetically unappealing."

Hahn's motion was passed by a margin of 27-0, with 3 abstentions.

Winterhalter in introducing his motion said that his sole concern was with the aesthetic problem caused by the presence of the barbed wire.

He said that the wire served no practical purpose because it had been originally installed to dissuade pedestrian crossing of Lancaster Avenue between Ithan Avenue and the Chapel. "It has failed in its ultimate purpose. It isn't a detrimental factor," Winterhalter declared.

Winterhalter concluded his introductory remarks by suggesting that the barbed wire ought to be taken down "in order for Villanova not to have the scenic look of a concentration camp."

Rev. Patrick J. Rice, O.S.A., vice-president for administration, countered Winterhalter by remarking that the need for barbed wire — to prevent persons from scaling the fence or cutting holes in it — is "symptomatic of a sickness on campus."

VILLANOVAN Wins Top Honors

PCPA Presents Paper With Seven Awards

Top honors in editorial writing and three awards for photography were among the seven awards received of this year by the Villanovan, newspaper of record for the University, in the annual Pennsylvania Collegiate Press Journalism contest.

The results of the competition were announced last week at the PCPA convention, held at the Carnegie-Mellon University.

Fourteen schools throughout the state, including Temple, La Salle, Lehigh, Penn State, and University of Pittsburgh competed in this year's contest.

Marianne Lavelle, editor-in-chief of the Villanovan, received first prize in Editorial Writing for her December 7 editorial," "A Decade of Quiet Change," which compared the Villanovan and the University of 1969 to 1979.

Villanovan Photography Editor Dave Coskey won second prize in Sports Photography with his picture of track relay runner Derek Harbour at the IC4A's, printed in the December 7 Villanovan. Coskey's photograph of Pope John Paul II in Philadelphia, which ran in the October 6 issue, won third prize for News-Feature Photography.

Coskey, along with Terry O'Toole, former editor-in-chief of the Villanovan, received honorable mention in Photography Layout for a photo essay in the December 7 issue, entitled "The Year in Sports."

Sophomore sportswriter Patrick Flynn received second prize in Sports Columns for his November 2 article entitled "Cosell's Irritating Incompetency." The article, which criticized ABC sports announcer Howard Cosell as "over-exposed" and "out-of-control," evoked response in a letter to the editor which criticized the "emotionalism" of the writing.

Dave Dear, former managing editor of the Villanovan, received third prize in the Advertising category, with his ad for J.D. Sachs Wilderness Outfitters in Bryn Mawr. In last year's PCPA competition, Dear rec ived first place in Advertising for his "Get It Every Week" Villanovan ad campaign.

In News Writing, Marianne Lavelle recieved an honorable mention for her October 5 story, "Girl Injured in Train Mishap," about the fatal injury of freshman Dorothy Zimmerman on the Paoli Local railroad tracks at the Villanova station.

This is the third year the Villanovan has competed in the PCPA contest. Last year, the newspaper received six awards, including top honors in News, Advertising, and Sports reporting, honorable mention in News and Sports Features, and third place in Advertising.

Upsets Mark Pa. Primary As Bush, Kennedy Win

By BILL CLARK

"I was very surprised with the results on the Republican side," said Dr. Priscilla Hopkirk, chairman of the political science department, in a follow-up interview to the one appearing in last week's Villanovan.

This surprise centered around the fact that George Bush defeated Ronald Reagan in last Tuesday's Pennsylvania primary by a fairly large margin. "Apparently, the money and time that Bush spent in Pennsylvania worked," said Hopkirk.

On the Democratic side, Hopkirk was not surprised by Kennedy's victory here in Pennsylvania (Note: At the time of this article's writing, Senator Kennedy's margin of victory had been dwindling, so the results were not yet definite.) Hopkirk said in last week's Villanovan that she felt Kennedy had a fairly good chance to win Pennsylvania.

In analyzing the vote in Pennsylvania, Hopkirk that it was difficult to disentangle the issues. "I feel that many of Kennedy's votes were really anti-Carter votes and I suspect that many of Bush's votes were really anti-Reagan votes," said Hopkirk.

Hopkirk still feels that Carter and Reagan will be the nominees of their respective parties, "although the Pennsylvania primary results do throw in a greater amount of uncertainty."

As far as local interest is concerned, Dr. John Logue, a Villanova Political Science Professor and Democratic candidate for the nomination for the U.S. Senate, was soundly defeated by Peter Flaherty. At the time of this writing, no statewide figures were available, but Dr. Logue's office estimated that he definitely got less than 10% of the vote. Logue was unavailable for comment.

Hopkirk also addressed herself to the primary system in general. She said the reason why there are not more quality candidates running at this stage of the year is because the primaries are too drawn out. "Very often, at the beginning of the campaign there is one group of candidates and later on in the campaign there is another," said Hopkirk.

She also said with each state having its own primary, very often elections for national office can be influenced by local issues.

As a solution, Hopkirk proposed having 5 or 6 regional primaries held over a shorter period of time. "The system of direct primaries just haven't been working out. The media has been having a tremendous influence on the primary results and each state has different primary rules. Also, very often the results of the actual primary vote does not coincide with the amount of delegates each candidate sends to their National Conventions," said Hopkirk.

Speakers Picked For Graduation

By GINGER FANNON

The student speakers for the 1980 commencement were announced earlier this week for the College of Nursing, Commerce and Finance, Engineering, University College and the Graduate School. The speakers for the College of Arts and Sciences were to have been announced yesterday.

Those selected were:

College of Nursing
Donna M. Marshall (speaker)
Nancy C. Bolton (alternate)

College of Commerce and Finance
Terence M. O'Toole (speaker)
Marianne T. McDevitt (alternate)

College of Engineering
Ann R. McDonald (speaker)
R. Steven Santoleri (alternate)

University College
Doris LaCorte Micheel (speaker)
Faith J. Lebkuecher (alternate)

Graduate School
John F. Jebb (speaker)
Theresa A. Berresford (alternate)

Late Wednesday afternoon it was announced that Carole A. Barrale, an English major, would be the speaker representing the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences. John E. Gordon was designated to serve as alternate speaker.

The students were selected on the basis of G.P.A., service to the university and extra-curricular activities.

The required G.P.A. in the Colleges of Arts and Sciences, Commerce and Finance, Nursing and University College is 3.5. Students in the College of Engineering must have a 3.0 and the Graduate School requirement is 4.0.

The competitions, which consist of one, five minute speech per contestant, were held April 9-17. They were judged by a selection committee from each college, consisting of the Dean of the College, two faculty members and the two student senators.

The commencement itself will be run by Rev. John Deegan O.S.A., vice-president of Student Life. With the help of the speakers and the alternates, this year's graduation should be a success.

President Assesses Term

By MARK STIEBER

Outgoing Student Government President P.J. Winterhalter has definite feelings as to what his administration has accomplished.

"We ran on a fairly general platform last year," Winterhalter stated. "We were basically aiming at improving overall campus conditions. Nothing was really specifically promised at the outset."

The first effort of the administration was the re-evaluating of the S.G.A. itself.

This included the adjoining of the S.G.A., the Resident Student Association (R.S.A.), and the Association of Commuter Students (A.C.S.) through a central committee intended to work together to accomplish common objectives.

"There were times previously when the different organizations on campus, working toward the same goal, confused and hindered each other," Winterhalter said.

Outgoing SGA President P.J. Winterhalter.

The joint commission was responsible for this year's additional campus lighting with increased student protection.

Winterhalter noted a complaint by neighboring residents of supposed vandalism by Villanova students was turned into a plus by the S.G.A. At a town meeting set up by the students, it was established that a warm feeling actually existed between residents and Villanova students. The townspeople clearly felt that the university is an asset to the community.

Winterhalter also noted various additional safety conditions brought about this year. The death of Dorothy Zimmerman in an Amtrak train incident in October prompted a successful on-campus rally.

The protestors got excellent media coverage and effected the formation of a safety council made up of students and state, local, and university officials.

The accomplishment Winterhalter is most proud of is the senior graduation survey and its results. "We got an excellent student response bringing about a great increase in input into commencement activities." There were many administration protests against the survey.

Winterhalter feels the operation was extremely effective, noting the delay of graduation one week after final exams. "This allows students much needed time for rest as well as preparation," he said.

"The only thing we didn't do is hold down the budget," the outgoing president stated. "We tried for a reasonable increase rather than a hefty one. The problem recurs every year and next time we should be looking for alternate sources."

Winterhalter feels that this has been a "banner year for the Student Government Association." He is quick to assure that no accomplishments could have been realized without the dedication and hard work of the student senators, other S.G.A. officials, and all those supporting the organization and the university.

New SGA Head Vows to Reorganize Government

By BILL CLARK

"I plan to work for the reorganization of the Student Government at Villanova," said SGA-President-elect Henry Amoroso after his victory in last month's SGA elections. Promising to deliver on his campaign promises, Amoroso said that he planned to research new possibilities for Student Government at Villanova.

"I am unhappy with the present recommendations proposed to reorganize student government at Villanova. Perhaps I can work with the University Commission studying it and we can come up with some different suggestions."

Amoroso continued by saying "That as SGA President, I will work toward forming a standing committee that can communicate with the Board of Trustees. Hopefully, this will be an avenue where we can express our grievances directly to the Board of Trustees."

"I also intend to move on the formulation of the Student Rights Handbook, which is presently being worked on," said Amoroso. "We will also begin to work to revise the Blue Book."

Amoroso also expressed a desire to get the SGA involved in more activities at football games in the fall, but he said that as of now, he did not have any particulars. "I also have a desire to work with the various fraternities and sororities on campus in order to coordinate various activities," continued Amoroso.

Basically, Amoroso expressed a willingness to work with the various organizations on campus and to expand the role of the SGA in the life of all Villanova students.

Health Effects of Nuclear Power Studied

By SHARON WINTERS

The effects of radiation on cells was the main topic of a lecture by Dr. Michael Steinberg, faculty member at Thomas Jefferson Medical School and member of Physicians for Social Responsibility, in the North Lounge of Dougherty Hall on April 16.

Although the experts are still debating over the reasons for abnormal cell growth, Steinberg believes that three viable possibilities exist for the effects of nuclear matter on the human body. The particles can do nothing, hit the nucleus and destroy the cell, or hit the nucleus and alter the cell structure.

According to Steinberg, the medical profession has known for years that high doses of radiation can cause damage and death. The effects of low levels of radiation are not yet conclusive. The evidence seems to point to a long-term, accumulative hazard.

"The dilution factor is false in terms of alpha and beta particles in the food chain," stated Dr. Steinberg. These, heavier atomic particles, are disbursed into the atmosphere on a regular basis by the nuclear power plants. The particles fall to earth, where they settle on plant life; the plants are eaten by cows, for example, and the nuclear matter is transferred to humans via the milk, where it ultimately collects in body tissue.

Krypton 85, now the center of concern at Three Mile Island, is being released into the air. Dr. Steinberg cited that science is not knowledgeable enough of this substance. Although krypton is supposed to be a noble gas, that is, one that will not combine with anything else, doubt has been cast its properties. Xenon, another noble gas, has been found in recent years to interact with body tissue, the fatty tissue around the gonads in particular.

The human body has a tendency to utilize molecular "look-a-likes." Strontium 90 resembles calcium; the body collects it in the bones as it would calcium. The body also collects iodine 131 in the thyroid in lieu of regular iodine. Strontium and Iodine 131 are known carcinogens as well as radioactive materials.

Fast growing cells are the most susceptible to alteration; therefore, children and fetuses are the ones most likely to be affected. Steinberg related that those who say low doses of radiation are "no worse than getting an x-ray" have forgotten about the harm caused to pregnant women by x-rays and to children who received these treatments in the past.

Steinberg addressed the issues of waste dumps and transportation of nuclear material as serious safety problems. He feels that we don't have the answers to the waste situation. The current methods of eliminating nuclear byproducts consists of using containers that are outlived by their contents. Safety regulations and standards are nonexistent in the area of the transportation of nuclear materials.

"This field is so primitive at this point that there is no way to do it. . . it should be stopped," encapsulates Dr. Steinbergs beliefs concerning nuclear power. He notes that the energy problem is serious but feels that "we're going down the wrong road" by using nuclear energy now. At some time in the future Steinberg projects the possibility of a more useful, safe approach to nuclear energy. Currently he feels that we should look to alternative energy sources and conservation.

Dr. Steinberg was a biology major at Villanova, graduating in 1966. He received his medical training at Thomas Jefferson Medical School where he is currently employed as a pediatrics instructor.

The lecture was presented by AED, the premedical honor society. In attendance were members of MASE, Mainliners Association for Safe Energy. They are members of the Keystone Alliance; group members made alternative energy information available to interested students.

New Nursing Degree Granted

A new program leading to a master's degree in nursing has been established at Villanova University, it was announced this week by the Rev. John M. Driscoll, O.S.A., university president.

Approval for the program was given by the university's board of trustees at its February meeting. It supplements the college of nursing's undergraduate degree program, which has been offered at Villanova since the early 1950's.

"Villanova's college of nursing is committed to quality professional education for nurses," says Dr. M. Louise Fitzpatrick, dean. "It is anticipated that the new graduate program will help fill the shortage for qualified nursing instructors and administrators."

To plan and implement the proposed program, an advanced nurse training grant has recently been approved by the National Advisory Council on Nurse Training, Division of Nursing, U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Says Dr. Barbara Heller, assistant dean, "It had been demonstrated through feasibility studies that options for graduate education for nurses are needed in the Philadelphia region, because few programs are available at the present."

The major thrust of the advanced degree course of study is to prepare nurses for leadership roles as teachers of undergraduate nursing students, and as administrators in hospitals, community health organizations, and long-term care facilities. It will be open to student enrollment in 1981.

Cinema

"We want to use the room as many times a week as we can," she said.

Currently, the Connelly Center administration permits any one group to use the cinema only one night a week. An exception to this policy was made for the recent Union Production, "Broadway Marquee."

Gorski said that the Cinema would be a big sales point in attracting audiences to the films, but that the added cost of a projectionist would put on more pressure to fill the house at each show. She also said that the Union does not want to raise the cost of admission from the current price of one dollar.

Villanova Union President, Chris Arendt, said, "Our biggest concern is the cost of it."

Marc E. Tuchman, director of the Connelly Center, said, "My hope would be that the Union would book the facilities."

"The Center should be used fairly so people don't get excluded," Tuchman added.

Speaker Examines China's Future

By JERRY DOUGHERTY

What does the future hold for the People's Republic of China? This question was addressed by Dr. Kenneth Lieberthal, a noted China scholar and a professor at Swarthmore College, at a lecture sponsored by the political science department.

Lieberthal's lecture, entitled "Political Change in China: The Present and the Future," took place on April 15 in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

Lieberthal opened his discourse by pointing out that domestic developments in China in the next ten to twenty years will be determined by the success of Chinese Vice-Premier Deng Xiao-Ping's modernization program for his nation's economy.

The heart of the lecture consisted of Lieberthal offering four factors that favor the success of the modernization program, four that stand as obstacles to it, and four possible outcomes of the effort to modernize the economy.

The favorable factors cited were that the Chinese politicians have selected an 11-man succession board to rule China in the future; the expectations of modernization's benefits have been lowered; China has exposed many of its leaders and other citizens to the gap between the standard of living and that of the developed world, which, according to Lieberthal, "has shown the Chinese that they cannot again isolate themselves; and, fourthly, greater and more intricate links with other nations are being developed by China.

The negative factors consist of political opposition to Deng's initiatives on the part of China's left and right-wing factions as well as its youth, whom Lieberthal said lack trust in their government; a lack of full support for Deng on the part of the political bureaucracy; a failure to resolve a succession problem among middle and lower level bureaucrats; and the volatile nature of international events involving China, including the conflict with Russia and the Taiwan issue, as well as such factors as the international economy and the effect of weather patterns on China's agriculture.

Lieberthal offered four possible resolutions of China's experiment with modernization. One involves a system similar to Yugoslavia's, with a de-emphasization of the state structure; another, termed the "Brezhnev model," corresponds to the present-day Soviet system; a third is called the "Stalin model" because it stresses commitment to the party, patriotism, and defensive needs; the fourth possibility envisions a return to China's isolation of the 1950's and 1960's.

"My guess is we'll see the Brezhnev model in China by the late 1980's," Lieberthal concluded.

Mystery Shroud Analyzed

By IRENE M. SMITH

A lecture on the Shroud of Turin was held at the Connelly Center April 16 at 8:00 p.m. The speaker, Dr. Joseph Gambescia, an expert on the study of shrouds, conducted a slide show and lecture on the analysis of the shroud.

The Shroud of Turin is reportedly the burial cloth of Jesus Christ. The linen depicts a likeness of a man who has been scourged and crucified with a spear wound in his side. The cloth also bears spangular markings from a fire that occurred in 1582. The Shroud has been in France since the 14th century. It is identical to the burial shrouds used in Palestine 2000 years ago with the dimensions 14 ft, 6 inches long, and 3 ft. 7 inches wide.

Investigation of the authenticity of the cloth was first made in 1898 when a commission was formulated to photograph the shroud. When the pictures were examined a positive image appeared on the negative. The only way this could occur would be to take a picture of a negative itself.

With the technology of the 70's amazing breakthroughs were made validating the legend of the Shroud even more. The cloth's image has a peculiar aspect to any picture found. The cloth after being x-rayed was found to be a three dimensional representation. The topographical nature of the shroud demonstrates three dimensional characteristics which supports the fact that the image on the cloth was not painted on. No painting can be depicted in this way.

In addition, another discovery was found in 1973 by a Swiss scientist. By using ordinary scotch tape that was placed over the shroud, the particles that had adhered to the tape were placed under a microscope and studied. The particles were discovered to be pollen, identical to the pollen found in Palestine 2000 years ago. Such finding is strong evidence to prove that the cloth was in Palestine and validates a good portion of the legend.

Dr. Gambescia was one of the scientists invited to Turin in 1978 to mark the 400th anniversary of the Shroud in Turin. Dr. Gambescia remarked that most likely it will never be fully proven that this is indeed a picture of Christ but right now the weight of evidence is overwhelming.

Jewish Maritime Past Addressed

By LORI MADDEN

Dr. George Radan, head of Villanova's art and art history department, delivered a lecture on his book "The Sons of Zebulon." The lecture was held in Dougherty's North Lounge on Thursday, April 17.

Dr. Radan's book concerns the Jewish nation and it a previously unrecognized maritime past. The book is titled "The Sons of Zebulon" because Zebulon, one of Jacob's 12 sons who formed the twelve tribes of Israel, was the forefather of the lost maritime tribe of Israel.

A doctor of archaeology, George Radan became interested in the subject for his book while he was associate director of the National Maritime Museum in Israel. Dr. Radan's research in marine archaeology, as well as the findings of other researchers, provides the material for the book.

Dr. Radan's program began at 7:00 p.m. He spoke to a small group composed of Villanova faculty and students. The lecture was supplemented by a slide presentation.

"The Sons of Zebulon" was published in Chicago in 1978. An educational film version of the book is currently being produced in Israel.

Senate

Other senators expressed concern that campus safety would be compromised if the wire was removed.

Hahn stated that "if it comes down to a question of safety versus asthetics, I'd have to vote for safety. Hahn soon after offered his alternate motion, which eventually was approved.

Throughout the debate, Winterhalter reiterated his contention that the elimination of the wire wouldn't jeopardize safety because of what he deemed its ineffectiveness.

In other business, the Senate bid farewell to its outgoing members. Among them, two made departing statements.

Winterhalter in his address expressed an optimistic outlook toward Villanova while urging the administration "to listen to what the Senate says."

The other farewell statement was made by Dave Blachy, a student senator.

Blachy in his remarks strongly criticized the attitude and practices of the administration and the Board of Trustees. He deplored what he saw to be administration reluctance in providing information, commenting that "Villanova's hierarchy guards information like Superman guards kryptonite."

Blachy stated that this condition causes students to resent the University and withold donations to it. "Seniors wouldn't give the dirt under their beds to Villanova," he claimed.

The senate also paid tribute to Professor Myrtle Feignenberg, who taught in the Nursing College and served on the Senate's Executive Committee in 1975-76. Dr. Feignenberg passed away last month.

On May 9 the newly constituted Senate will hold an organizational meeting.

Press Freedom at Private Schools

At any private institution, the school newspaper is subject to the policies of the University. This is an awkward position for a newspaper, since its duties would be to report and comment on the actions of the individuals who, in fact, publish it.

The prerogatives of the publisher were carried out, regrettably, to the punishment of four student editors at Baylor University, a Baptist school in Waco, Texas.

Playboy magazine was on the campus to photograph candidates for a feature on "Girls of the Southwest Conference," and the university president said he would discipline any student who posed for the magazine. Baylor's newspaper, the Lariat, published an editorial that said students should decide themselves whether or not to pose for Playboy.

After printing this editorial, which the university president said espoused "a position contrary to the Christian nature and purpose of the University," three editors were dismissed from their positions. One of the editors, a senior, did not lose his scholarship money for the end of the year. The other two editors, plus the Dean's List student who served as campus chapter president of the Society of Professional Journalists, all lost their scholarships.

Based on a semester's experience of editing the Villanovan, we believe we can say that, thankfully, things are different at this private institution. There is no pre-censorship at Villanova. A publications board exists to mediate any dispute between the student editors and the faculty or administrators.

It is not that we haven't been approached with suggestions or complaints. This semester we have been asked to, but did not, "hold" a story about the fund-raising office. We have heard, sometimes second-hand, complaints about our coverage of the Connelly Center. But these are the problems that every newspaper is subject to.

Accordingly, we have tried to run the paper as every newspaper should run. In our first issue of the school year, we stated our editorial policy: "We pledge to be journalists first and foremost, examining the issues which require a closer inspection, seeking to clarify and enlighten. Our commentary and suggestions will, ... be relevant and constructive, and will be delegated to the editorial pages where opinionated writing belongs."

Last week, when we printed a story on the delicate subject of a presidential appointment to the faculty, we looked back to our editorial policy. We believe our story was fair, accurate, and as thorough as the deadline allows. We believe our commentary was logical and well-reasoned. In the wake of the Baylor decision, however, many of us spent a restless night last Thursday, wondering if any action would be taken at this private institution, where the paper is published by the University.

Since the paper was published Friday, no word has come to us from the administration or from the faculty. We feel this is for two reasons. Firstly, our story stands as accurate. Secondly, the school allows the paper to run as a newspaper should run, not as a voice of the administration.

In this, our final issue of the semester, it is a time to look back, and look ahead. We hope that we have stimulated thinking and a dialogue in our coverage of events, and in our printing of your opinions, in letters to the editor. Next year, we will continue to keep the students informed and enlightened on the issues that concern them, and those they should be concerned about.

Appointment Response

To the Editor:

Vincent Hausmann's article "President Orders Appointment" which appeared in last week's Villanovan is an excellent example of investigative, and objective reporting, and in my opinion is the most powerful article to ever be printed in the Villanovan.

As Dr. Bader said "Father Driscoll must have considered the risks involved and decided to take them." But perhaps Fr. Driscoll did not expect one of the risks to involve a lessening of the student's opinion of him as he made his decision to break with tradition, and appoint a member of the Daniel J. Keating family to the English Department.

Appointing this individual who has been denied positions at Harcum Junior College and Rosemont College,to the Villanova staff souly on the basis of family ties is a disgrace to this university, and an insult to the members of the department search committee's efforts to maintain the high level of education which the department currently offers.

Appointing Sherry to an "already overcrowded field (Modern British Literature)" can only have a negative effect upon the English department's morale and make Sherry look like a joke to the freshman English composition classes he will have to teach next Fall. It appears that Fr. Driscoll was blinded by the accomplishments of Sherry's family members, and failed to consider these additional risks.

Dr. McGowan stated that he "has assurances that it won't happen again." But if something like this does happen again, can the students be assured that another responsible individual will be around to recognize the implications of such actions, and report them to the Villanova populace as Vincent Hausmann did. And if an event like this happens again, will the administration exercise it right as the backer of the Villanovan"(the official record of Villanova") and prevent another informative article like this from being printed?

Brian R. Quinn

Dear Editor,

Alexander Pope said in his Essay On Criticism:

A little learning is a dangerous thing;
Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring:
There shallow draughts intoxicate the brain,
And drinking largely sobers us again.

Since I have no other information but Vincent Hausmann's front page article, "President Orders Appointment," I may be guilty of intoxication of the brain and Fr. Driscoll, because he knows more, might be the sober one. With that in mind, I feel that I still must express my feelings. As an ignorant, naive, impressionable undergraduate who believes teachers when they say that the unfairness in the world "out there" can and should be changed by morally stable, aware individuals who aren't afraid to fight for a value, I have two reactions to the appointment of Mr. Sherry as an English teacher. First, I am angered that although he was obviously not qualified he received a position because he is a member of a prestigious family. Secondly, I am somewhat reassured to realize that there is nothing to be afraid of "out there" — for there is no unfairness "out there" that is not right here.

Militarization

To the Editor:

Permit me to respond to the letters appearing in your April 18 issue which attacked the April 11 article on Iran I helped Dr. Carrier write, as well as Presidential candidate George Bush's April 21 speech at the Connelly Center in which he advocated a more militarized foreign policy.

Since my political perspective differs somewhat from Dr. Carrier's I consider Soviet Russia an imperialist power and have no illusions about its aggressive schemes. However, Russia's aggressive designs do not justify U.S. aggressive schemes, as the Third World belongs to the people who live there and not to any outside superpowers. Soviet Russia is not formidable, as its attempts to manipulate the Third World have courted failure and disaster in Ghana, Egypt, and Afghanistan, just as U.S. attempts to manipulate the Third World have courted failure and disaster in Indochina, Nicaragua, and Iran.

The current crises in Iran and Afghanistan show how deeply the peoples of Southwest Asia resent both U.S. and Russian intrusion. They are wary of such intervention due to having a long history of being plundered by both Russia and Western powers.

Sincerely,
Flip Ferrera (Robert Maddox Ferrera)

Service Fraternity?

To the Editor:

I am writing to you in response to an article written by Miss Deirdre Flanagan about the Delta Tau Delta Fraternity. How can Miss Flanagan call DTD a service fraternity and then praise them for it? If she would have investigated further about the so called "service projects" she would have found that only the pledges participated, and they did so only because it was a requirement for entering the fraternity.

As far as stressing academics, that is a misconception. She never mentioned how pledges are kept up to all hours of the morning being hazed and harassed to the point of being scared. Let them try telling their pledgemaster they have an 8:30 test and need some sleep — tough! In fact, no one knows of the "secret" meetings this year's pledge class had in order to stick together and oppose the brotherhood in refusing to submit to such punishment.

I'm writing this article in order to open the eyes of other prospective pledges and tell them the truth about DTD. It's not all fun and games! I don't think Miss Flanagan was being fair in telling only one side of the story. The facts that are left out can mislead a person into pledging a fraternity which is not right for them.

Sincerely,
A member of a Service Fraternity

Thank You

Dear Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the following people who helped make Ambassador George Bush's visit to Villanova University a huge success. Initially, I would like to thank Fr. Martin, O.S.A., dean of Student Activities, who reviewed the format for the event with me several times and Mrs. Mason who tirelessly filled out room reservation forms for the Connelly Center when the sight was constantly being changed. Once the date was confirmed for George Bush's arrival, Marc Tuchman, director of the Connelly Center, was extremely helpful and always managed to fit me into his already full schedule so new developments could be discussed.

Paul Meriani and Mr. Graham deserve special recognition for their time and effort they spent with me in working out the technical wrinkles of the Villanova Center and for helping with the setup on Sunday afternoon and evening. Then when it was learned that Ambassadore Bush would eat lunch at Villanova, Mr. Greg Charmia at the Connelly was very cooperative in arranging for lunches to be made for our guests on such short notice. The service you arranged was appreciated greatly.

To Captain Cunnane and the Security Department, you deserve much credit for helping us deal with the Secret Service's requirements and for your smooth handling of the traffic on Monday. To the Editor of the Villanovan, Marianne Lavelle, I thank you for the comprehensive article that was on page one of the newspaper on Friday, April 18. It provided the Political Union with excellent publicity and informed the students as to the nature of the event.

The following recognition, and possibly the most important, are directed towards Mrs. O'Neill and Mary Pat Perri in the Student Activities, who for several weeks informed me of messages from the Bush people and the Secret Service. Without them, communication would certainly have been more difficult. With their help the lines always open.

Finally, special thanks go to all those not mentioned above but who volunteered their time to make the event last Monday such an overwhelming success.

Sincerely,
Bruce M. Keogh
President — Political Union

Complaint

Dear Editor:

My congratulations to the Villanova Political Union for obtaining George Bush as a guest speaker.

However, it is incomprehensible that Bruce Keogh, who presided at the function, cut short Mr. Bush's question and answer period. It seemed obvious to all present that he wished to answer at least one more question. This was a unique opportunity for students to listen to the political views of a prominent national figure. And when I consider that a Villanova student stopped the program of a presidential candidate, I as a Villanova student feel shortchanged.

Hopefully, Bruce Keogh will refrain from such action in the future, and he will leave the schedule of George Bush in more capable hands — George Bush.

Sincerely,
Steve Donnelly

Dear Editor:

I would like to suggest that you stop running Mr. Kravitz ad. Mr. Kravitz advertises that he is a professional typist which he is not. I employed his services and was very disappointed. Since you are responsible for the creditability of the services advertised in your paper, I think you should know Mr. Kravitz is falsely advertising. The 13 page paper he typed for me contained the following errors:

— left a page out (forgot to type the flip side of a page)
— 17 whiteouts
— bottom margin not kept
— info left out on footnotes (i.e., month, date, publisher, copyright)
— left margin not kept on footnotes
— 8+ typing errors (i.e., wimultaneously instead of simultaneously)
— 2 quotations beyond 3 lines not indented

Please discontinue this ad before other students are disappointed.

The Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity requested an apology for a comment made in last week's "Who Knows, Who Cares" feature, which implied that it was "the worst frat on campus." "Who Knows, Who Cares" is the campus satire column, and it is our policy that no comments are made therein with malintent. We apologise if the remark was understood as anything other than parody.

Op-Ed

The Captive Olympic Games

By Oleh Mazur (Dr.)
Department of Modern Languages and Literatures

From the first day when the farcical International Olympic Committee awarded the 1980 Games to Moscow, voices of protest and outrage were raised at the impropriety of that choice. Moscow's policies of mass executions, wholesale deportations and artificial famine were implemented when the old men who rule the Soviet Union today were rising in those bloody years to power. Holding the Olympics in their capital city would cap their careers with an international stamp of approval. The comparisons with the 1936 Hitler Olympics in Berlin are inevitable and, unfortunately, entirely justified. The Helsinki-related arrests and trials as well as further disclosure that political prisoners are making Olympic souvenirs at labor camp workshops adds an ironic touch to an already tragic picture. Finally, the invasion of Afghanistan convinced many that the Soviet Union cannot be a worthy host of the Olympic Games, that are, an international festival of peace and friendly competition. We believe the Olympics should go on — only not in Moscow. And we also believe that it is time for the Olympic Games to become a true forum for all the nations, regardless of size and power, who could take pride in the achievements of their young, and where the individuals could compete as equals in a test of personal excellence and dedication.

Unfortunately, the shadow of colonialism and oppression still remains over the Olympic Games. In violation of the olympic principle that each people, irrespective of population, political system, race or creed has the opportunity to participate, many nations will not be allowed to participate as equal and individual entities and had not been allowed to do so in the past. In this respect the Soviet Union again is the principal offender. Among the dozens of nations deprived of participation in the Olympiad are Armenia, Azarbaijan, Beylorussia, Estonia, Georgia, Latvia, Lithuania, Turkmenistan, Ukraine, Uzbekistan and other nations confined in the USSR.

The achievements of the athletes of those nations are attributed to the faceless conglomerate "the Soviet Union" or simply to "Russia." A great part of the responsibility for this most discouraging fact of incorrect and insensitive lumping of everything in USSR into a single entity, rests with the "experts" in the Western world. The free world has not the slightest idea how the nations subjugated by Moscow feel about this unintentional and very often intentional confusion of the USSR with Russia (one and indivisible), which also prevails in our country. In the United States of America, there has been a deliberate obscuration and persistent manipulation of this subject which serves not our vital interests but those of Red Moscow. American children are misled very early on this matter — and the confusion goes on in high school and college. Even many teachers evince sad ignorance concerning nations such as mentioned already and more so when they are faced with nationals like Yakuts, Tatars, or Karelians.

Let us look at Ukraine, a nation with a long history and tradition, with a population of close to 50 million, and formally even a founding member of the United Nations — it had not and will not, under prevailing conditions, have a status at the Olympiad. Ukrainian athletes, along with athletes of other nationalities in the USSR are compelled to participate as members of a joint national pseudo-imperial team representing the USSR, deprived of their identity.

The International Olympic Committee has declared Ukraine to be eligible for individual participation, but Soviet officials have invariably responded that Ukrainian athletes do not wish to field a national team, that they "prefer" to participate in a joint "Soviet" team at the Olympic Games. This assertion underscores the real status of the subject nationalities in the USSR. Ukrainian athletes, as all other athletes, have their own unique identity and would take pride in being able to represent their people at the Olympiad as members of an Ukrainian national team.

The reluctance of Soviet authorities to acknowledge separately the achievement of Ukrainian athletes and those of other nationalities in the USSR is self-explanatory: without the many medals won by Ukrainian and other non-Russian athletes, the standing of the USSR or "Russia" would tumble from the customary top positions. This is an intolerable prospect to the Moscow regime which propagates the myth of one, united "Soviet people" which they gladly equate with "Russian," and rejoice whenever this fallacy is repeated by our media and even by certain tax-supported national organizations dedicated, as they put it, to "production and dissemination of humanistic knowledge."

Some olympic statistics shed an unquestionable light on this case. At the Olympic Games in Helsinki, 1952 and in Tokyo, 1968, the USSR was listed as second in medal standings behind the U.S.A. A

By MARYANN McDONNELL

With graduation just a few weeks away, The Villanovan asked seniors what they got out of their four years at Villanova. The answers from our departing fellow students were somewhat predictable.

Don Clark

My 4 years at Villanova have given me the opportunity to be part of a fine university as well as preparing me for the business world.

Jeanine Russo

My four years at Villanova have been a continuous learning experience, academically as well as personally. Because I have lived off campus all 4 years I have had to deal with many responsibilities that I would not have otherwise. On the whole, I have been happy here and have met many great people that I'll never forget.

Chip Mastey

A good educational experience along with many lasting friendships that hopefully will grow into really fond memories.

Julie Bednarek

After 4 years I've learned how to learn. I've also come across a lot of nice girls, cute men, strange people and diversified classes.

Karen Walters

My 4 years at V.U. have given me a fine educational experience along with the development of friends.

closer look at these "Soviet" achievements, however, produces quite a different picture. Had the medals, won by athletes from Ukraine, been properly credited to Ukraine, the standings would indicate that Ukraine placed third behind the USA and Hungary in 1952 and again 3rd behind the USA and Japan in 1968. In both cases, Russia per se finished 7th, barely matching the medal output by the other non-Russian and non-Ukrainian athletes on the "Soviet" contingent.

Last week, in the House of Representatives, I had the honor of meeting the leader of the Afghan community in the USA, Mr. Habib Mayar, who presented me with a drawing of Brezhnev riding a Roman chariot pulled by Olympic representatives of the captive nations. Speaking with this young intellectual, I realized that sooner or later the Moscow leaders may have to be satisfied with walking, i.e. using their own feet for a change. A brief discussion with Honorable Willy Kuijpers, Belgian Member of Parliament, only strengthened my awareness that to hold the Olympic Games in Moscow would be as unethical as the Western aloofness to the plight of the subjugated nations within the last great colonial empire — the USSR or the Soviet Union.

The Case of the Missing Chains

By BARBARA ANNE HIGGINS

Last week a letter was submitted to the Villanovan by "a couple of bummed Seniors", requesting that the infamous chains of Dougherty Hall be replaced by graduation. The staff of this newspaper is sincere in their attempt to do all in their power to grant these requests. Unfortunately, the chains are no where to be found. However, we have taken upon ourselves to hire a private investigator to help locate them. The following is the report that was submitted to our office concerning the investigation. It was decided that this report would be printed verbatum, in keeping with our policy of relating all the news, all the time.

It was 8:46 on a Monday morning when my boss ominously approached my desk and informed me of my next assignment. By the look in his eye, I could tell it would be a tough one. He quickly filled me in on the details and sent me on my way, confident that I could crack the case.

The information was sketchy but the assignment was clear. I was to take over the case of the missing chains. It was a toughy, I was right. My collegues were baffled after days of undercover investigation. It was up to me now.

At approximately 9: 14, I was on my way to Villanova University, where the aforementioned chains were last seen. Hum. A school of some sort, I quickly concluded. Possibly for future crane operators. Must be. Why else would they have chains hanging around?

10:24 — I entered the alleged Villanova campus. I approached the first large building I was hoping that it was the alleged "quad", one of the clues to the previous local of the afore mentioned chains in question. I stopped the first person I saw Caucasian youth, approximately 19 years of age.

"What and where is the Quad, son?" I interrogated. With the look of defiance that is so often coupled with the rebellious heyday of youth, he darted back, "You're right smack in the middle of it, man."

So the case was beginning to crack. From the alleged Quad, I walked straight ahead, not knowing what would be awaiting me in the minutes ahead. The air was thick. My heart was visibly pounding through my chest. I quickened my pace, and tried to blend with the crowd that was mulling in front of a large cinder-block building. I felt as if I was being watched but I knew that this was just a result of the nervous paranoia that I always feel when on an assignment. My disguise was too clever. I looked like one of the crowd, I assured myself. Regaining my cool-headed, and professional manner, I tightened the belt to my trenchcoat, readjusted my dark glasses and continued in my endeavor.

10:47 — If my calculations were correct, I should have been at the scene of the previous locale of the afore mentioned chains in question. Time to go to work. As I was busy dusting for fingerprints on the walkway, I heard a commotion to my right. Looking up, I found myself an eye-witness to a 71447 (assault and battery, for the layman). A caucasian female, approximately 21 to 22 years of age was attempting to tear another female of the same discription from a semi-recumbent" position. I found it my duty to step in and terminate the attack. After prying the two females from each other and hand-cuffing them, I informed them of their rights. When I inquired about the motive for the attack, Female No. 1 exclaimed in a teary banter of accusations something about "her chain". My heart leaped, but I maintained my composure, despite the excitement of this new development. "Continue," I authoritatively petitioned.

"She took my spot. That was my chain for the last four years and just because hers is gone now is no reason for her to move in on my territory," she sobbed.

So these were the remains of the chains in question! Because of their assistance in the case, I decided to go easy on the girls. "Book'em, Dan'l," I said as they climbed into the patrol car, "but tell the judge I said a light sentence would suffice," I generously added.

11:13 — Although it was difficult I managed to take one of the remaining chains for a lab exhibit.

The last of the big time chain-hangers.

The solution to this puzzling crime was beginning to peak over the horizon. The cinderblock building that I had previously observed seemed to have been constructed over the site of the previous locale of the afore mentioned chains in question, I soon learned.

11:17 — I entered the building, which was called the Connelly Center. After careful and selective interrogating, I skillfully diagnosticated that it was a certain group of construction workers that I was looking for. Supposedly, they were responsible for this monstrous excuse for a collegiate shopping mall, and it was them who oversaw the removal of the afore mentioned chains in question.

1:48 — Time was running short. I was a few hours behind schedule after getting lost in the building, which, I gathered, was obviously constructed in order to throw off even the most artful private detective such as myself. Finally I came upon a hallway that looked suspiciously under-lit. This was it. I dexterously sneaked up to the door at the end of the corridor. I heard voices within and a rattling of chains. Throwing open the door, I positioned myself and pointed my gun at the strangly-clad group inside.

4:45 PM — The case was finally solved. I submit this report to explain to the staff of the Villanovan what I had uncovered. It seems that this group of deranged construction workers had been moonlighting at night as a punk rock band which went under the name of the CHAIN GANG, using as a part of their act. Although no crime was actually committed because of the necessary removal of these chains before the construction of the center, I leave it up to the descretion of the Villanova students to explain the outcome of my investigation to the public.

Language Lab Aids In Learning

By MELISSA ARAYA

Planning a trip abroad? Want to learn a little French so you can be a "tres chic" type person, or try your rap in restaurants, just like the American Gigolo? You sports buffs can pick up a little of each language so you can understand the commentary at the Summer Olympics (wherever they may be . . .) Opera fans can plug into their favorite arias (che bella voce . . .)

There's so much culture available to those who speak a foreign language, and you can start learning about it at Villanova's new language lab. The lab is located in Vasey 206. Operating houra are from 8:30 a.m. to 4:20 p.m., and it is open to all Villanova students and faculty.

Professor Vito DiVincenzo of the Modern Languages Department, who has been Director of the lab since 1964 emphasizes the fact that the lab is available to all who wish to use it. Primarily used by students in introductory and intermediate level language courses, the lab is also used by faculty and administration planning overseas travel, and by foreign students desiring to improve their skills in English.

According to Professor DiVincenzo, "the lab is newly equipped, and the equipment is from Norway. It is not even a year old yet, and is to us in the Modern Languages Department what the Connelly Center is to the students. We can accommodate 30 students at one time, and the tapes, cassettes operated by remote control, are in Spanish, French, Italian, English, German and Russian."

Professor Vito DiVincenzo explains the use of the new equipment in the language lab.

The lab is staffed by student assistants, under John Maieron, a Villanova graduate student. As to the procedure for using the lab, Mr. DiVincenzo related, "Students come in and ask the attendant for a certain lesson. The control room has 30 individual consoles. The attendant assigns a booth and the student can use five different control buttons: he can record his own voice speaking a certain language, play the tape back, call the attendant, rewind or fast forward the tape, or duplicate the tape. Students wishing to duplicate our tapes can bring in blank tapes, and we have a high-speed duplicator which can

Unfair Caricature Rebutted

By THOMAS W. BUSCH PHILOSOPHY DEPARTMENT

Jean-Paul Sartre: 1905-1980

The notice appeared tucked away in a newspaper. Sartre was in the hospital, intensive care . . . fluid in his lungs . . . weak heart. Then, a week or so later, the media gave him larger space. Sartre was dead, reduced in the terms of his own philosophical vocabulary to being-in-itself, inert, incapable of free action, entirely given over to the judgment of others.

To the public, Sartre remains what early tabloid accounts made him out to be, a beatnik, an existentialist (a notorious word), an atheist, a scoundrel in his personal life, a bad influence on the young, an enemy of decent humanity. For many reasons, too many to examind here, this unfair caricature will probably stick. Even in technical philosophical works, composed by people who should know better. Sartre has been treated shabbily. I can think of no philosopher who has received such a total bad press.

"Everything that I have tried to write or do in my life was meant to stress the importance of freedom." In his technical works (such as Being and Nothingness and the Critique of Dialectical Reason), in his novels, plays, literary criticism — he was a prolific writer who tackled all topics — freedom was indeed the message. To be sure, he proclaimed himself an atheist. He thought htat he had to deny God in order to preserve a legitimate role for human freedom and creativity. Unnecessary as this judgment is, it is true that many articulations of a theism can be seen to found Sartre's concern. In any case, many in th Judeo-Christian tradition will be sympathetic to his persistent defense of man against all forms of scientific reductionism, and his unrelenting concern for the oppressed peoples of this world. Whether or not Sartre will be considered one of the great philosophers is a judgment outside of our capacity at this time. Certainly he is one of the thinkers that we must reckon with. In the light of the unfair treatment accorded him in the past, one can only hope that Roland Barthes was correct in recently predicting that Sartre is ready for "rediscovery." For myself, I can only beg you to treat Sarte with care.

V.U. Holds Free Sasha Day

By KATHI IANNACONE

On Wednesday, April 23, 1980, the Jewish Union, in a total University effort with Campus Ministry, Center for Concern and International Committee, sponsored for the second year, a day dedicated to the freeing of Sasha Yakir. Sasha is a twenty-four year old Soviet student who is being denied his rights to leave the country.

The day included Sasha-related activities designed to inspire the entire University to show concern for the injustices committed against Soviet refusniks.

Sasha is presently living in the U.S.S.R. with his parents, Eugenny and Rimma. The entire family was invited to leave Russia for Israel by their relatives. They applied for their visa on October, 1973 and were refused in January, 1974 on the grounds that they knew Soviet secrets. Sasha then applied for a visa on his own in 1976 but was also refused because of "Soviet humanitarian grounds — 'we do not break up families.' "

Although the Soviet Union regards their reasoning as humanitarian, they are blatantly violating the International Agreements of the 1948 Human Rights Accord and 1975 Helsinki Final Act, which they co-signed. Soviet's denial of Yakir's visa also ignores the Helsinki Act's guarantee of freedom of religion, freedom of communication, and freedom of emigration.

Villanova University, along with La Salle College, Brandeis University and Hebrew University in Israel, have adopted Sasha and have dedicated themselves to securing his freedom and safety. Since the university sponsored Free Sasha Day last year, Villanova students have sent five-hundred letters, cards and petitions to Sasha and has made several trips to Washington where visits to senators helped the government get involved.

One of the goals of Free Sasha Day "encouraged" the writing of letters, cards and petitions to Sasha. In this manner, his safety from physical harm and mental torment could be insured and perhaps his freedom could be gained.

Sasha Day was designed to "educate" as many as possible about the injustices committed against refusniks in the Soviet Union. In addition, the day "expressed" collective and individual concern for the welfare of a fellow human being.

Events for Sasha began at 11:30 a.m. with card and letter writing.

There was an exclusive film presentation taken of Ira Neudell, a long-time refusnik, now in a Siberian prison.

Ira became the "godmother" of the Russian refusniks when she helped those in Siberia until she was caught and imprisoned. The presentation was filmed in prison and then smuggled to England when it was released. After the film, there was a discussion and replay of Sasha's phone call followed by slides of Bradd Boxman's, president of the Jewish Union, trip to Russia and visit with Sasha.

In a recent letter, Sasha expressed his gratitude: "For several times already the situation has been so bad that your activity just saved me. So everything you have done has been helpful, everything!" Boxman then commented, "I am thankful to all of Villanova for supporting such a beautiful and unique freedom that crosses the boundaries in politics, religion and in all."

Sunshine Day Arrives

More than two hundred handicapped, and orphaned children will participate in "Sunshine Day" at Villanova university on Saturday, April 26.

Sunshine Day is one of several events sponsored annually by Project Sunshine, a volunteer group of Villanova students dedicated to brightening the lives of shut-ins. During the school year, the students in this service organization visit a number of institutions for children as well as hospitals and homes for the aged and inform.

The special guests who will be celebrating this Sunshine Day are children from teh Woodhaven m gcventer, Don Guanella School for Boys, and St. Vincent's Home for Childrn. Each child will be personally escorted to the various events by a student volunteer.

At 11 a.m., the guests and their escorts will meet in the St. Mary's Hall gymnasium and gather under the "sun" — a glowing, six foot high sphere of wire and yellow crepe paper. Festivities will begin with a picnic lunch and continue until 4 p.m. with carnival games, relay races and sing-a-longs.

In addition to these activities, the children will be entertained by a Raggedy Ann and Andy skit performed by Leah Clifton and Donna Vidas, a comedy skit put together by Frank Doherty, and the guitar music of Perry Hazeltine and Connie Topper.

All events will be held in St. Mary's Hall and the surrounding outdoor areas, at the corner of Spring Mill and County Line Roads in the northwest corner of campus (across from the Villanova Law School). All Villanova students, faculty, staff and administration are invited to stop by and see the good work that these V.U. students are doing in the community.

BUCKS COUNTY COMMUNITY COLLEGE
Swamp Road Newtown, Pa. 18940

WHAT COULD THE ARMY POSSIBLY OFFER A BRIGHT PERSON LIKE YOU?

Drop your guard for a minute. Even though you're in college right now, there are many aspects of the Army that you might find very attractive.

Maybe even irresistible. See for yourself.

MED SCHOOL, ON US

You read it right.

The Army's Health Professions Scholarship Program provides necessary tuition, books, lab fees, even microscope rental during medical school.

Plus a tax-free monthly stipend that works out to about $6,450 a year. (After July 1, 1980, it'll be even more.)

After you're accepted into medical school, you can be accepted into our program. Then you're commissioned and you go through school as a Second Lieutenant in the Army Reserve.

The hitch? Very simple. After your residency, you give the Army a year as a doctor for every year the Army gave you as a med student, and under some conditions, with a minimum scholarship obligation being two years' service.

INTERNSHIP, RESIDENCY & CASH BONUSES

Besides scholarships to medical school, the Army also offers AMA-approved first-year post-graduate and residency training programs.

Such training adds no further obligation to the student in the scholarship program. But any Civilian Graduate Medical Education sponsored by the Army gives you a one-year obligation for every year of sponsorship.

But you get a $9,000 annual bonus every year you're paying back medical school or post-graduate training.

So you not only get your medical education paid for, you get extra pay while you're paying it back.

Not a bad deal.

A GREAT PLACE TO BE A NURSE

The rich tradition of Army Nursing is one of excellence, dedication, even heroism. And it's a challenge to live up to.

Today, an Army Nurse is the epitome of professionalism, regarded as a critical member of the Army Medical Team.

A BSN degree is required. And the clinical spectrum is almost impossible to match in civilian practice.

And, since you'll be an Army Officer, you'll enjoy more respect and authority than most of your civilian counterparts. You'll also enjoy travel opportunities, officer's pay and officer's privileges.

Army Nursing offers educational opportunities that are second to none. As an Army Nurse, you could be selected for graduate degree programs at civilian universities.

ADVANCED NURSING COURSE, TUITION-FREE

You get tuition, pay and living allowances.

You can also take Nurse Practitioner courses ano courses in many clinical specialties. All on the Army.

While these programs do not cost you any money, most of them do incur an additional service obligation.

A CHANCE TO PRACTICE LAW

If you're about to get your law degree and be admitted to the bar, you should consider a commission in the Judge Advocate General Corps. Because in the Army you get to practice law right from the start.

While your classmates are still doing other lawyers' research and other lawyers' briefs, you could have your own cases, your own clients, in effect, your own practice.

Plus you'll have the pay, prestige and privileges of being an Officer in the United States Army. With a chance to travel and make the most of what you've worked so hard to become. A real, practicing lawyer. Be an Army Lawyer.

ROTC SCHOLARSHIPS

Though you're too late for a 4-year scholarship, there are 3-, 2-, and even 1-year scholarships available.

They include tuition, books, and lab fees. Plus $100 a month living allowance. Naturally they're very competitive. Because besides helping you towards your degree, an ROTC scholarship helps you towards the gold bars of an Army Officer.

Stop by the ROTC office on campus and ask about details.

UP TO $170 A MONTH

You can combine service in the Army Reserve or National Guard with Army ROTC and get up to $6,500 while you're still in school.

It's called the Simultaneous Membership Program. You get $100 a month as an Advanced Army ROTC Cadet and an additional $70 a month (sergeant's pay) as an Army Reservist.

When you graduate, you'll be commissioned as a Second Lieutenant, but not necessarily assigned to active duty. Find out about it.

A BONUS FOR PART-TIME WORK

You can get a $1,500 bonus just for enlisting in some Army Reserve units. Or up to $2,000 in educational benefits.

You also get paid for your Reserve duty. It comes out to about $1,000 a year for about 16 hours a month and two weeks annual training.

And now we have a special program to help you fit the Army Reserve around your school schedule. It's worth a look.

A SECOND CHANCE AT COLLEGE

Some may find college to be the right place at the wrong time for a variety of reasons. The Army can help them, too.

A few years in the Army can help them get money for tuition and the maturity to use it wisely.

The Army has a program in which money saved for college is matched two-for-one by the government. Then, if one qualifies, a generous bonus is added to that.

So 2 years of service can get you up to $7,400 for college, 3 years up to $12,100, and 4 years up to $14,100. In addition, bonuses up to $3,000 are available for 4-year enlistments in selected skills.

Add in the experience and maturity gained, and the Army can send an individual back to college a richer person in more ways than one.

We hope these Army opportunities have intrigued you as well as surprised you. Because there is indeed a lot the Army can offer a bright person like you.

New Officers

By GRANT WENGER

Recently there was an election for commuter students to elect officers to represent their points of interest. The officers elected were: Bill Touey secretary/treasurer, Mary Leighton vice president, and myself, Grant Wenger president.

In the coming year some of our objectives are: To supply a list of off campus housing to the students who wish one; to join together with the RSA and Student Life and organize activities for both the commuter and the resident to participate in together, organize trips to the Phillies, Great Adventure, and picnics.

Along with the help of the commuters, the organization hopes to achieve these goals. Participation on the part of all will surely do the job.

The elections for the 1980-81 R.S.A. executive committee were held and our new officers are Michael Imperiale, president, Bob Conway, Irene Smith, Rich Kreider, vice-presidents, and Cathy Cara, office administrator.

The new executive committee is already in the process of organizing committees for the up-coming year. Such committees as orientation, planning, resident life, and publicity are already in the making. A small number of positions are open in certain committees if you are interested, stop by the R.S.A. office and leave your name and address. There are going to be a number of changes in the up-coming year in dorm structures and on a campus wide scale.

Good Luck on your exams. Looking forward to seeing you at coffee and donuts.

Cable TV Seen As Community Service

Father Jack O'Rourke, a professor from the Speech and Communications Department, is a member of the mayor's advisory commission for cable.

By SHARON WINTERS

Cable television, as viewed by Father Jack O'Rourke, professor from the Speech and Communications Department at Villanova, is a means of communications as well as a medium for entertainment. O'Rourke would like to see four out of the proposed 35 possible cable channels in Philadelphia used for community services.

Father O'Rourke perceives cable as a "means of community communication." He envisions using four cable channels for four varied levels of Philadelphia life. Each level would service a social unit of the city: immediate neighborhood; local community; city section; and whole city.

The first level contains the smallest city unit, the immediate environment. This would be the area accessible by walking. The service for this region as seen by O'Rourke would be an "electronic bulletin board" involving basic communications such as life transitions of people in the neighborhood.

Level two would encompass a larger region comprised of schools and churches among other concerns of local interest. This area would involve things and events that people share.

Social services, community activities, sports and recreation would be features of the third level and channel proposed by O'Rourke. The city section, such as Germantown or Kensington, would be the subject here.

The last area would be the whole city consisting of general interests as well as activities that are scattered throughout the metropolis. Interests like those involving clubs and organizations would air on this channel.

"Technically cable systems can be built very easily to provide that kind of programming," said O'Rourke in reference to his multilevel proposition. "It hasn't been done anywhere" to date.

Father O'Rourke began his television efforts at Villanova, in 1965, when he worked on a closed circuit instructional system on campus. This project did not prove to be viable.

In 1973, O'Rourke became the chairman of the Philadelphia Community Cable Coalition. The group was composed of interested individuals from Temple, Drexel, the University of Pennsylvania and community people who were "just wondering what was going to happen with cable." The PCCC asked questions about the use and operations of cable.

O'Rourke recalled, "The city and the cable companies ignored us . . . so we sued all the companies in the city." Six companies were involved in the court suit brought by the PCCC. By 1975, the group had lost all of their legal resources, according to O'Rourke. "We eventually lost" because of technicalities, related O'Rourke, but by that time the city's franchises had almost expired. Although the PCCC had lost the battle, O'Rourke felt that they had won the war.

Philadelphia obtained a new ordinance and established a commission for cable. The mayor's advisory commission was formed in November 1979. Its purpose is two-fold: advise City Council on the selection of cable companies to operate in the city and encourage the development of community programming. O'Rourke is a member of this new commission.

Father O'Rourke believes that cable is "where the future of communication is going to be." He expects newspapers to be on cable by the year 2000; cable subscribers would buy a special adaptor and select sports, classifieds or weather, changing the visual pages at an individual, independent pace.

Originally, Father O'Rourke began his education at Villanova as an engineering student. He switched careers and graduated with a B.A. in philosophy at V.U. O'Rourke has since accumulated three masters degrees: mathematics at V.U.; religion at the Augustinian College in Washington D.C.; and broadcasting in 1972 in Florida. Currently, cable is O'Rourke's main interest, "If things go right, I'll give the next tlnty years of my life to Philadelphia cable T.V."

Skydiving - Jump For Joy

By BETTY RUTKOWSKI

This past Saturday, twenty Villanova students took off for Pittstown, N.J. to experience what the posters claimed was "the ultimate sensation" — Skydiving.

Sponsored by the Villanova Union Recreation Committee, the group was the first to go to the new facility called Sky Dive East. In fact, the facility was so new, the airport wasn't yet completed.

Classes were given from 10:00 to 2:30 with a written test at the end before the actual jump. This training session prepared you so that the jump at 3,000 feet would feel as if you were jumping off a platform just three feet high.

The students were then outfitted and taken, three at a time, into a plane for their first jump.

"It's really something big. You have to experience it once. It's a personal high, but definitely not for the meek," said Joe Jasek after his first jump.

According to Carol Boyle, "The best part was looking up and seeing your chute had opened and you could forget all they taught you in case anything went wrong."

There were no injuries among the jumpers. They were all relatively enthusiastic, and most can't wait to do it again.

"It's something you'll always remember," said Tom Kelly. "I can't tell you enough that you just have to do it yourself."

duplicate both sides of a 60-minute tape in 110 seconds."

The tapes range in content from basic lessons in a language, to interviews, music, and poetry. Regarding the use by students for various language courses, "Students have lessons listed in their textbooks — when they come in we record on an index card their name, the date, etc., and the total number of minutes they spend in the lab. At the end of the semester the form is submitted to the instructor and this is incorporated into their grade."

As to the actual value of time spent in the language lab, Mr. DiVincenzo stated, "I honestly feel that it is an excellent means of supplementing classroom instruction. It gives students an opportunity to hear their own voices."

Anyone interested in language and foreign travel should stop in at the Modern Languages Department on the second floor of St. Thomas Hall. One trip, organized annually by Fr. Antonio Roman, is a four-week program of studies in Spain offered in July. The trip offers students an opportunity to see the country of Spain as well as an intensive study of Spanish.

"Vincent : The Story of a Hero"

Film, television, and stage actor Leonard Nimoy brings his one-man show "Vincent: The Story of a Hero" to Walnut Street Theater from April 22-27. For information call 574-3550.

By EILEEN McCAFFREY

Leonard Nimoy's emotionally powerful one-man show Vincent: The Story of a Hero is an exceptionally well-balanced production in every way, from Nimoy's acting, to the selection of events from Vincent Van Gogh's life, to the portrayal of his character. In a seemingly flawless performance Nimoy portrays both Vincent and his younger brother Theo Van Gogh without ever understating or overstating any aspects of their characters. The play itself (which is Nimoy's adaption of Van Gogh by Phillip Stevens) is very well structured. Either Nimoy or Stevens have most carefully selected the contents of this play so that all the major events of Van Gogh's life are covered and his character is communicated as clearly as in any litarary biography. Every sequence, every line counts. While Vincent is very favorably portrayed, he is not seen as a saint. His flaws are stated just clearly enough to make him appear more human, but not strongly enough to taint this basically laudatory picture of him.

The show opens with Nimoy as Theo Van Gogh about to tell a crowd about Vincent as he (Theo) knew him. It is a week after Vincent's death. Theo paints Vincent as being suicidally stubborn. Vincent feared success terribly, and would never allow himself to believe he had succeeded at anything. He would throw all his seemingly boundless energy into hopelessly difficult tasks, believing that if only he sacrificed enough, he would succeed. This rarely happened in his lifetime. However, Vincent loved deeply, and always had to have something to live for. A life without love was unbearable to him. With no hesitation or fear, he would sacrifice everything to his love, whether that be God, art, or an individual. His total sacrifices, his total lack of cowardice, and his total dedication to whatever he loved at the time make him an awesome personality.

At 25 Vincent volunteered to serve as an evangelist in the Borinage, a desperately poor coal mining region in Belgium. Theo tells us that his brother was "at home with the poor." Believing that he could not preach to the poor unless he too was poor, he gave away his possessions, moved into an abandoned miner's shack, and slept on a straw mattress. When one man was burned so badly in a fire that the doctors gave up on him, Vincent tore up his own clothing to make bandages for the man. Slowly, he nursed him back to health. Remember, this was all done by a man whose family were wealthy art dealers (including Theo). After two years in the Borinage, Van Gogh was dismissed by the evangelist authorities, who disapproved of his extreme practices.

After months of despair, Vincent "rises again" and begins to draw. Miners of the Borinage are his first subjects. He moves to Brussels to begin anatomy lessons. At this point Theo begins supporting him financially.

Vincent causes trouble again when he takes in a prostitute (Christine) and her children off the streets of The Hague (where he now takes lessons from cousin Anton Mauve) with the intention of reforming her, and decides that he wants to marry her. Theo is caught between his parents, who intend to prove that Vincent is unfit to manage his own affairs and thus have his legal rights revoked, and his brother whom he loves. Theo sees only one choice; he asks Vincent to send Christine away and threatens to cut off Vincent's monthly allowance. In anger, Vincent responded that being good friends with the world and following your conscience are not the same thing. He was adamant about saving Christine from the streets, but she left him and returned to her former trade.

Theo angrily describes Vincent's stay in Arles with Gauguin (who Theo calls "a bastard") and how Gauguin drove Vincent to cutting off his own ear. After describing Vincent's death with just the right amount of emotion Theo concludes with a statement of Vincent's that we are here not to be happy but to sacrifice everything in the hopes of creating some beauty which can overcome the vulgarity of most people's lives.

During Nimoy's performance and before opening new sequences, slides of Van Gogh's paintings were flashed onto two screens at the back of the stage. The voice of Nimoy's Vincent is heard over the loudspeaker before opening some sequences, which adds to the impression that Vincent, and not Nimoy's Vincent voice or Nimoy's Theo voice is speaking. The show is laced with just enough light humor to prevent very serious topics from becoming melodramatically heavy. Nimoy performs this show beautifully, with perfectly balanced professionalism. Everything is understated just enough to avoid overdramatization and allow the awesomeness of Vincent Van Gogh's life to speak for itself.

Vincent will be at the Walnut Street Theater until April 27.

Shanghai Acrobats Dazzle

By JEAN ENGLER and ANNETTE DISCERNI

If you are looking for a night out at the theater, for an entertaining change of pace, and a more sophisticated shade of the circus, the Shanghai Acrobats, appearing for a brief stay at the Schubert Theater presents some interesting elements of entertainment.

Through incredibly performed feats, the company demonstrates the epitomy of agility and coordination. The show is a sequence of skits spotlighting such talents as juggling, pantomine, contortionism, and acrobatics with an emphasis on the delicate art of balance.

Most of the company's seemingly gravity-defying stunts promise to make you hold your breath (even hide your eyes) while the performers execute them with grace and ease. Highlighting the show are colorful costumes, scenery, and lilting Oriental music (complete with anxiety-provoking drumrolls). Especially evident is the pride the company takes in presenting its abilities, which can only be the result of endless practice and a strive for perfection of movement, especially in an area such as acrobatics, where perfection is essential.

The personality and humor of the troupe shine in every act all contributing a show that will amuse, amaze, and thrill you.

Radicalism Revisited

I declare that the meaning of the Columbia uprising is that one too many persons has been educated, and one too many wires has linked people's thoughts together, for power to breed power any more.
James Simon Kunen
The Strawberry Statement

By STEVEN COMBS

For those of you who were still playing hide and seek when Henry Kissinger was earning his Nobel Peace Prize by bombing Hanoi into a phony truce after Nixon won "four more years," for anyone who thinks that Watergate was a milestone in creating honest government, and especially for anyone who really believes Carter would never lie to us — I would like to reminisce about a time when things were different.

I've been carrying around and rereading a tattered copy of The Strawberry Statement since junior high school. It's a journal kept by a student at Columbia during school year '68-'69, a time when Tom Hayden was still just an "outside agitator." When was the last time you met anyone who was agitated about anything?

The budget doesn't count.

Being agitated about the V.U. budget is a self-centered waste of time that would make any decent S.D.S. member puke. But it should be a lesson, even though a lesson in futility. That is: Power still breeds power and its bastard brother corruption, as evidenced by the power structure in this university every day.

So why aren't we mad any more?

The Strawberry Statement is a diary of what it's like to be mad. James Kunen was no martyr, no saint. If the Third Reich was an example of the banality of evil, the 60's revolution showed the boredom of good. Perfectly ordinary people becoming idealist revolutionaries. Kunen's account reflects the day-to-day sameness of life that is lost to hype in the newsreels. Yet if the 60's students who gave a damn were not that different from us, why are today's campuses quiet refuges for neo-fascist administrators and lacoste-clad beer guzzling students?

Perhaps a clue to the nature of the change can be found in a telling entry to Kunen's book.

Monday, July 1: Laura said whinsically, "You know, after we take over and rule the world, we've got to find out who They are."

"Then," I said, "we'll be They."

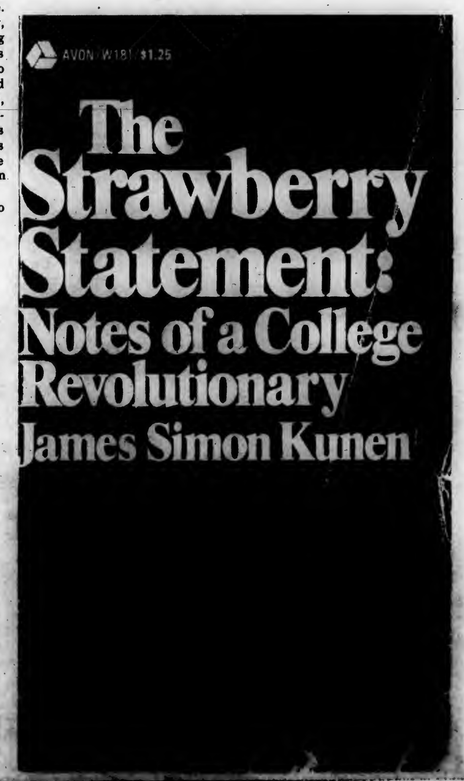
Maybe that's what has happened. After flushing Richard Nixon and his political army of hired thugs out of the bowels of democracy we assumed that the good guys had won. The war was over, the draft dismantled, we were becoming a real nice country — Policeman of the World. We became They.

Maybe it's time for They, we, us to sit down with a stolen copy of "The Notes of a College Revolutionary" and learn how it feels to get mad.



The Specials

By CHRIS SLAWECKI

Even though The Specials is their debut album, the Specials have been playing ska since 1977, and are well-known to those who follow BBC radio. Ska is highly energized dance music, a mixture rock, reggae and calypso that has become commercially acceptable in the wake of the successes achieved by reggae-rock bands like the Police or Talking Heads. Produced by Elvis Costello with Nick Lowe's tin-pan-alley mania, The Specials might initially sound impenetrable to American ears, but subsequent listenings reveal musical gems of rare humane populism and unrestrained rock and roll glee.

"It's Up To You," "Doesn't Make It Alright" and "Do the Dog" sincerely lament all forms of factionalism, musical, racial or otherwise. Terry's touching, youthful vocals are well suited to anti-racist idealism, while Neville, an ex-roadie, adds maniacal dub counterpoint. But the music isn't lost in delivering its message. The bouncy, rubber band bass runs, playful organ swirls and choppy reggae rhythms make this album an exhilarating romp of liberation.

"Monkey Man" and "Blank Expression" are lyrical contrasts that demonstrate the Specials' unquenchable thirst for simple, danceable rock and roll. Even though "Stupid Marriage" and "Too Much Too Young" appear to condemn unwed mothers, they don't disintegrate into mere name calling, but betray humorous tolerance. "You're Wondering Now," the last tune on the album, is an uplifting group chorale and provides a musical vision of the Promised Land that nationalistic sentiments have thus far been unable to present.

This is a tight album, but not a limiting one; compelling but not overly forceful. Hooks drift by almost unnoticed in the twisting, shouting carnival atmosphere of a record for sunshine, parties and smiles. By the Specials' own admission, "If you don't like the music/You don't have to dance," but if you do, this is a band you'll want to remember.

Robert Fripp
Under Heavy Manners

By JERRY ARTH

Frippertronics. Fripper-what? You heard correctly. Frippertronics is the inimicable sound of guitarist and producer extraordinaire Robert Fripp. Lead guitarist for the seminal rock band KING CRIMSON, and producer for such artists as David Bowie, Brian Eno, and Daryl Hall, Robert Fripp has just recently released a solo album of his own, UNDER HEAVY MANNERS, and to say that it must be heard to be believed is a gross understatement.

Frippertronics, pioneered by Fripp in 1972, consists of recording with a guitar and two Revoxes to form a signal loop and a layer sound. While Fripp has used it for years in concert, the first use of Frippertronics on record was with Daryl Hall's SACRED SONGS. With UNDER HEAVY MANNERS, Frippp recorded all the material at various small concerts, thus accounting for the incredibly long songs.

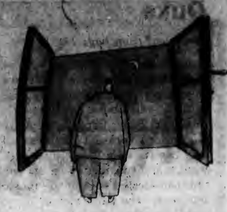
UNDER HEAVY MANNERS contains (according to the artist himself) two types of Frippertronics, Applied and Pure. Applied Frippertronics is the guitar sound used in conjunction with other instruments and/or voices, while Pure Frippertronics relies solely upon the guitar, like on Eno's MUSIC FOR AIRPORTS or MUSIC FOR BUS TERMINALS. On the new Fripp album, both varieties are used, and the results vary accordingly.

The Frippertronics style can either be ambient or imperative. Most of the cuts on UNDER HEAVY MANNERS are of the former variety. "Red Two Scorer," "1983," and "The Zero of the Signified" are all somnolent background tunes, apropos for a New Wave dentist office or department store. The Frippertronicized version of "God Save The Queen," Fripp's answer to Hendrix's "Star Spangled Banner," is tres punk in its mocking. But the standout song on the album is unquestionably the title track, "Under Heavy Manners."

"Under Heavy Manners" is Robert Fripp's lashing out at all the world's various isms. He touches on them all in this song, from nihilism to fascism, synergism to hesychasticism. The man who sings these lyrics, Absalm el Habib, sounds almost exactly like David Byrne of the TALKING HEADS. The guitar throbs in all of its Frippertronic glory on this cut, and it will probably become very popular in the rock clubs around the world.

UNDER HEAVY MANNERS is an excellent showcase for Robert Fripp's avant-garde talents. The true meaning of Frippertonics, and thus the underlying influence of most New Wave music as well, is fully displayed on this inventive and decidedly outrageous album. The last line of "Under Heavy Manners" is "I am resplendent in divergence." With his new record, Robert Fripp has shown that he most certainly is.

Genesis
Duke



By ROBERT McGOVERN

Genesis, since its first album, Foxtrot and Nursery Cryme, has been one of rock's premier art rock bands, along with their contemporaries Yes and ELP. Over their 10 year plus span they have developed a style which can almost be labeled as the "Genesis sound."

In 1976, Peter Gabriel (who could possibly be tagged as the "leader" of the group, if one was forced to do such a thing) left the band to pursue a solo career. Steve Hackett, the group's lead guitarist to this point, left the group three years later, prior to the release of And Then There Were Three, for the same reason. With the release of their solo albums, and recently those of Tony Banks and Mike Rutherford (present members of the band), they have disproved what many consider to be an age-old, time-tested rule in the music business: "the parts cannot be as good as the whole."

As was mentioned above, Genesis became a trio in 1978 before the release of And Then There Were Three and surprisingly enough, were able to maintain the quality and sound which has made them famous. On their latest effort Duke, for good or for bad, the sound lives on. Side 1 begins in standard Genesis style with a forceful overture entitled "Behind the Lines." They then continue with a series of very melodic and soothing compositions, the best of which is "Misunderstanding," "Man of Our Times," a song of very driving qualities, is also included on the side.

"Turn it on Again" introduces the second side, and it, along with the two songs following, invites and sweeps the listener away in the urgency of what the main character, Duke, is experiencing. The album ends with two instrumental cuts, "Duke's Travels" and "Duke's End" and one is left with the feeling that they did not listen to the album closely enough, because these songs do not seem to fittingly conclude the album.

That is what appears to be THE problem with this album. For all intents and purposes it is meant to be a concept LP, with all the individual cuts blending together in order to form a logical or at least, consistent conclusion. Overall, the songs deal with aspirations (whatever they might be) and that is the theme they have in common. But as for finding Duke an appropriate ending, the poor fellow still seems to be standing out in the cold.

Taken individually the cuts are good. On the whole the album is good, but as a concept, the album fails — miserably.

The Cramps
Songs The Lord Taught Us

By STEVEN COMBS

This band should be put to death. Punk rockers have been toying with violence as an art medium ever since Sid Vicious. But I refuse to believe that their self-destructive tirades of masochism and random attacks on audience members are in response to an external condition. This music could turn anyone into a rampaging rock and roll animal. The sound itself is violent, painful.

Perhaps the best concert the Cramps could put on would be a tag team wrestling match with The Clash. The "winner" would be thrown to the audience to be ripped apart while "I Was a Teenage Werewolf" blasts into the sky. Other cuts from this album would be equally suitable, "Zombie Dance," "Sunglasses After Dark," or "Strychnine."

Songs The Lord Taught Us is an album I intend to play a lot. But I also enjoy Charles Bronson movies and hockey brawls, so what do I know about art?

"Someone please make me stop", screams lead singer Lux Interior in "Teenage Werewolf." Please, someone, anyone, stop him. This music has a bad influence on the human mind. It makes me think about buying a chain saw — just for sport.

To compare the Cramps sound to anything is difficult. Maybe if the Ramones were a bad fifties group that had just had violent group sex with Patti Smith, then snorted Borax, they would sound like this. Maybe not.

If, for some reason, you want to feel the way this brain-killing poison makes you feel, just chew on some tin foil and bang your head against the wall.

LACROSSE ACTION

Women Concede Three Losses

By KERRY LYNCH

The Villanova women's lacrosse team has suffered three defeats this season. The club has lost to Drexel (23-1), Widener (13-3) and Chestnut Hill (7-4).

Senior co-Captain Jody Feidler is the high scorer with a goal for each match. In the contest against Widener, Drurie Snyder and co-captain Candy Rush also scored.

Monday was the first home match for the girls, who looked strong against Chestnut Hill. Goalie Kathy Lorent made several good saves. Michelle Morrison and Barb Palanzio each scored their first goals of the season. The defense was well supported by the checking efforts of Robin Hannon and Marie O'Connell.

Joan Johnson is the new lacrosse coach. A club player and former coach at Marple-Newtown, Johnson cites "improvement" as the measure of a successful season. She hopes the team will improve on an individual basis in order to lend depth to the young team. She also hopes to have more players in future seasons because "quantity creates quality."

Several matches remain before the close of the season and the girls hope to play competitively against each team.

Laxmen Fall Behind

By BRUCE MURRAY

Over the past week the men's lacrosse team went one for two as they defeated Morgan St. 7-5 before losing to C.W. Post 16-2. Currently their record stands at 1-5 with four games remaining on the schedule.

The season has been one of frustration as the team has suffered from internal problems. A few outstanding seniors lead this year's squad, but the nucleus of the club is comprised of underclassmen. Currently the team is in a rebuilding stage and the season should be viewed from this prospective.

Against Morgan St., goals were scored by seniors Bob Adams (2 goals and 4 assists) and Bill Hook (1), junior Al Horcher (1), sophomore Mark Jonaska (1), Freshmen Jeorge Pelaez and Dan O'Connell scored one each.

Against C.W. Post, not much can be said.

According to Coach Lee Stevens, "Post is rated number 5 in Division II, and they are worthy of it." Goals were scored by Bill Hool (1) and junior Chris Clark (1).

This week the Laxmen face Kutztown State and Fairleigh-Dickenson (Saturday 2:00 at home). "Kutztown is tough, and talented and they play a good schedule," Stevens claimed. On Monday, the Laxmen meet Mount St. Mary's and meet West Chester St. on Wednesday. Both games will be home at 3:30, across from the Fieldhouse.

To the members of the Villanova Women's Glee Club:

What words can we use to describe a club that has given of its time, its talent, and its energies, non-stop for this past year. How about committed, musical, and full of spirit. Thanks for upholding the Villanova tradition in every performance and a special thanks for making our competition victory possible. This thanks goes to each individual member for contributing to the success of the whole. We look forward to being together next year.

Thank you again!

Champs Continue Climb

By BETH WHITE

"We just put our minds to it, and we went out and beat them." A simple strategy, especially considering that this is not an ordinary team or an ordinary victory. The team is the Nads, and the trophy they won certifies them as the Delaware Valley Intramural Champions.

The Nads met some tough competition on the way to the title game, however, first here at Villanova with a final 87-75 victory over the Express to clinch the university title, and then a one-point victory over Drexel in the finals after defeating LaSalle and Temple in the playoffs. The last two minutes of the Nads' 54-53 victory triumph over Drexel exemplifies perfectly the talent and depth that made them the first team in Villanova history to win this tournament.

"We were down by eleven points in the second half," explains Nads' guard Paul Juelis, "but we fought back and narrowed the lead to one point with two minutes left in the game." Jeff Sherry, a sophomore swingman on the team, continues: "We were running with them, making them frustrated."

The lead changed hands and with nine seconds remaining, Drexel was ahead by one. They went into a zone defense, but the Nads beat it by going on one-on-one and Jay Connaghan scored on a turnaround jumper. Drexel scored again with a jump shot and only three seconds on the clock. Connaghan inbounded the ball to junior power-forward Howie Long at half-court, who passed to Jeff Sherry.

Sherry turned around and aimed for the basket and the two-point miracle the Nads needed for their win became reality. "You just shoot as good as you can," explained Sherry, "and luck takes over from there."

"We were just like the amazing Mets," added sophomore Pete Harrington. "We just went out and did it."

The Nads' success is somewhat of a surprise, though, even to them. Jay Connaghan started the team last year, along with Harrington, John McKay and Mike Greenhalgh. But that team didn't go very far and Connaghan decided that the team needed better players to give depth to their bench, so he added Juelis, Sherry and Long to the roster.

"The combination worked out well, even though we never had a practice," recalls Juelis. "We all played ball in high school, so we just coached ourselves."

"We worked well together," commented Sherry. "When one guy was off, someone else was hitting."

"Our opponents were all very good," continues Harrington. "They each had five or six inches on us — they were big and they could jump."

The Nads praised the intramural program at Villanova as "probably the best in the City because it is well organized and well run." The only improvements they suggested were better facilities and a more careful choosing of the referees.

"Our bench helped us out a lot. Connaghan always controlled the tempo of the game and came up with the key buckets when we needed them," remarked Harrington. Mike Greenhalgh, John McKay and Mike Fuoti also aided the Nads' climb to the top. "Fuoti is our best clutch player," commended Sherry, "especially his drives to the basket and on the foul line."

"Intramurals are fun," concludes Juelis, "and they always are." Not a bad performance for just having fun.

PENN RELAYS PREVIEW

Cats Warmup at Rutgers Relays

By ROBERT L. P. WALSH
And DAVE COSKEY

Tomorrow at Franklin Field, the Villanova track team will participate in one of the oldest and most prestigious track meets in all of America, the Penn Relays. This is more than just another meet for the Wildcats for Villanova has dominated the Penn Relays more than any other team and they have a winning tradition to uphold. Over the years, Villanova has captured 71 Championship of America Penn Relays and they have added 41 of those wins to the total in the last twelve years.

The Wildcats are the all time leader in championships surpassing host Penn who started winning their championships in 1895. The Cat total is accumulated by, 11 mile relay, 13 two mile relay, 13 four mile relay, 12 sprint medley, 19 distance medley,, 2 800m relay, and 1 shuttle relay championships.

Commenting on the importance of the Penn Relays Assistant Track Coach Jack Pyrah explained, "The Penn Relays means a lot, its our first big outdoor meet and its special to Jumbo because he's been involved with it for a long time." Coach Pyrah also added that performing before their home fans provides the Wildcats extra incentive. It is above all the long list of accomplishments that carries the Villanova runners a little faster around the Penn track.

"We've been so successful that the runners are afraid not to be successful because they don't want to be known as the team that lost in the Relays," stated Coach Pyrah.

Because many of the Wildcat quarter milers are currently injured, Villanova will not compete in the 1600 m relay for the first time in many years. Villanova will run in the 3200 m relay (probably Hunter, England, Tuffariello, and Don Paige), the 6000 m relay (Pinkowski, Korir, Childs, and Maree), the sprint medley relay (Tuffariello, Wilson, Young, and Paige), and the distance medley relay (Paige, Tuffariello, England or Hunter, and Maree). Carlton Young will probably be entered in the 110 m dash.

The only individual appearance by a Wildcat will be made by freshman Rodney Wilson who will run the high hurdles. Besides Paige, one other senior will be making his last appearance, Dean Childs.

Another aspect of the meet is that it is the only home meet (within the Philadelphia area) held while classes are in session. It will allow Villanovans their last chance to see senior world class ace Don Paige before his graduation.

Meet director, Jim Tuppeny, has tired to strengthen the field of this years relays to dethrone Elliott's troops. That possibility seems rather slim since the present team is one of Villanova's finest outdoor teams ever assembled.

This past weekend the Wildcats turned in several outstanding individual performances at the Rutgers Relays in New Brunswick, New Jersey. Carlton Young clocked a personal best of 21.14 to take first place in the 200 meters and Don Paige had Villanova's only other first place in the 600 (1:46.39). Rod Wilson placed second in the 110 m high hurdles, John Hunter second in the 800, Amos Korir second in the 1500, and Joe Mitrovich provided a fourth Wildcat second place in the javelin (66.52m).

With today's Penn Relays and last week's Rutgers Relays, the Cats look set to defend their IC4A outdoor crown later in May; they too are at Franklin Field.

Senior trackster Mark Worthington displays the grace that carried him to a smooth landing in the steeplechase at the Rutgers Relays. The hosting runner from Rutgers failed to negotiate the water jump as well.

Netters Continue Average Season

By KYLE GOTHNER

The Women's tennis team posts a 2-3 record as of their last match. The women have beaten Bryn Mawr and Kutztown State College and have lost to Bloomsburg State College, Georgetown and Lehigh. Freshman Carol Harrison is the only varsity player who has a perfect winning record.

Last weekend the women played in a United States Tennis Association — sanctioned tournament run and sponsored by Princeton University in Princeton, New Jersey. The tournament was for the number one and two singles and doubles players from 50 middle state colleges and universities. Diane Williams played first singles and lost in the first round. Gina Ayoub played second singles and also lost in the first round. Carol Harrison and Dawn Fischer played first doubles and made it to the quarterfinals of the main draw, losing to the number one seed from Princeton; 6-4, 6-1.

Bonnie Stokes and Diana Cappucio played second doubles and were eliminated in the second round.

The women play Immaculata and Lafayette this week and will wind up their season Monday against Ursinus.

McKee Doubles Success

By KATHLEEN STICKEL

When a reporter approaches a coach to interview her for a personal feature for the newspaper, one expects a proud smile with a nonchalant attitude. When a reporter approaches Debbie McKee, Villanova's women's head softball and women's assistant basketball coach, one finds a young woman with a bashful grin saying, "You don't want a story on me, what about my players, my team?"

This reaction seems to be typical of Coach McKee who has been active in athletics all her life. At Chester High, McKee played field hockey, softball and was a 5'6" center on the basketball team. She then went on to West Chester State where she received a B.S. in health and physical education besides playing basketball and softball.

McKee is presently a physical education teacher at Chester High, where she coached softball before coming to Villanova, where she has been coaching for three years.

McKee has been an assistant basketball coach at V.U. for the past two seasons. After a very successful year, she feels it's a "nice feeling to be able to move up a division and still do so well. I learned a lot from (head basketball coach) Harry Perretta about basketball but also about working with people." As involved with the team as she is, assistant coaches aren't always acknowledged for their efforts. "Debbie did a lot of behind the scenes work such as scouting. Not many people knew about all her work. If she didn't do that, forget it. We really needed that," praised Mary Anczarski, a guard for the team.

The basketball team isn't the only one who is grateful to McLee. Patty Nowlan, a sophomore outfielder, praised her for being a fair and open-minded coach. "She takes it very seriously, but winning isn't the only thing," comments Nowlan.

McKee herself still enjoys playing ball as she has played first base with the Delco Comets in an American Softball Association Fastpitch Softball League for four years.

McKee sums up all her experiences in athletics and coaching as being a "great personal growth, personal control and maturation as a coach." She was sure to include some praise for her teams as being, "selfless and having sincere concern for others."

In An All-St. Mary's Final

Athlete's Foot Clips Third World

By JERRY VENTRESCA

The 1980 Residence Halls Olympics Basketball Finals became a battle between two teams from St. Mary's Hall, Third World and Athlete's Foot. Third World's stall backfired and Athlete's Foot came up with the 41-40 victory.

The championship victory ended a perfect 16-0 season for Foot and upped their record over the past two years to 30-2. However, according to junior Ed Wallace, the team is breaking up because many players are moving off campus and the team wants to "go out as a champion."

Led by player-coach Sam Morreale, Jeff Sherry, Marc Haines, Jeff Sliter, Ed "Please Take Me Home" Wallace, Bob Kovarovic, Chris Ryan, Rodney Roeska, Jim Welsh and Tim Kane, Foot won an extremely physical match, spotted with controversial calls. Foot's semifinal victory was no cakewalk either: 42-40 over Stanford 4-D.

Third World's starting five were Derrick "E-Man" Powell, Jose Lloveras, Dan "Prince" Nicholson, Steve Lomaka and Pete Sartori. Following the game, Assistant Dean of Men Tony Martin presented the members of Athlete's Foot with mugs and shirts noting their accomplishments.

According to Wallace, the outstanding play of Sherry and consistency of Sliter was what brought the title. This year Sherry has been on two champion basketball teams: the Nads, who won the Delaware Valley Intramural Championship, and Athlete's Foot. Meanwhile Haines led the Foot in scoring this year, some say both on and off the court. "I appreciate playing with these guys and I hate to disillusion my fans but the rumors are true, I am retiring," said Haines.

Morreale was convinced his team would do well in the playoffs. "After we went through the very competitive St. Mary's League undefeated, there was a full team effort with 10 guys contributing and we won it," concluded Morreale.

SPRING SPORTS

By PAT FLYNN

This is an impossible week to write a column about sports. Seven or eight columns, all right. But one column is rough.

There's so much going on and it's really not fair. It's bad enough that two solid weeks of heaven-on-earth weather has kept us away from the books, dangerously close to finals. But there's also hockey, basketball and baseball to talk about. There's a feeling that this semester's grades could drop faster and farther than the Mets' winning percentage.

Not only that, but this being the final paper of the semester brings out guilt feelings about all of the subjects that have been omitted in this space so far.

There could have been a column about the rising popularity of professional soccer, a fact of life that could easily spell doom for major league baseball especially if common sense doesn't prevent a players' strike.

Or one about the expanded playoff structure that has infiltrated pro sports as well as the college game in recent years. The purists may grumble, but hasn't the Stanley Cup playoffs and NBA post-season play been a blast?

There should have been a column devoted to the tremendous image that the Villanova basketball program projects to the nation's public, both on and off the court. From top to bottom, that's one classy and clean organization, something that we've been led to believe is incompatible with winning. Villanova roundball defies the odds. We should be thankful.

Nothing was written about the Penn Relays and the remorse that Villanovans must feel at being robbed of the pleasure of watching this school's athletes take part in that other meet, the one that's being boycotted for our own good, or so they say.

Or about Villanova baseball, which has suddenly burst forth as a major eastern power.

Or about the incomparable Jake Nevin and his golden anniversary at VU.

If the semester had lasted longer, you may have been enlightened by reading about how the Astros, Phillies, Brewers and Angels will win their respective divisions this year (of course, from the same source that hasn't picked a winner since Nixon defeated McGovern — a lukewarm bauble of wisdom in itself).

The overlapping season is in full swing and it's going to get worse before it gets better. The NFL is chipping in with its draft of college talent. The Triple Crown of horse racing opens up at Churchill Downs next weekend. Tennis, anyone?

So have mercy, those of you who can resist wasting your time with these pointless distractions. Try to sympathize with people who simply can't get any work done, like a certain roommate I know who is an even-money bet to keep his books shut entirely until the Islanders are eliminated from the Stanley Cup chase. Lay out in the sun every day, party during the week and avoid studying as much as possible. Give the fanatics an even break.

Manager Jerry Miles Remembers

By KEVIN McKENNA

There was a time when the only things he did was carry the water bucket and hand out socks. He was the manager characteristically known for his thick glasses, big feet and inability to make the school team. His position was not one of the most distinguished jobs, to say the least. However, a profile of Jerry Miles will show how that has all changed.

This past season Miles was the "senior administrative assistant" for the Villanova men's varsity basketball team. In other words, Miles was the head manager for the team. However, any similarities between what most people think Miles did for the squad and what he actually did stops with his title.

"To be honest, I really didn't have any idea what the job entailed at first," commented the articulate senior business major. "However," he continued, "by the end of my junior year, I had a pretty good idea what my responsibilities would be."

When the team played on the road, Miles was the man in charge. He was responsible for making all travel and hotel accommodations, arranging the team's practices and pre-game meals, and planning the travel itinerary. Whether the Cats played on the road or at home, Miles was in charge of the team's expense account and for distributing tickets.

Miles played two years of varsity ball before helping his squad make the State Playoffs his senior year. Upon graduation, Miles was asked to play for Kutztown State. Once there though, Miles discovered that the school's basketball program didn't meet his expectations. He also decided that there wasn't any future in his major, secondary education, so he left after his freshman year. After working for a semester, he enrolled at Villanova.

"When I first started going to Villanova, I didn't know a soul," he explained. "I wanted to be associated with something but I wasn't sure what."

Miles found the identity he sought the following fall, when his application for manager was accepted by Villanova Head Coach Rollie Massimino. Ever since, Miles has been a permanent fixture on the Wildcat bench as head statistician.

"I liked to think that my position has helped me in two major respects," Miles stated. "Aside from the travel and excitement associated with a big time college basketball team, I feel my job has helped me learn to relate to other people and how to handle large responsibilities," he concluded.

Apparently Miles has handled every responsibility asked of him. "During the year Jerry has been my right hand man," commented Coach Massimino. "I simply do not know what we are going to do without him next year." Funny, when was the last time you heard a coach worrying about how he was going to replace his "water boy."

"My job has helped me learn to relate to other people and handle responsibilities."

If a list of his responsibilities doesn't change the image of the collegiate manager, then a quick biography will.

At one time Miles was a pretty fair basketball player. As a 6-2 forward for St. Pius in Phoenixville, Miles played two years of varsity ball before helping his squad make the State Playoffs his senior year. Upon graduation, Miles was asked to play for Kutztown State. Once there though, Miles discovered that the school's basketball program didn't meet his expectations. He also decided that there wasn't any future in his major, secondary education, so he left after his freshman year. After working for a semester, he enrolled at Villanova.

Cat's Record Rockets

By BOB CONWAY

Quick, do you know the record of the Villanova baseball team? You would desire a few hints to make your guess more calculated, right? Well, last year Villanova had its first winning season since 1972. This year was to be a rebuilding year. Considering three regular infielders of that 16-9 team of a year ago, which almost got Villanova their first post season tournament bid in 18 years, graduated. The idea of rebuilding was solidified further when Mike Venezia, a top pitcher, unexpectedly signed a contract with the California Angels. So that left Coach Larry Shane with a baseball team that was largely inexperienced. To the amazement of everyone, except Shane the Wildcats are playing baseball at an astonishing clip. The team's record, which seems to be a well kept secret, is a fantastic 17-2. Not bad for a rebuilding year.

This 17-2 tally makes Villanova a sound bet that the Cats will be participating in the NCAA tournament. This team, which includes only three seniors, "plays an aggressive brand of ball. We don't take a back seat to anybody," said Shane.

The aggressiveness that Shane stresses is reflected in the team's statistics. Villanova has scored 200 runs to opponent's 89. The Cats have powered ten more homeruns than the opposition. The most telling statistic which points out Villanova's aggressiveness at the plate is the team's composite batting average, a remarkable .349.

Leading the way in the hitting department are Bob Loscalzo, Bill Duryea, Tom Harrison, Don Casey, Donte Santoni and Bob Sullivan. All of these players are hitting above a very respectable .300 mark.

Left hander Bob Loscalzo enjoys listening to music at practice. During the games, Loscalzo takes delight in making his own music. He is hitting .525 in 17 games while driving in 34 runs. Junior Bill Duryea is hitting .432 and leads the team in homeruns (7) and runs batted in (39). Centerfielder Tom Harrison, is hitting .372 with 28 runs to his credit. Casey, Santoni and Sullivan are hitting .356, .364, and .300 respectively.

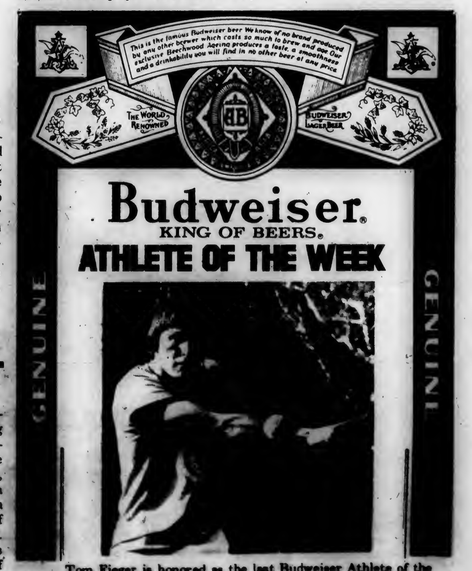
Leadership of this young team is coming from catcher Dave McHugh who hit .322 last year. With McHugh leading the way (driving in 16 key runs), the Cats are able to win the close ones. The pitching staff McHugh catches is also talented.

Steve Skammer has a 6-1 record. He has pitched 52 innings while striking out 60 opposing hitters. Another left hander, Ed Szymanski also is having a great year. He has a 5-1 record. Charlie McDermott is a freshman who throws hard. He has collected four wins with no defeats. The bullpen ace is Phil Sartori. He has collected two wins and four saves.

The next home game of the slugging Wildcats is Sunday at 1:30 against Seton Hall.

CORRECT

Due to an error beyond our control last week, the statistics noting outfielder Bill Duryea as Budweiser Athlete of the Week were not published. At that time, Duryea was batting 7-for-13, had a season-high six rbi's against La Salle and was within three rbis of the Villanova record set in 1977. His nine doubles, four homeruns and 29 rbis led the team. As of Tuesday, Duryea led the team in homeruns (7) and rbis (39) and had a .432 batting average. He was nominated by Ted Wolff.



Tom Fieger is honored as the last Budweiser Athlete of the Week for this semester. He has led the tennis team to win the Rider Invitational Tournament for the first time in Villanova history and went undefeated on a recent five-day road trip. Fieger was nominated by John Mulliken.

Orientation Workshops Upgraded

By KATHI IANNACONE and MARIANNE LAVELLE

Stress management and study skill workshops were two innovations in this year's four-day orientation program for incoming freshmen and transfer students.

This year's group of orientation counselors were taught "not only to be friends and resource persons, but also to be teachers, to train workshops on stress management and reading and study skills," said Steven J. Steckler, assistant dean of student activities and Orientation supervisor.

Orientation counselors presented the "Stress Management and Wellness" workshop to the freshmen in their separate orientation groups. The counselors were introduced to the workshop during their week of training by Dr. Jeffrey Pollard, Villanova counseling psychologist.

The "wellness" program is designed to teach one how to successfully manage every-day stress. "It is being aware and having the right frame of mind to handle stress very well," said Steckler.

"We introduce this at a pivotal period to young adults so that they can manage stress, be assertive about their bodies, learn that they are responsible for their health," he said.

Orientation Counselors from a previous year clown it up.

The Orientation Counselors also presented a study skills workshop, which dealt with such problems as how to take multiple choice tests, how to prepare an adequate study environment, and how to take essay exams. Ruth Brackman of the Villanova Counseling Center taught the workshop to the counselors.

In addition to these changes, there was an increase in the number of programs for off-campus residents and commuter students, said Steckler.

The resident students were given more free time, said Steckler, so that they could better adjust to dormitory living.

Orientation Entertainment also underwent changes, said Steckler. "Last year on the first night, we had a band party, and the OC's had a good time But the new students just looked at each other and went home.

"This year, we had a professional group called Play Fair come in the first night to do a program of 'icebreaking' games for the students. The feedback so far shows that it was very effective," he said.

On the next nights, students were presented with a wide range of activities to attend including films and a laser rock show. "We respect the fact that each student has different interests and we wanted them to choose what they like best," Steckler said.

Ellen Tracy, senior nursing student, and chairperson of Orientation said she was "amazed and definitely pleased" with the program. "Last year's program was deeply evaluated so that this year everything would be more organized and thankfully, there were no major problems," she said.

The coordination of the counselors was done by Tracy, along with Rich Sestak, assistant coordinator, and a group of undergraduates who formed the Steering Committee.

This Villanova Orientation coordination model, designed by Steckler and students previously involved in Orientation has been presented at Orientation workshops in Washington D.C. and Los Angeles and at four colleges across several colleges by Steckler.

"The staffing model is purposely designed to yield high levels of motivation from the student paraprofessionals (coordinators) and it has been very effective. It's a program other schools are looking at," said Steckler.

"At Villanova, I'd say students have one of the highest levels of responsibility and decision making in an Orientation program," he added.

Remarkable

Despite little popular acclaim, Brian Eno is responsible for some of modern music's finest moments. His most recent album, a collaboration with trumpet player Jon Hassell, combines African rhythms, Egyptian mysticism, and Eno's own particular brand of genius. In size, but hopefully not in content, this is the first Villanovan of the 1980-81 school year. The Villanovan, newspaper of record for the University, is published every Friday morning by a staff of undergraduate students. Please drop off any announcements or advertisements for the paper at our office on the second floor of Dougherty before 5:00 p.m. on the Tuesday before publication.

Connelly Center Wins Building Design Award

By JERRY DOUGHERTY

The Connelly Center has been named the recipient of a top award in architectural design by a local group of architects.

The Philadelphia chapter of the American Institute of Architects gave its Gold Medal award to the center and the Kling Partnership, the firm which designed it, in the category of completed buildings. The announcement of the award came last May.

Rev. John E. Deegan, O.S.A., vice-president for student life, and Marc Tuchman, Connelly Center director, accepted the award from the Philadelphia chapter along with a representative from the Kling Partnership.

The award is on display in the center's lobby, by the staircase. Presentation of the award was made by W. Wilson Goode, city managing director of Philadelphia, at a ceremony held late last May.

"It's a tribute to the architect and the University," commented Tuchman on the award. "It's exciting to know that the time and effort put into the building was judged outstanding," he added.

The Philadelphia chapter of the architects institute gave out awards for building design to local archtects in a variety of categories which included conservation and creativity.

The projects which were in competition for the awards submitted photographs and design drawings to the judges, who have customarily been members from another chapter of the institute; this year the judges were from the Washington, D.C. chapter.

According to Tuchman, the center could be in line for more architectural honors. He noted that awards are upcoming for interior design and also building furnishings.

Student Enrollment Up

By JERRY DOUGHERTY

Undergraduate enrollment at Villanova has increased this year despite a drop in the size of the freshman class.

Rev. Harry Erdlen

Rev. Harry J. Erdlen, O.S.A., director of admissions, estimated that overall undergraduate enrollment would show an increase of 200, from 6100 in 1979 to 6300 this year.

Erdlen said that more freshmen applications were actually received than last year, but that the restrictions imposed by limited facilities dictated the acceptance of fewer students.

The figures from freshmen applications indicate that 45 percent of those who applied were women, which represents a slight increase over last year and continues a trend in the direction of more female applicants.

Of all undergraduates enrolled, 40.4 percent are women.

Commuter students currently make up 31 percent of enrollment, and Erdlen does not believe that percentage will increase significantly in the future.

"Eighty-two percent of our applicants want to reside on campus. There's only a certain amount of commuter students available to us," Erdlen pointed out, citing as a reason Villanova's area, which he termed "not conducive to commuting students." He said that those students from Philadelphia who might otherwise commute to Villanova choose to attend less expensive schools closer to their homes.

As for students living in the immediate area surrounding campus, Erdlen stated that they just don't want to come to Villanova. "This is an affluent community; they can afford to go away to college," he reasoned.

Due to the projected 18 percent drop in the college-age population in the next ten years, Erdlen predicts that enrollment levels will begin to go down, probably to around 5700 by 1990.

Office of the Stud Body President

September 2, 1980

Dear Students,

To all upperclassman and freshman, welcome back. This year shall bring upon us many new challenges, both as individuals and as the student body. We must begin to effectively represent all the students at Villanova and not just a select few. It is imperative to the progress of student life that we all offer our views and demonstrate our concerns.

These and other goals can be met with responsible student goverment and the willingness of all the students to participate. We must be persistant and determined in our efforts; however, we must be responsible! Our quest for changes in Villanova hinge upon our ability as a student body to live up to the standards of the community. Vandelism and all other acts of misconduct can and will reduce our ability to bring about change. The inconsiderate actions of years past have only weakened our oppurtunities to reach our goals. There are enough obsticles before us without our adding more.

I call upon ALL the students of Villanova, resident and non resident to join me in my campaign for responsible and and effective goverment. I firmly beleive that united we can attain our ends and establish a new student goverment destined to represent all. As we begin this journey into the horizon of a new decade, I ask of you that we prove to the skeptics before us that we do care and we are sincere.

We cannot let ourselves be discouraged by frustration; we must instead be encouraged. We must combat the injustices before us with the justice that should be. We must champion the cause of better student life and better student goverment. I pledge my efforts to you and assure you I shall fight hard and persistantly for your needs and together we shall press on.

I thank you for your time and cooperation and look foward to this year.

Respectfully Yours,

Henry Amoroso
Student Body President

Cats Commence '80 Season

By BETH WHITE

Head Football Coach Dick Bedesem, entering his sixth season at the helm of the Wildcat gridders, boasts that this year's squad is "the best group of young men, talent-wise, that I've seen. They are very coachable, but what I am most impressed by is their intensity. During training camp with drills twice daily," explains Bedesem, "the team can start to lose their concentration."

"One reason I think the team is able to maintain their intensity is that everyone has a good feel for how we'll do this season." This optimism seems realistic, especially considering the Wildcats' 19 returning starters and 38 lettermen back for another season.

Senior Pat O'Brien has been the Cats' starting quarterback for the better part of the last three seasons and last year completed 43% (71 of 165) of his passes for 887 yards and six touchdowns. O'Brien's longest aerial was for 71 yards and Coach Bedesem has noticed that "Pat has matured into a real passer: his arm is in good shape for throwing long distances with increasing accuracy and he has developed a comprehensive understanding of the patterns, both offensive and defensive coverage." Bedesem feels that, "O'Brien is the one to show the way. He holds a lot of leadership and responsibility on the team."

For the first time in several seasons, the Wildcats now have three capable understudies should the Wildcat offensive strategies call for a variation in quarterbacking talents. Six-foot-one junior Bob Loscalzo completed five out of 15 passes last year for over one hundred yards and sophomore Dan Greene also has a forte for throwing the ball, as well as running out of the wishbone formation.

The icing on the cake for the Villanova offensive attack should come from freshman Kevin Ingram out of Dobbins, Pennsylvania. Ingram gained over 1,000 yards rushing and 847 passing and was named the Daily News All-Public League "QB of the Decade."

To supplement the Cats' quarterbacking skills, they also possess a strong and agile backfield and a fast and mobile receiving squad. Returning for another year at fullback are Don Ziesel and Craig Dunn. Ziesel was the Wildcats' leading rusher last year, carrying the ball 106 times for 587 yards and seven touchdowns. The halfback slot is filled with promise, especially from seniors Shawn Passman, Mike Gold and Greg Bedesem. Junior running back Billy Connors, sophomore Milt Corsey and freshman John Kason (from Roman Catholic) round out the ground attack. Willie Sydnor and Amos Coleman, both juniors, form the nucleus of the receiving threat, but sophomore Timmy Robinson has had "a disappointing sprained shoulder," explains Bedesem, and is losing valuable time in training camp. Sophomore Ed Sullivan has proven himself as a hard worker and may work himself in as a wide receiver for the Cats.

But there is no running attack, no pass protection, without a strong and steady offensive line. This year the line is dominated by senior co-captain Joe Arciciacono at offensive tackle, who leads several returning starters into the 1980 season.

Villanova's other co-captain, senior defensive back Dan Burke, led the Wildcats in tackles (137) and assists (119).

Villanova's main weakness, states Coach Bedesem, is that "our defense is much too pourous, consequently, this is where our improvement must come from." Bedesem continues that, "We now have the depth and quickness that we were formerly lacking. Our defense is strong, tough, physical and mobile." Behind the direction of senior defensive tackles Howie Long and Paul Phillippy and middle guards Joe Lucas and Joe Makoid, the Cat defense may be on its way to plugging up some of the holes that plagued the team last year.

This year the Cats also boast two returning kickers. Punter Joe Borajkiewicz claims Bedesem, is possibly one of the best punters in the East.

Placekicker Chuck Bushbeck converted 23 out of 25 extra points and 10 of 15 field goals for the Wildcats and "his accuracy and length have increased," explains Bedesem.

The first test for the Wildcats will come from the University of Maryland Terrapins tomorrow at Byrd Stadium. The Cats fell last year 24-20 to the Terps after leading throughout most of the game. The Terps' score came in the last 53 seconds on a short burst over the line of scrimmage by running back Charlie Wysocki.

Head Coach Dick Bedesem feels that, "If the team can stay healthy and keep up their intensity, then I think we can not only hold our opponents in the fourth quarter, but we can have a season that everyone can be proud of."

Stadium Under Renovation

Villanova University will shortly be completing its first major renovation of Villanova Stadium since the south and north stands were finished in 1961. A $1.3 million resurfacing of the athletic and track facilities inside Villanova Stadium should be completed by the end of this month.

Two asphalt undercoatings, 3/4-inch pad of rubber foam installed before the synthetic Astroturf was laid. The Astroturf, made by the Monsanto Company, will cover a field which measures 373 feet in length and 200 feet in width. It will be striped for football, soccer, lacrosse and field hockey. It totals 86,200 square feet or approximately 9,575 square meters.

Construction on the renovations to Villanova's stadium and track are completion. The track will give Villanova its first competitive in a decade and will also be open to all students.

An eight-lane, 400-meter Rubaturf track will go around the circumference of the Astroturf field. Rubaturf is considered a very porous material that is conducive for training and competition. It will be a similar track to the one used at Rutgers University, and will have the same red coloring.

In the fall, the [illegible] and final phase of the proje[illegible] ll be completed: lighting of the structure for nighttime use. There will be a bank of 10 lighting fixtures on three 100-foot poles on both the north and south sides of the stadium.

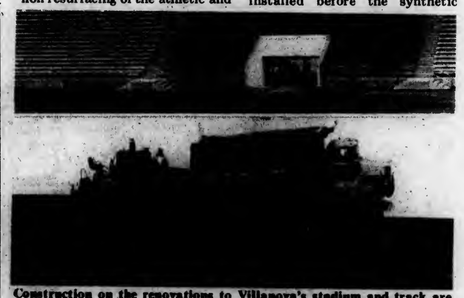
Villanova University will shortly be completing its first major renovation of Villanova Stadium since the south and north stands were finished in 1961. A $1.3 million resurfacing of the athletic and track facilities inside Villanova Stadium should be completed by the end of this month.

Two asphalt undercoatings 3/4-inch pad of rubber foam installed before the synthetic Astroturf was laid. The Astroturf, made by the Monsanto Company, will cover a field which measures 373 feet in length and 200 feet in width. It will be striped for football, soccer, lacrosse and field hockey. It totals 86,200 square feet or approximately 9,575 square meters.



Construction on the renovations to Villanova's stadium and track are near completion. The track will give Villanova its first competitive track in a decade and will also be open to all students.

An eight-lane, 400-meter Rubaturf track will go around the circumference of the Astroturf field. Rubaturf is considered a very porous material that is conducive for training and competition. It will be a similar track to the one used at Rutgers University, and will have the same red coloring.

In the fall, the [illegible] and final phase of the proje[illegible]ll be completed: lighting of the structure for nighttime use. There will be a bank of 10 lighting fixtures on three 100-foot poles on both the north and south sides of the stadium.

Olivia Newton-John stars as the muse, Kira, in the movie "Xanadu." She is sent to earth to inspire Gene Kelly and Michael Beck to make their dreams come true.

The two mortals, Kelly and Beck, decide to leave their unhappy lives behind and chart new courses through Kira's influence.

As always, a plot complication arises; Kira has fallen in love with the artist she has been sent to help. Muses are not allowed this or any other human emotion.

Kelly, now, must make Beck understand that life and dreams can continue despite the muses' rule. Beck is reminded that people kill their own dreams; all things are possible if people really believe. The artist soon finds out on his own that he can make his own reality if he tries.

ENO finds Tiger Mountain

By CHRIS SLAWECKI

Categories useful in conventional rock criticism aren't useful in a criticism of Possible Music, Fourth World, Volume 1. Labels concerned exclusively with rock (Heavy Metal, R&B, etc.) are less useful than broader terms like aesthetic and avant-garde.

Like Coltrane playing a blues with his tenor sax, Jon Hassell uses the other musicians like a springboard for his trumpet: Instead of plunging into their rhythms, he soars up and away from them. Brian Eno's bubbling undertones and exquisitely sensitive shadings are masterfully appropriate to Hassell's haunting wailings, especially in scenes like "Delta Rain Dream," where Hassell's stately and assured trumpet rises like majestic mountains against the sky of Eno's drifting "Background Cloud Guitar."

"Griot," variations on a basic snakecharmer's phrase repeated against staccato handclaps, is an example of musical genius. The first repetition flows into the second, but the second staggers into a shriek that eventually scales the third. The fourth repetition is magical, because Hassell bites down hard on the first three notes, sharply reversing them into an electronic echo that becomes wonderfully symmetrical as counterpoint to the rest of the riff. Although this may sound trivial on paper, made audible, it becomes breathtaking in spite of (or perhaps because of) the fact that this moment is so fleeting.

Eno's sonic landscapes are nearly perfect during "Bensele." Underpinned by a synthesizer program that sounds like a suicidal computer teamed with a skeletal rhythm section, Hassell skitters his trumpet across Eno's "Prophet 5 Starlight Background" like a flat diamond over a lush, green African pond. Mr. E's light touch with synthetic sounds is similarly awesome before and during the peals of (what sounds like electronic) thunder.

But, I started to say that the quiet beauty of this album is not expressible by a mere recount of particular, explainable events. This music is for neither the body or mind, but for the spirit; about and through experiences not easily rendered intelligible (gotta get a word through one of these days), but human nonetheless. Alan Paton began Cry, the Beloved Country with a description of one such subtle, yet burning, moment more beautiful than any I could conjure:

"There is a lovely road that runs from Ixopo into the hills. These hills are grass covered and rolling, and they are lovely beyond any singing of it. The road climbs seven miles into them, to Carisbrooke; and from there, if there is no mist, you can look down on one of the fairest valleys of Africa."

Brian Eno, sonic landscaper.

Dorm Rules Reemphasized

By JERRY DOUGHERTY

The residence hall policy concerning alcohol has been emphasized this year in a manner intended to counter the instances of alcohol-induced vandalism.

Instructions to resident assistants (R.A.'s) this year are more specific on what rules violations must be reported to the deans.

Regarding the policy on alcohol, which bans its use in the dorms, Bob Hanlon, an area-coordinator for Sullivan Hall, said that "the interpretation of it is stricter. It is now pretty much enforced to the letter rather than giving the R.A.'s discretion. Set guidelines have been established."

Hanlon stated that one of the reasons for the "stricter interpretation" of the alcohol policy is "its (alcohol's) correlation to vandalism."

Neither the alcohol policy nor any other residence hall policy has been changed over last year.

Acting Dean of Men Anthony Martin noted that in the instructions to the R.A.'s "we have tried to give them leeway in so far as enforcement.

"In the past we've presumed that students would abide by regulations and be moderated in their conduct," Martin said, adding that in his opinion, "events have indicated we've been a bit too loose."

Martin said he believes that ambiguity had developed in regard to policy. "We haven't been clear enough in the past in communicating our views on rules and enforcement in certain areas," he stated.

Commenting on this year's instructions to the R.A.'s, Martin said "We have clarified what the use of discretion is, whether unofficial action should be taken in response to a violation or if it should be reported to the dean of men." He termed these clarifications "a more effective approach to enforcing policy."

Sullivan Hall, scene of widespread vandalism last May.

The purported relation of alcohol abuse to vandalism can be illustrated by the events of last May 9.

On May 9, the final day of examinations, a large party developed on the quadrangle between Sheehan and Sullivan Halls. Considerable beer drinking was in evidence.

As the evening went on, several acts of vandalism occurred with the most prominent being the tearing of a sink from the wall of a restroom in Sullivan. That incident caused severe flooding in that building.

Thomas N. Trucks, director of University maintenance, estimates that the cost of damages from the events of May 9 amounted to more than $10,000.

Trucks also gave a figure of $66,769.67 as the total cost of damages from vandalism during the period September 1979-August 1980.

On the subject of vandalism, Martin stated, "We don't have to overemphasize our concern over vandalism . . . Our concern is exactly the same as before."

Martin cautioned that those incidents reported to his office will not be dealt with in a more severe manner than previously.

"If we have incidents reported to us, we will take strict action. No stricter than before, though," he said.

As a part of the refined emphasis on the alcohol policy, Martin said he will be urging the R.A.'s to conduct more meetings with upperclassmen as well as freshman.

He said he hopes to communicate the policy in a more informal, relaxed manner through the scheduling of receptions and other get-togethers with the residents.

Villanova Funding Ranked in Top Ten

By JERRY DOUGHERTY

Villanova ranked sixth nationally among Catholic colleges in cash funds raised during 1978-79, reports a recent survey of colleges and universities.

The survey, entitled Voluntary Support of Education 1978-79, credited Villanova with raising $5,182,530 worth of funds, more than such schools as Boston College and Holy Cross but $10 million less than Notre Dame, which for that year was first in monies raised among Catholic colleges.

The $5 million-plus raised during 1978-79 represents "a very good year" for the University, stated Edward J. Rideout, Jr., director of the Alumni Annual Fund. Rideout noted that 1978-79's funding total included cash received from the Covenant Campaign as well as a portion of John Connelly's gift toward the building of a student center.

Rideout explained that the figure of $5,182,530 represents the total of monies collected through contributions from alumni, parents, corporations, foundations, and friends; it also includes grants received from governmental agencies and private organizations.

Commenting on the money figures, Rideout declared, "We won't realize another year like that until phase two of the Covenant Campaign." To illustrate, he estimated that as a whole the University raised in cash only about $3.37 million in 1979-80.

Phase two of the Covenant Campaign is expected to primarily concern the construction of a new athletic complex; it is planned to get underway sometime in the early 1980's.

Although he could not be sure of how well the other Catholic schools did in their past year's fund raising efforts, Rideout's guess was that Villanova "would still be in the top ten in 1979-80."

New Framework Adopted For Student Government

By BILL CLARK

"The framework of student government has been reorganized to make it more efficient, effective, and able to solicit participation from all Villanova students," said Henry Amoroso, student body president. Amorosa was referring to the new structure of student government adopted during the past summer.

Under the new plan, a "Facilitating Committee" has been established. This Committee will be comprised of eight members: the presidents of the RSA, Villanova Union, Inter-Fraternity Council, and the Association of Commuting Students; the Student Body President; a Vice-President of the SGA, Lucy Gorski, Union program director; and Fr. Martin, dean of student activities.

"This new committee, which will meet approximately once a week, will serve as a coordinating body for student activities," said Martin. "Each organization will retain its autonomy, however, and each will have its own budget."

Fr. Martin said the committee will organize a calendar of all events scheduled by the organizations involved. According to Martin, this would avoid organizations planning similar events on or around the same dates.

Amoroso said that the SGA will have a different role in student government than that in the past. "This restructuring means a new beginning for the SGA," said Amoroso. "The SGA will no longer be a competing group on campus. We do not want to interfere with the activities of other groups at Villanova. From now on, we will act as a stimulus to these different organizations, trying to do our jobs as representatives of the entire student body."

"Our main objective will be to bring legislation to the Student Caucus and the University Senate that will help these student groups with their activities," said Amoroso.

As a result of the change in student government, all sub-committees of the SGA have been abolished. Amoroso said that ad-hoc committees will be formed by the SGA whenever a certain task comes up, but they will be abolished when the task is completed.

According to Martin, this reorganization plan has been discussed in the past. "In the fall of 1978, my assistant, Shawn Mahoney did a survey of about 30 other colleges and universities. She concluded that the SGA needed to incorporate other representative bodies at Villanova to be more effective."

Martin said that P.J. Winterhalter, last year's student body president, had proposed a "Student Government Organization," of which the SGA was merely a participating organization.

Amoroso said that this new proposal is nothing like the one of last year. "This concept is a lot simpler that the SGO, and much more efficient," said Amoroso. Also, under the old proposal, the IPC did not have an active role.

Presidents' Meeting

There will be a meeting of all student organization presidents on Tuesday, September 16 between 2-3:30 p.m. in the Cinema of the Connelly Center. Budgets, room reservations, policy and other matters will be discussed at that time. The Dean of Student Activities and his staff will be happy to field questions and help students develop programs at that time.

Presidents are requested to be present. Vice Presidents and Moderators are invited to attend.

Fellowship Nominations

The University Fellowship Committee is now receiving nominations of members of the Class of 1981 for the Fulbright, Marshall, and Rhodes Fellowships and members of the Class of 1983 for the Harry S. Truman Scholarship.

All interested students must be nominated by a faculty member. Nominations must be received in the Honors Office by Friday, September 19. Students must then submit all credentials materials by Friday, September 26 in order to be considered for an on-campus interview in early October.

Fellowship information, nomination forms, and credentials forms are available in the Honors Office, Corr Hall 101.

College Republicans

This Tuesday, September 16, the Villanova College Republican Club will meet in the West Lounge in Dougherty Hall at 4:00. New and old members are encouraged to attend. There will be a guest speaker, and refreshments will be served.

Political Union

The Political Union is holding its first meeting on Monday, 7:00 in the West Lounge of Dougherty Hall, September 8. All current members are expected to attend and any new students interested in membership are invited to attend. This is a General Meeting in which the plans and procedures for this semester will be outlined. During this semester is a National Election and one of the major candidates is expected to visit Villanova. Do not miss this opportunity to join one of the most worthwhile and rewarding organizations at Villanova.

Wife of Candidate Briefs Press

By VINCENT HAUSMANN

Keke Anderson, wife of presidential hopeful John Anderson, continued her active campaign efforts in Pennsylvania with a brief news conference at the University of Pennsylvania campus.

Mrs. Anderson fielded questions from student reporters from area colleges.

Mrs. Anderson announced the decision by the Federal Election Commission to extend post election funding for her husband's campaign. Mrs. Anderson also relayed the results of recent Lewis Harris and Time magazine polls listing Anderson's support at 18 and 15 percent, respectively.

"John Anderson has fulfilled the requirement for the League of Women Voters (15 percent standing in major public opinion polls) and an invitation to debate with Carter and Reagan has been extended. We can only hope that Carter will come down from the mountaintop to debate."

Mrs. Anderson extolled what she believed to be her husband's leadership potential, his consistent stand on the issues, and his willingness to meet the people.

"John has never avoided tough issues. He wouldn't think of staying in a rose garden and sending me out to campaign for him. John doesn't need Keke to prop him up."

Anderson also discussed her role as a potential first lady.

"My role would be no different than what it has been for the last twenty years — that of a wife and mother. I would act as a surrogate meeting the people and bringing back what they are talking about."

When pressed to define any special interests she would work on in addition to supporting her husband she declared her concern regarding the nuclear arms race.

"My concern is the extension of the fact that I have raised five children. I am deeply concerned about the escalating nuclear arms race and I will devote my energies in that area. I speak of a President who can institute new modes of thinking and not one who would adhere to the belief that we need nuclear superiority.

Mrs. Anderson also expressed her belief that her husband will win and that the country is ready for an independent candidate: "The only way to govern at this particular point is with an independent. Let the two party system look within themselves. I have never lost faith that America will recognize and respond to John as the only candidate of substance and quality."

Anderson reiterated her husband's stand regarding several key issues: his concern over America's dependence on foreign oil, his economic policies outlining a long range plan without a tax cut, and his support for handgun control.

"We all must give a little bit, stated Anderson, referring to economic and energy crisis. "Reagan's tax cut means nothing to the unemployed. The tax cut will cause inflation and deeply hurt older people and those on fixed incomes."

"We can't afford to replace one inexperienced governor with another," continued Anderson. Carter has had the advantage of a Democratic congress and two major pieces of his legislation were vetoed."

Mrs. Anderson stated that the time is right for John Anderson and that his judgements and decisions will not be based on party but "On country."

Anderson Group Forms

By STEPHEN HAGGERTY

Supporters of Rep. John Anderson, independent candidate for president, held an organizational meeting yesterday in the Connelly Center.

Villanovans for Anderson, as the group will be known, hopes to make students aware of John Anderson by promoting his campaign on campus. They are seeking the help of interested volunteers to work for the candidate from Illinois.

Chairperson of the Villanovans for Anderson organization is Junior Bill Clark. Dr. John Doody, Honors Director, is the faculty adviser.

"We will bring the campaign to the students by distributing Mr. Anderson's literature and organizing discussions. These may include debates with representatives of College Republicans and College Democrats," Clark explained.

Members of the organization have been busy contacting similar groups at other local schools. Their hope is to broaden the scope of the student campaign.

"The most important thing for us to do is to get a lot of people involved," stated Clark. "We are only limited in what we can do by the number of supporters we can attract."

During last spring's presidential primaries, interested Villanova students organized to support independent candidate John Anderson of Illinois.

Enough support could generate a campaign appearance by Mr. Anderson at Villanova this fall.

"Invitations have been extended to Mr. Anderson by most area colleges, including one from the Political Union at Villanova. Mr. Anderson will probably appear at the schools where he has the most support," said Clark.

Clark says he decided to support Anderson because of a growing disillusionment with the two party system and the candidates these parties have nominated. He believes other students share this feeling.

Faculty advisor, Dr. Doody, who teaches philosophy in addition to his duties as Honors Director, also senses this dissatisfaction. He believes this is the cause of much of the interest in Anderson.

"The Anderson campaign represents a positive response to the failure of the major parties to provide us with real leadership. The last two presidential elections can be considered as an indictment of the existing two party system," Doody explains.

The biggest problem facing Anderson, as Clark sees it, is to get people to consider Anderson as a viable candidate.

"I think that we just have to get people to listen to Mr. Anderson and see that he is frank and truthful. I believe that Mr. Anderson represents the political mainstream of this country," Clark commented.

"If Anderson could be as forthright and positive in office as he was last spring, he could be an effective leader. Also I think that a candidate not elected by a major party could be an advantage," added Doody.

Villanovans For Anderson is seeking interested students. Those who wish further information may leave a note in the Anderson campaign mailbox on the second floor of Dougherty Hall.

Dr. John Doody, faculty advisor of Villanovans For Anderson.

"The only reason Anderson won't have a chance is if the American people don't give him one. And if the American people don't give Anderson a chance, they not only are cheating him, they are cheating themselves," Clark said.

New Telephone System Installed

By BILL ROCK

Under the direction of the business office, a new, computerized telephone system was installed at Villanova over the summer months.

The system, manufactured by Bell Telephone, is known as Dimension 2000. It provides many services that the previous system lacked.

Dimension 2000 can be programmed to hold, transfer, and forward calls; allows three people to be on the same line concurrently; automatically selects the most economical route for outgoing calls; keeps detailed accounts of every call made; and informs a caller who encounters a busy line when that line is free.

In addition, the new system allows frequently used phone numbers to be replaced by four-digit codes.

The previous system, installed in the 1930's, required callers to dial a main university number. These callers were then routed through an operator-assisted switchboard to the desired extension.

Dimension 2000 allows all university offices to be telephoned directly. Each office has been assigned its own 7-digit number, which be reached without operator assistance.

The original decision to switch to a more modernized telephone system was made several years ago. Work on the installation of Dimension 2000 was begun last fall, accounting for the presence of Bell Telephone trucks on campus.

Each university office was requested to report its telephone-related problems and needs. Following that, new cable was laid, the dial telephones were replaced with touchtone sets, and a new switchboard was installed.

Dean to Stress Communication with Students

By BILL ROCK

Anthony Martin, previously assistant to the dean of men, has been named the new acting dean of men, replacing Allan Wechsler.

Martin stated that he did not see the title "acting" dean as affecting his role.

"I see myself as the dean of men," he explained. "My present title points to the fact that I could be the last dean of men.

"I know that often the title 'acting' means that you are a temporary replacement until someone else is found. In this case, however, it points to a possible restructuring of the present program."

Martin emphasized that he hopes to make his office more than just an enforcer of regulations.

"Enforcing rules really only brings us into contact with a small percentage of the resident population," said Martin. "Yet, this office has a responsibility to every student at Villanova.

"I would like to have our staff do more in the way of contacting students and finding out what kinds of problems they are encountering. We have to sit down and talk to students in order to find out how we can be of service."

Martin pointed out, however, that this approach does not limit the dean of men's enforcement of regulations. "We are not by any means de-emphasizing rules and regulations," he stated. "We just want to show that there is much more to this office than that."

We are not by any means de-emphasizing rules and regulations. We just want to show that there is much more to this office than that.

- Anthony Martin, acting dean of men

Martin praised the new academic areas in Galberry Hall and the 4-B wing of Stanford Hall as experiments which will hopefully improve the quality of dorm life.

"In Stanford, we are dealing with all freshmen," he said. "This is a chance to show that freshmen are not necessarily immature or rowdy. This will hopefully demonstrate that an all freshmen area can be one of the most successful on campus."

Martin concluded by emphasizing the need for more direct contact with students. "We spoke to the freshmen during Orientation," he explained. "We need more such contact with students in small groups."

Union Prepares for Year

By LORI MADDEN

The Villanova Union is planning an active year. The Union acquires and provides entertainment and activities for the University. Scheduled events include film and lecture series as in previous years.

Feature films acquired by the Union have received excellent reviews, and will be shown in the Connelly Center cinema. Kramer vs. Kramer and Norma Rae are examples of the fare which students will view this September.

"Better films are obviously more expensive, but will draw more patronage. If you put out the money, you'll get it back," sums up Lucy Gorski, Villanova Union's program director.

The cinema seats 206 viewers. All seats are one dollar. In some cases films will be run in Dougherty's WestLounge. Showtime is at 7:00 and 9:00 Thursdays and Fridays.

A series of lectures is also scheduled. General, specific, regional, and local topics will be covered. Five presentations are expected per semester, an increase over previous years when there were few lectures.

"The Union would like VU students to gain "exposure to every kind of entertainment possible," said Gorski. Emphasis will be placed on cultural, classical, and performing arts. Publicity and scheduling concerning these areas of entertainment will appear throughout the year.

Presently there are no concerts scheduled. The Union continues to bid for acts however. Villanova's proximity to Philadelphia, with it's Spectrum, and other music centers, provides difficulty in obtaining acts, Gorski explained The Field House seats 3,000 while the Spectrum seats 13,000.

The Connelly Center will play an increasing role in the Union's activities and in the words of Lucy Gorski, "will provide a trial year for us." Lunch-time specialty acts are in the workings for the Rathskeller section of the center. It is not certain whether coffee houses will be held in Connelly.

The Union's recruitment meeting will be held Sept. 16. Between 200 and 400 members compose the union.

Gorski, and Assistant program director, Christine Muller, expect a good year for the union and the University. "If people are interested, please come to the Union and share your ideas — we can help get programs you want started," stated Gorski.

Revised Program Enjoys Success

By VICKY PARENTE

The freshmen orientation program has undergone extensive change over the past two years since it has come under the direction of Assistant Dean of Student Activities Steven J. Steckler.

Steckler revamped the program in 1979 introducing what he calls a "para-professional staffing model." He said this incorporates motivational theories of selection, training and supervision.

"The students involved in orientation became "para-professionals" who worked alongside professional staff members assuming a role in the design and development of the program and working areas of goal setting and determining the needs of new students," said Steckler.

According to Steckler, an effort was made this year to treat the freshmen in a more adult manner.

"An effort was made to use games and exercises that were safe and that truly reduced anxiety and to eliminate games that were considered silly and juvenile," he said.

The freshmen were asked to evaluate their orientation on the final day of the program. However, the results of the evaluation will not be available for at least a month, Steckler said.

Asked for his own assessment of orientation this year, Steckler said "We have made great strides in the past two years toward a program that reduces anxiety, provides a sense of community and is a learning experience for the students involved in the program."

Office of the Student Body President

To all Villanovan Readers:

I would like to apologize for the condition and spelling of my letter to the students of September 2, 1980. Due to a rush and lack of communication, the rough draft was accidentally submitted for print. I assume all responsibility for any errors, and below you will find a corrected copy.

Again, with apologies, I remain,

Respectfully,
Henry J. Amoroso
Student Body President

Dear Students,

To all upperclassmen and freshmen, welcome back. This year shall bring upon us many new challenges, both as individuals and as the student body. We must begin to effectively represent all the students at Villanova and not just a select few. It is imperative to the progress of student life that we all offer our views and demonstrate our concerns.

These and other goals can be met with responsible student government and the willingness of all the students to participate. We must be persistent and determined in our efforts; however, we must be responsible! Our quest for changes in Villanova hinge upon our ability as a student body to live up to the standards of the community. Vandalism and all other acts of misconduct can and will reduce our ability to bring about change. The inconsiderate actions of years past have only weakened our opportunities to reach our goals. There are enough obstacles before us without our adding more.

I call upon ALL the students of Villanova, resident and non-resident, to join me in my campaign for responsible and effective government. I firmly believe that united we can attain our ends and establish a new student government destined to represent all. As we begin this journey into the horizon of a new decade, I ask of you that we prove to the skeptics before us that we do care and we are sincere.

We cannot let ourselves be discouraged by frustration; we must instead be encouraged. We must combat the injustices before us with the justice that should be. We must champion the cause of better student life and better student government. I pledge my efforts to you and assure you I shall fight hard and persistently for your needs and together we shall press on.

I thank you for your time and cooperation and look forward to this year.

Respectfully,
Henry J. Amoroso

Combining Concern and Responsibility

To be Fair, Equitable, Accurate, Relevant

This editorial is reprinted from a previous issue.

Twelve years ago, a Villanova student named Ron Javers sat down at this typewriter and wrote editorials as the editor-in-chief of the first Villanovan published without censorship. Unencumbered by restrictive controls, Javers and his staff proceeded to publish prose that proponents of the "new journalism" would, if not applaud, at least notice.

Both Javers and The Villanovan have come a long way since 1967. The former editor-in-chief survived one of the most bizarre incidents in American history while covering The People's Temple of Jim Jones in Guyana for the San Francisco Chronicle. And The Villanovan no longer preaches anti-war rhetoric or editorializes on professors and LSD.

The impact of Javers and his "radical" newspaper is not lost on the new Villanovan staff, however. As we publish our first issue today, we begin an undertaking in which we will seek to represent the views of the Villanova community both accurately and actively. We pledge to be journalists first and foremost, examining the issues which require a closer inspection, seeking to clarify and enlighten.

Our commentary and suggestions will, we trust, be relevant and constructive, and will be delegated to the editorial pages where opinionated writing belongs. We welcome letters on any subject, and will print as many as possible. We will make every attempt to be fair and equitable in the scope of our coverage.

Our most valuable lesson from the days of Javers and his contemporaries is a recognition of the mortal sin of collegiate journalism — dormancy. It would be nice to be content with life at Villanova, but we cannot, and we will not. We will try as hard as we can to work for constructive change in areas ranging from the drinking age and the budget to problems of smaller scope. Surely controversy will arise somewhere down the line, but we will make every attempt to insure an evenhanded treatment of all issues.

Dan Rather once said that journalists must be prepared to be received with dislike, but never with disrespect. We think that's a pretty good philosophy. If we can combine the eagerness and concern of those old radicals while earning the respect of our peers, we will have accomplished a great deal.

The Villanovan accepts letters to the editor and prints as many as space will allow. Letters should be typed, double spaced, and not more than 300 words. Letters must be signed, but names may be withheld from printing upon request. Deadline is 5:00 p.m., the Tuesday before publication.

Sunshine Day

Greetings from the SUNSHINE Capital of V.U. to the class of '84 and to all the upperclassmen! It's hard to believe it, but another school year here at Villanova is underway. But don't let those September blues, or any of the other months' hoh-hums bum you, 'cause Project: SUNSHINE is beaming over the campus, and, this year, we're brighter than ever.

For those of you unfamiliar with Pro: SUN, Project: SUNSHINE is the official volunteer program of the University. Each year the University is besieged by requests from local social service agencies, hospitals, schools and centers for volunteers (students) to provide tutoring, general recreation, big brother/big sister relationships, to name a few. Pro: SUN coordinates these types of services by providing information and assistance to the interested student, by acting as a liaison between on-campus organizations interested in service projects and the agencies involved in our program.

I'd like to give you the run-down on what we've done this year, already, and what we plan to do.

The freshman class was introduced to Project: SUNSHINE during Orientation at the Activities Presentation, and at the Activities Forum. I commend you as a class because already over seventy of you have made applications to be volunteers. By the way, if you did sign up, don't forget to stop in our office, 121 Tolentine, to arrange your volunteer work. Mrs. Hansen will be waiting for you.

Pro: SUN will sponsor a traveling show — one which will visit nursing homes and other institutions. Have a talent — singing, dancing, instrument playing, acting, etc. Let us know. Right now, I'm looking for 4 guys and 4 girls to appear as the featured singing group in the show. We're calling them,as if you didn't already guess, that's right — the Sunshine Singers (How original!)

Also, on the agenda is the annual FAS, that stands for Faculty, Administrators, and Staff, Christmas gift-giving drive. This project concentrates on non-student members of the University because it was initiated quite hastily last year when two state hospitals called our office the day before finals started with a desparate plea for assistance. It was very well received by the FAS.

In the spring, we sponsor a Fast to raise funds for our annual Sunshine Day — that's the biggie.

Sunshine Day — this year's will be the third annual — is a recreation day which hosts shut-in persons of the community to a day of refreshments, entertainment, and companionship.

If you'd like more info on any of our programs, or have some ideas of your own, stop in and see us in the Social Actions Office, 121 Tolentine Hall. As our flyer says, we invite you to "spread a ray of sunshine." And don't forget, whenever you're walking around campus and you begin feeling the nags of the hoh-hum, boredom blues, we've got your SUNSHINE.

Chairman, Sunshine Day

Classical Studies

Dear Editor,

You might be interested in the attached note from the classical world.

According to statistics released by the Educational Testing Service, Princeton, N.J., college seniors planning to study classics at the graduate level achieved the highest mean score in the verbal aptitude section of the GRE administered between October 1, 1977 and June 30, 1979. Their mean score of 641 was 32 points above the second highest major, comparative literature. No other discipline achieved a 600 score. Students planning graduate studies in educational administration placed third from the last out of 92 disciplines, ahead only of majors in physical education and home economics.

Counselors Stress Accessability

By MELISSA ARAYA

Dr. Jeffrey Pollard, clinical psychologist and staff member of the Villanova Counseling Center, sums up one of the major problems students have: overcoming anxiety and embarrassment and seeking professional help from trained individuals.

"I think it's unfortunate that it is commonly considered 'uncool,' to go to the Counseling Center. I think that often there are situations that the Counseling Center could handle very efficiently, that go on for semesters with people — difficulties with relationships, in dealing with roommates, interacting with friends or balancing study time — all the way to dealing with the loss of a loved one, and never feeling that the Counseling Center could help them. As a matter of fact, that's precisely the thing that we can do, and want to do, and can do well."

The Counseling Center, located in 106 Coor Hall (telephone - 645-4050) is staffed by three full-time counselors, with the aid of two doctoral students acting as interns. Director of Counseling Services is Dr. Neville who also oversees the Career Development Center and Reading and Study Skills program. Pollard, along with Associate Director Dr. Greenhouse, counsel students and formulate various programs geared toward common problems. Examples are the soon-to-be-announced Test Anxiety Program dealing with methods to prevent students from "choking up on tests," and the Stress Management program.

Dr. Pollard emphasized the adaptability of the counseling service to the needs of the student, "People will have a choice of counselors, and an opportunity to decide what kind of counseling he or she will receive, according to his or her needs." As far as personal data is concerned, he stressed the strict confidentiality of all information concerning a student, adding, "Students can be totally anonymous if they want to. The only reason we collect information is so that we can contact a student in an emergency."

The Center is open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. for individual counseling but a group program, to be held during the evening, is now being formed. Students can call for an appointment, or stop by the center. According to Dr. Pollard, "We're really concerned with making people know this is the place to come — it's a safe, comfortable, protective place."

Germans Present Passion Play

By DR. JOAN D. LYNCH
Assistant Professor
Theatre Department

In 1634 the tiny Bavarian village of Oberammergau was stricken with the plague. The townspeople vowed that if God spared them, they would perform the story of Christ's Passion every ten years in gratitude. He did and they have. In 1680 the date was advanced four years and the play has been performed at the start of each decade ever since.

Going to Oberammergau has the feel of a pilgrimage, as indeed it is for most of the playgoers. The tickets can only be purchased in a package with accommodations for two nights. Prices are steep, 191 to 375 DM ($108 to $212). Most of the tickets were sold to tour groups with buses and bags labelled "Christian Tours" or more often, "Oberammergau Tours" and included stops at other places of religious significance.

They were said to have come from all over the world, but in the time I was there the majority seemed to be from the United States, Canada and England. Since the tickets were sold mainly in large lots to tour operators, obtaining an individual seat was very difficult and many Germans were unable to get tickets which has caused some bitterness.

The play itself is a curious blend of primitivism, medieval mystery play, the operatic tradition and nineteenth century pictorial realism. The present version was written in 1810 and revised between 1850 and 1860. Minor textual changes were made this year because of anti-Semiticism charges. Performed on a fixed set with three playing areas, the central area is curtained to permit multiple scene changes. The stage is open to the elements; the breezes and the moving clouds add to the naturalistic staging of scenes such as Christ's entry into Jerusalem on a donkey, the Roman centurions on horseback trotting upstage through an archway and the birds flying out of jars as Chirst drives the money changers from the temple. Tradition has it that frequently it will rain all day and stop after the crucifixion. This happened the day I saw the play; the sun came out brilliantly during the Resurrection tableau leaving the audience with an eerie feeling.

Structurally, choral interludes are intercut with the staging of scenes from the last days of Christ. The choral songs concern Old Testament analogues to the life of Christ. For example, prior to Judas' betrayal of Christ, the chorus tells the story of the sale of Joseph by his brothers to the Ishmaelites.

At the conclusion of the song the curtains of the middle stage part to reveal a living tableau of the scene. These pictures are frozen, but the staging of even the major scenes is static and primarily pictorial.

The acting is highly stylized; Judas actually does pull his hair out. Frequently the naturalistic staging is totally undercut by unrealistic details. For instance, Judas pulls off his belt to hang himself, and ties it on a tree limb that not only wouldn't hold him, but that was not much taller than he.

Many of the choral interludes end with a moral. Cain had remorse after slaying Abel; Judas knew remorse for his betrayal of Christ; you, too, will be sorry if you do evil things.

A scene from the passion play at Oberammergau.

The cast of Oberammergau depicts the triumph and glorification of Christ.

The play is six hours long with a break for lunch. At the conclusion, many playgoers noted that though they were overwhelmed by the sheer magnitude of the production (chorus of 49, cast of 200, full orchestra) they didn't have the religious experience they had hoped for.

There are no intimate scenes that allow the audience to empathize with Christ as a person and the staging and acting styles have a distancing effect that doesn't allow the audience to get emotionally involved.

Perhaps the most interesting aspect of Oberammergau is the town itself which has a medieval feel about it with its narrow, winding streets and brightly decorated houses. Many of the people, though clearly involved in an extremely busy tourist industry (the 5000 viewers are all housed and fed for two days), are open to talking to visitors.

The actor who plays Herod, for instance, presides over his woodcarving shop and willingly signs his autograph to postcards of himself in costume and makeup. He has been in the play since 1910 when he appeared as a boy in the crowd. Subsequently, he played Judas for two decades.

There are other people in the town who are also willing to talk. These are the dissidents who claim that the town is rent in two with "brother against brother, father against son." When I marvelled that so much talent could be found in so small a village, one woman said that there is twice as much, but that half the town won't participate in the Passion Play. The issues are twofold.

First, this group dislikes the present version of the play preferring a more authentic seventeenth century version that is closer to a medieval morality play.

Association Serves Everyone

By BOB COUREY

Robert Capone, director of the Alumni Association, said that he would "like every student who leaves Villanova to feel as though he has never graduated."

The Alumni Association is a multi-faceted organization designed for the assistance of alumni and present students alike, said Capone.

Two major events are sponsored by the Alumni Association each year. One is Homecoming, which is to be held on September 26 this year, and class reunions, which are held in the Spring.

Capone stressed that the Alumni Association does not restrict its services only to the alumni. Many services are available to the graduate and undergraduate students, such as job placement services. Records of alumni are kept on file in order to help students if they need some sort of information, he said.

The Association extends its reach into many portions of the country. There are 40 Alumni Clubs in the continental United States, one in Puerto Rico, and one in Panama. The purpose of these clubs is to "maintain the ties and heritage of Villanova with the alumni," commented Capone.

This week the Villanovan decided to give the frosh their first chance to speak up about life at Villanova. We asked the freshmen the following question: "What did you expect when you came to Villanova, and how did you find that differed from your expectations."

When I saw all the rules and regulations I figured that Villanova would be kind of strict, but I've found that there's still the time and ability to have fun as well as good conditions for studying. There's a happy medium. And the people here are a lot more friendly than I expected.

The people are nicer than I expected, especially the upperclassmen. The atmosphere is academic, but people know when it's time to stop studying and have fun. I just can't wait for the place to go wild.

Ann Hannigan '84

I expected the teachers to be tougher than they are and I didn't expect the classes to be so informal. The atmosphere is more friendly than I expected to find at a big campus like this.

Jerry Green '84

Listening to my teachers in high school I expected the classes to be really hard and to find myself with no free time at all, but I've found that if you get yourself organized, there's time for other things besides studying. Also, the people have been much friendlier than I expected, everybody's been really willing to help and give advice.

Karen Montrella '84

I expected the people here to be really hassled and not have the time to talk to you, but I've found that everyone here is very friendly.

Bob Everett '84

Since I'm a commuter I thought that I was going to feel like an outsider here, but I really feel at home on campus. I didn't think that I would be spending much time on campus or getting involved in any activities, but now I feel that I will.

Hellman Remembers

n her second memoir, Pentimento, Lillian Hellman attempted see "what was there for me n, what is there for me now," nd portraits of life and people have deeply effected her. In ling with the past and memory becomes quite clear that in timate and in her newly pubed memoir, Maybe, Miss Hellbelieves in the words that the ic Northrup Frye used in cribing the moments that pass ore us, namely, that "the past nly functional when we neither empt to escape it or forget it." Miss Hellman does not seek ce in the past. She carries no shed portraits of life and ple around with her. Rather, in attempt to see, to find reality, grasp the ever elusive truth, she ks back utilizing the distance has afforded her and attempts piece the myriad pieces of life's zle together for her. She does ever mindful of memory's penant for distortion risking the nd's shortcomings and conually finding something there ich she might have or might not e known.

n Pentimento, Miss Hellman lt with those she knew and ed — her friend, Julia, her er, Dashiell Hammett, and of rse, the theatre. However, in ybe Miss Hellman glances k in time using a fictional/real nd whom she did not know well all. Sarah Cameron is a utiful, seemingly complex man who drops in and out of llman's life over the years and vides the focus of Maybe. What ah represents for Hellman is at those who exist on the periery of our lives often mean to us shadowy, elusive figures step- into our circles infrequently nonetheless influencing our ughts and, in Hellman's case, life and her decisions. Miss llman questions the choice of ah as a subject for a memoir: hy am I writing about Sarah. I y really began to think of her a years ago, and then not often. hough I always rather liked , she is of no importance to my and never was." The question arises in the reader's mind; vever, the fact that Miss Hellman chooses someone she knew little of,invites the reader to move on with her and eventually discover that information about Sarah and the people that Hellman met through her has indeed influenced the author's life. Perhaps more than she is ready to admit before the end of the story.

Some of the episodes regarding Sarah range from what Hellman believes to be a glimpse of the woman in the lobby of a San Francisco hotel at the story's beginning, to encounters with her in New York, Rome, and Paris. The unsure and mysterious nature surrounding the San Francisco event sets the tone for later encounters with Sarah. In Italy, Sarah denies her identity in a strange, yet characteristic scene. Sarah does and always will remain as undefinable and unsure as the fleeting glimpse Hellman thought she saw of her in the San Francisco hotel lobby.

A particularly amusing scene occurs in the work concerning a period in Hellman's life where she bathed quite often (partly the result of a lover's comment). Hellman tells it because the same lover has told Sarah the same thing. Sarah keenly understands the difficulty Hellman is going through and allays her fears about smells. A bond, however slight, is established between the two.

This is Hellman's fourth memoir and with each work she has improved in style. She echoes Proust and Woolf at times in dealing with the past and memory and maintains her strength in character description: "Sarah had a strange way of speaking as if words were not good enough or too much trouble."

Indeed Hellman has raised the memoir to an art form and holds the distinction of being one of the few literary figures to have a most productive literary life at age seventy five with a new form. After a career as one of America's leading playwrights, Hellman has chosen a form more personal yet sufficiently demanding to rate as one of America's leading writer's of the past two decades.

Maybe, perhaps more so than any other memoir by Hellman, also reveals a wounded and sensitive woman behind the tough facade many remember Hellman for in her appearance before the House Committee on Un-American activities during her ordeal with the late Senator Joseph McCarthy (the subject of Scoundrel Time).

Maybe is populated with searching, suffering souls and Hellman undoubtedly is one of them. Yet she does not wallow in self pity. The end of the story finds her seeking refuge in her self and in the water which earlier she sought to relieve a supposed smell. Reminiscent of Jake Barnes' swim at the end of Hemingway's The Sun Also Rises, Hellman enters the water and everything after seems somehow changed: "Everything was better." For Hellman the water is movement and the woman we see at the end of the story is Hellman now — going on, despairing at times, yet searching with a strong will and determination to continue growing, thinking, and surviving.

Classics Come To Campus

By CHRIS SLAWECKI

Although pop films usually attract good audiences here, strong films released with little fanfare, especially foreign films, usually don't. Villanova's Cultural Film Series, which begins September 28 in the Connelly Center Cinema, hopes to resolve this by exposing subscribers to both American and foreign films of importance.

Some films will be familiar to students. Chaplin's "The Great Dictator," made on the eve of the United States' entry into the Second World War, is perhaps his greatest work not only for its content, but also because of the context into which it was released. "Girl Friends" is a very real, popular film about young women making career decisions surrounded by the morality of self-liberation, and is laced with characters that many will recognize as parts of themselves. Robert Altman's "Nashville" is another popular work, presenting a sophisticated look at complex America that at once satirizes and glorifies it.

And, because students may be unfamiliar with certain other films, the series offers moments of unanticipated meaning. "Madame Rosa" and "The Garden of The Finzi-Continis" deal with the timeless, universal theme of what the human spirit can do in the jaws of adversity. Madame Rosa, which enjoyed a small degree of attention in the American media, tells a story fraught with the political and psychological melodramas inherent to a Jew's survival in the Second World War. After surviving the terror of Auschwitz during Hitler's purge, a woman is freed into a society where prostitution is her only hope for survival. She recaptures her dignity by caring for prostitutes' children, culminating in her socially difficult friendship with a small Arab boy. "The Garden of The Finzi-Continis" focuses on Jewish aristocrats in Italy during the beginning of this worldwide tragedy with brilliantly tender insight.

Films were selected according to responses to a questionnaire, offering over 100 different films, distributed to students, faculty and area residents. These were distributed by the Cultural Films Committee, chaired by the chairperson of the Theatre Department, Dr. Lynch.

Back To Dock For Yachts

By SHARON WINTERS

The second album by the Yachts, "Yachts Without Radar," suffers some unfortuante flaws. The major problem involves the record's production: it's flat.

"Don't Call Us" leads side one. The song might be good live, although on vinyl it sounds as if it's two minutes too long. Lyrically, the song has bite and could certainly use a sound to match, but the mix is incredibly low-key.

Side two, the best side of the album, is polished, controlled and tight. "There's a Ghost In My House" is a good "lost love" song. Lyrics, such as, "I can see your face," and "keep hearing those footsteps," fit well as do the vocals and melody. The rest of the second side continues with nice, controlled material. Polish and control seem to be the key to this side. The material is likeable but too restrained because something is missing; all the life has been deleted here.

A song that does stand out is "I Couldn't Get Along Without You." It appears to have been put in as a throw away, the lyrics are not included with the rest on the sleeve. "Without You" is a nice, pop, easy-to-dance-to song that has the gleam and energy so lacking throughout the record.

Aside from the production problems, the album has some uneven work from the band, for example, using lyrics like "nihilism" and "tentbrain" in the same song. Another song, "March of the Moderates," attempts to be witty, albeit fails, with lyrics like: "When in doubt don't say yes or no, just leave it blank./Mild-mannered types are always those on whom I'd bank/Makes life so easy and for that you've me to thank." The rhymes are too contrived, too detracting, for an impact or meaning to be conveyed. "Out of Luck" is a song that survives as well as rhymes; this one works without sounding annoying: "Don't need no help just point me in the right direction/I've plucked up strength to deal with my complete rejection."

The band has promise and style. They probably play well live although the listener must use his/her imagination to make up for what the record lacks. The nice material on the album by far outweighs the bad. The Yachts need to find the correct mix and write on a more consistent level. For now, they are a nice band from Liverpool; someday they could be good or even great.

TLA Shines At Night

By CHRIS SLAWECKI

Philadelphia's TLA Cinema is offering a variety of uniformly excellent films throughout September. With the assistance of WMMR 93.3, TLA features two different films every night, a diversity that should please almost everyone.

Some examples of the range of performers and topics still available this month are Marlon Brando's disquieting performance in "Apocalypse Now," Rudolf Nuryev's film debut in "Valentino," Stanley Kubrick's "A Clockwork Orange," and Bob Dylan's "Renaldo and Clara." The second feature, shown the same night each week, should delight any Villanova rocker: On Mondays, the Who prove that "The Kids Are Alright," Wednesdays are the nights to let your "Hair" hang down, the Ramones execute mind control over "Rock 'N' Roll High School" on Thursdays, and the "Rocky Horror Picture Show" is STILL shown every Friday and Saturday at midnight.

Scene from A CLOCKWORK ORANGE directed by Stanley Kubrick.

Located at 334 South Street, TLA is accessible by public transportation at about the same cost as a cheap six-pack of you-know-what, $2.70. Take the P&W trolley to 69th Street, transfer onto the "L" subway heading south, and go down 15 stops to Second Street. South Street intersects Second Street about six blocks south of the subway station.

A Glance At Summer Film

By SHARON WINTERS

"The snobs against the slobs" is the promotion for the film, "Caddy Shack." Anyone who sees this movie should expect the portrayals of both to be extreme. The slobs, like Rodney Dangerfield, are offensive but cute. The snobs, led by Ted Knight, are just plain offensive. The real highlight of the film is the two fools, Chevy Chase and Bill Murray.

"Airplane" is a crazy, trite and amusing spoof of all the "Airport" movies. Everything goes wrong, and everyone is approximately panic struck. This movie is good for pun and cliche-lovers everywhere. Innuendos abound in this current film.

"The Blues Brothers" is a lively movie. The biggest mistake that they make is passing up the chance to have Aretha front their band. "Lady Soul" should have sung a few more tunes, and Ray Charles didn't get enough respect either. Otherwise, the movie was full of music, comedy and unabashed stereotypes; a nice, light evening is presented for fans.

"The Empire Strikes Back" is a must for anyone who liked "Star Wars." The fairy tale continues with Luke, the princess, Darth and the rest. An apt follow-up to the original, the visuals are even better. A new character introduced, Yoda, steals the film with his charm. This muppet, created by Frank Oz, who gave us Miss Piggy, is both adorable and regal.

Commentary

Stop Looking And Listening

By SHARON WINTERS

"Believe none of what you hear and half of what you see," should have been the guideline to follow for two of this summer's films. Bronco Billy and The Shining both suffered because of their advertising. The viewer was given an invalid summary of the films via the promotional clips sent to theaters and television studios.

Clint Eastwood tried to make a transition into a comedy format through Bronco Billy, although the advertising agency who did the publicity had the public think that Clint was still portraying the macho man from the old west. He believed because the myth made him happy and somewhat sane. Eastwood played the part of a former shoe salesman who did time in the big house for shooting his wife for infidelity.

Bronco Billy was a man who formed a wild west show out of a rag-tag band of society's outcasts. The group toured the country bringing their happy myth to all the "little buccaroos." The plot complication involves Billy's meeting with Sandra Locke, a poor, little, defensive, rich girl. Locke joins the west show accidentally after being stranded, without a car, money or possessions, by her new husband.

The film is just fluff: a silly plot; a few good lines; a couple cute scenes and an evening of unspoiled, light, cotton candy for the eyes. Anyone who went to this mild comedy expecting "Magnum Force" was, of course, disappointed.

The Shining suffered because of advertising in a like manner to Billy. The viewer was led to believe that the film was about a crazed axe murderer; gore and blood seemed to be the stars of the movie if the promos were to be trusted. They were not.

The plot of the film involves a family man how wants to be a serious writer. To this end, he accepts a job as a caretaker to a New England hotel that will be snowbound, cut off from the rest of the world, for the winter. The writer, Jack Nicholson, will use this peace and quiet to create his masterpiece.

The complication that creeps into the film is the unfolding evidence of Nicholson's instability, gradually he goes insane and becomes a threat to his own family.

The movie title, The Shining, refers to Nicholson's son; the boy has the ability or "Shining" to foresee the evil that will take place at the secluded hotel. The child does not know exactly what will take place although he fears something he does not fully understand until the proverbial last moment.

Suspense is the key the movie, not gore. The advertising people promoted the bloody aspects of the film, which were few and brief, giving the public the wrong idea. Many who went to the movie felt cheated as the final reel ended. The expected blood bath never materialized.

Music Series Offers Student Rates

The Philadelphia All Star-Forum Series has established low-cost special student rates so that students across the Delaware Valley can see a six-concert sequence of international musical offerings at the Academy of Music in the 1980-81 season.

The series starts at the Academy with a concert on November 10 by the London Symphony, conducted by Claudio Abbado, and continues with a lineup of other symphony orchestras conducted by acclaimed maestri, together with renowned recital artists and ballet and opera spectaculars.

The student can choose six out of the eight All Star-Forum offerings, to create his or her own series. The series of six is available to students at $21 in the Amphitheatre and $27 in the Family Circle.

Presentations on the All Star-Forum schedule also include as recital virtuosi, the flutist James Galway, pianist Vladimir Ashkenazy and violinist Itzhak Perlman from Ireland and Israel, respectively; the National Symphony under Mstislav Rostropovich's baton, Los Angeles Philharmonic directed by Carlo Maria Giulini, plus two lyrical offerings. These are "Ballet's Greatest Moments," hosted by the premier dancer Edward Villella and starring the ex-Soviet luminary Alexander Godunov together with soloists of American Ballet Theater and the New York City Ballet: and "Opera's Greatest Moments," featuring singers of the Metropolitan Opera and New York City Opera.

Fall Theater In Philly Flourishes

Play production at both the amateur and professional levels is enjoying a renaissance in Philadelphia and the surrounding community. It is fortunate that the beginning of this school year coincides with this rebirth.

Temple

This season, Temple University Theater productions is offering a unique combination of plays on its two main stages, Tomlinson Theater, 13th and Norris Streets, on Temple's main campus, and Temple University Center City's Stage Three, 1619 Walnut Street.

There will be two productions in Tomlinson Theater: William Inge's most successful Broadway play, Bus Stop, vintage 1950's will be presented October 16 through October 25; "Knight of the Burning Pestle," a rollicking comedy about Elizabethan grocers by Beaumont and Fletcher, will play February 12 through February 21.

Three plays will be shown at TUCC's Stage Three: the Philadelphia premiere of Tennessee Williams' Vieux Carre an autobiographical play about his life as a young writer in New Orleans, will play December 3 through December 13; Waiting for Godot, the 20th century classic by Samuel Beckett, will be produced April 1 through April 11; and the world premier of a new version of "The Tutor," an 18th century play by J.M. Lenz, translated and adapted by John Willett, will be presented April 22 through May 2.

Annenberg

The Philadelphia Drama Guild, the Delaware Valley's only fully professional resident theatre company, will present its 1980-81 10th Anniversary Season at the Zellerbach Theatre at the Annenberg Center, 3680 Walnut Street, on the campus of the University of Pennsylvania.

Special discount subscription rates for the entire 5-show series, priced from as low as $20, are available to full-time 1980-81 college and university students.

The schedule for the new theatre season is as follows:

Watch On The Rhine by Lillian Hellman (October 16 through November 2) — a timeless work by one of America's extraordinary theatrical craftsmen, about a family overtaken by international skullduggery amid the clouds of war and foreign intrigue in Washington, D.C., on the eve of America's involvement in World War II.

Joe Egg by Peter Nichols (November 27 through December 14) — the story of how a young family learns to contend with a major family crisis — a child born pathetically cripled. This theatrical piece-de-resistance is at once frank, tender and frantically funny.

Society Hill

The Society Hill Playhouse, 507 South 8th Street, invites the people of Philadelphia to celebrate its 20th birthday on Sunday, September 28 from 2:30 to 6:00 p.m. Theatrical games, a costume parade, make-up magic and a mixed bag of live performers and performances will highlight the outdoor festivities. All events are planned for the parking patio next to the playhouse.

For more information, or a copy of the season brochure, call the Theater Box Office at (215) 787-1122.

Hedgerow

Neil Simon's comedy "The Good Doctor" will be presented at the Hedgerow Theatre, Rose Valley/Moylan, Pennsylvania from September 25 through October 25.

"The Good Doctor," directed by Ralph Roseman, features John Barrett as the narrator, Anton Chekhov. Janet Kelsey plays the poor defenseless woman who attacks a banker suffering from gout and his aide, played by Bill Tauber and Robert Sim. Characters involved with a sneeze when attending the theatre are Nola Bonecutter, Hilary Rankin, Bill King and Bill Tauber. George Spillane plays a priest and Robert Rados the doctor who run into problems in the dentist chair.

John Descano, a former Hedgerow actor and director, returns to play the title role in the charming story "The Seducer." The married couple are played by John Huber and David Bland. Maggie Flynn plays a little old lady looking for romance. Other characters include a policeman looking for the excitement of a drowning at the beach; a young man whose father takes him to visit a house where a woman has been hired to teach the facts of life and a wealthy mistress who tries to dupe her servant girl out of a month's pay.

Hedgerow Theatre is located in beautiful Rose Valley, two miles south of Media, Pennsylvania.

Head For The Art Museum

"Girl Arranging Her Hair" by Impressionist Mary Cassatt. This painting is from the Chester Dale collection.

Although they have often remained anonymous or unappreciated by their public, American women artists have had a continuing and varied influence on the visual arts. In recognition of their importance, the Philadelphia Museum of Art will look at American women's influence and involvement in the arts during a Saturday workshop in September, and four documentary films on Sundays in late September and October.

The Adult Workshop on "Women in the Visual Arts" will take place Saturday, September 27 from 10:15 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the Seminar Room. The tuition is $25 for members, and $28 for non-Members. Enrollment is limited.

Four films taken from the series "The Originals: Women in Art" will be shown Sundays at 12:30 p.m. in the Van Pelt Auditorium. An admission of $1 for Members, students and senior citizens and $1.50 for non-Members will be charged for the introductory talk and the first film. The other films will be free.

September 28: Anonymous Was A Woman: Producer/Director Mirra Bank will introduce and speak on the making of this film, on which she based the book Anonymous Was A Woman.

October 5: Mary Cassatt-Impressionist From Philadelphia: The life and work of Mary Cassatt, one of the five great American artists of the nineteenth century is examined in this film produced and directed by Perry Miller Adato.

October 19: Louise Nevelson In Process: Co-produced and directed by Susan Fanshel and Jill Godmilow. In addition to exploring the world of one of America's greatest living sculptors, this film includes rare footage of the artist, Louise Nevelson, at work.

October 26: Helen Frankenthaler: Produced and directed by Perry Miller Adato. Famous for her invention of the stained canvas and influence on color field painters, Helen Frankenthalher remains one of America's most durable and inventive artists.

Cats Drop Season Opener

By BETH WHITE

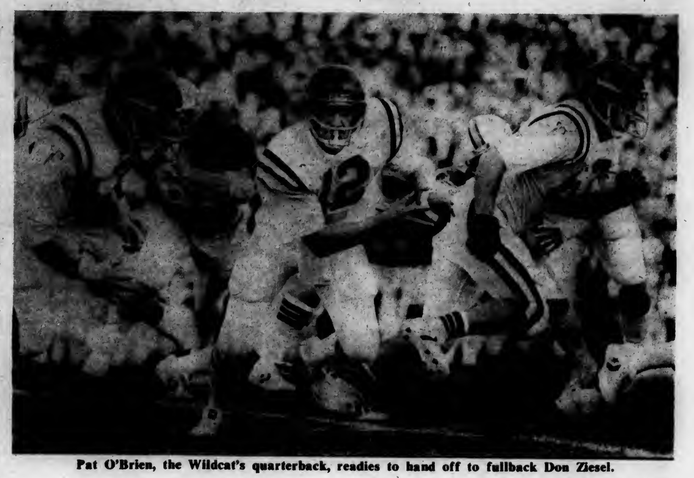
The Villanova Wildcats met the challenge from the University of Maryland Terrapins last Saturday by allowing only one touchdown and shutting out the Terrapin offense for the remaining three quarters to fall 7-3 in their season opener. The Terps capitalized on the Wildcat's errors, but overall, Head Coach Dick Bedesem was proud of the team, even in defeat." Bedesem was impressed that the squad was able to "maintain their composure and come back from adversity" in not allowing Maryland to score after their first posession.

The game started off on a sour note for the Cats. After winning the toss, the Cats elected to receive. The opening kickoff sailed deep into Wildcat territory, and was caught by senior Dave "Dr. Death" Martin on the Nova three-yard line. On the runback, Martin was hit by senior Terrapin Sam Johnson and the ball popped loose, to be recovered by Maryland's Howard Eubanks. The Terps scored six plays later as junior tailback Charlie Wysocki swept around the line of scrimmage and into the end zone. Placekicker Dale Castro's extra point put the Terps ahead, 7-0.

But the Wildcat's resiliency proved to be the tone of the day. Although Maryland's defense held the Cats from reaching their own end zone, several plays surprised the Terps and were transformed into Wildcats assets.

The Cats extended their first possession of the second quarter by setting up for a punt, but punter Joe Borajkiewicz lobbed a 16-yard pass to wide receiver Willie Sydnor, who squirmed his way through the surprised Maryland secondary for the Wildcat first down. The Cats were then unable to work their way further into Maryland territory, but after exchanging punts again, regained the ball on the Maryland 37-yard line. Quarterback Pat O'Brien sparked the offense with a 39-yard run through the middle of the Terrapin secondary. Placekicker Chuck Bushbeck then put the Wildcat points on the scoreboard with a 36-yard field goal.

The Wildcats' main weaknesses from last Saturday, which they will be working on for tomorrow's contest against the Spiders of the University of Richmond are their pass completion percentage, varying their offensive strategies and their fourth-down conversions. Coach Bedesem explains that, "The team has what it takes. We gave them seven points in the opening kickoff, but held them scoreless the rest of the game. There's no need to worry about rebounding," continues Bedesem, "because I think we have a pretty damn good football team."



Pat O'Brien, the Wildcat's quarterback, readies to hand off to fullback Don Ziesel.

Stadium Lights Brighten Nova's Future

BY PETER J. RYAN

After completion of the astroturf playing field and the eight-lane Rubaturf track, all that remains before renovation of the Villanova Stadium is complete is the installation of a lighting system.

Estimates for the job run anywhere from $117,000 to $125,000, while the completion date ranges from early to mid-November. There will be six poles, one hundred feet high, distributed around the field. Four of the structures will be equipped with ten lighting fixtures of 1500 watts each, with the remaining pair containing a dozen fixtures.

Dr. Ted Aceto, director of athletics, stresses that, "We will have a multi-use stadium for all Villanova students and relieve much of the pressure on the already overworked intramural fields."

Aceto has already set aside the field nightly from 6:00-10:00 p.m. exclusively for intramural use. As a result, flag football players can expect as many as three games to be played in the stadium.

The varsity soccer team will be playing a number of home games on the field this year with lacrosse and women's field hockey also making use of the new surface. Aceto said he hopes to have some football games played under the lights by next season.

The completion of Villanova's renovated stadium will include new lights to be installed by mid-November.

Co-Captains Combine Talents

By BETH WHITE

Wildcat Co-captains Joe Arcidiacono and Dan Burke represent both the strength and diversity of this year's football squad. "They are almost opposite in personality," explains Head Football Coach Dick Bedesem, "but they complement each other both on and off the field."

Senior Dan Burke has lettered as a defensive back every year for the Cats and this season will supplement the defensive secondary as a roving back. Burke led the Cats last season with 137 tackles (17 solos and 118 assists) and tallied an interception, a deflected pass and a quarterback sack.

"Dan is very vocal on the field," explains Bedesem. "He's a spirited player who displays a lot of emotional leadership." As captain of his high school team, Burke was a very quiet leader, and is often reticent in the classroom or on campus. "But I guess that college football brings out the best in me," explains Burke. "I guess because Archie is quiet on the field, I tend to be more vocal. I like to get everyone going: scream a lot, crack a few jokes and wake everyone up."

Arcidiacono describes Burke's chatter as "psyche talk," while he says that he uses "controlled aggressiveness to inspire the team." A senior economics major, he has a reserved, polite nature but at the same time is very articulate and clearly expresses his ideas. Burke describes his co-captain as "disciplined, both on and off the field. I voted for Archie because he has a natural leadership ability." The seniors jokingly suggest that the reason they were elected captains by their teammates was that they each "carried clubs and chains and personally threatened everyone on the team. He (Archie) is the biggest," smiles Burke, "and I'm the craziest."

"Even though they are almost opposite in personality, they complement each other both on and off the team."

- Head Coach Dick Bedesem

Both co-captains are optimistic about the team's improvement this year and the outcome of this season. Arcidiacono states that, "The team will be in every game this year. We can confidently line up with everyone we play and stay in the game." Burke affirms that, "One of the strong points of the team is that everyone is one year older, more mature and more experienced." "When we're in the game," continues Burke, "we are going for our opponent's juggler vein."

However, a lot of Burke's and Arcidiancono's confidence in the squad's ability and potential this season stems from their faith in Head Coach Bedesem and his staff. Arcidiacono claims that Bedesem believes that "Football can be an educational process. He is one football coach who sincerely wants to see you grow as an individual." Coach Bedesem relies not only on the squad's two captains for leadership, but also on the team's returning juniors and seniors to provide examples for the underclassmen.

Burke, who is a Communication Arts major, was initially impressed with Coach Bedesem's "outgoing personality. He always goes out of his way to talk to you and make you feel comfortable."

This congenial concern extends not only from the coaching staff, but also from the captains themselves. The rapport that Dan Burke and Joe Arcidiacono will develop with the football squad throughout the season may become the variable factor between a mediocre season for the Villanova Wildcats and a winning one.

Jensen's Eligibility Extended

Unusual Sixth Year For Wildcat Defensive End

By JERRY VENTRESCA

Although most Villanova students weren't looking forward to another school year, one was anxiously awaiting for September 4 to roll around — senior defensive end Tom Jensen.

Jensen is unique among college football players. Last Thursday he was granted a sixth year of eligibility from the NCAA. Usually a college football player is allowed five years to play four seasons of ball. But Jensen, due to an injury six years ago in high school, sat out two years. His asking for a sixth year of eligibility is rare.

Jensen, a standout grid star at Central Bucks West in nearby Doylestown, Pa., suffered head injuries in a car accident he was involved in as a senior. However, in the fall of 1975 he tried out as a freshman at Potomac State in West Virginia, only to quit following two days at camp. Eventually he quit school later that year. During 1976 Jensen worked instead of attending school, until 1977 when he decided he wanted to return to school and hit the football scene again.

Mike Pettine, head coach at West and Villanova alumnus spoke with Dick Bedesem and by August, 1977 Jensen was a Wildcat. Things still had to be ironed out though. Jensen, according to the ECAC wasn't granted eligibility until November, 1977, when only two games were left on the V.U. schedule. Jensen was a transfer and thus had to sit out a year, said the ECAC.

It wasn't until 1978 when Tom Jensen knew he was going to play a full season of ball at V.U. The following year, too, was one of pleasant memories for "Jens" he led the Cats defense in fumb recoveries (3) and was fourth the squad with 105 total tackl

Defensive end Tom Jensen, w blocked a punt against Maryla in last Saturday's 7-3 loss to t Terps, is back to assist the Wil cats again this season.

New Coaches Add Fresh Life to Wildcats

BY KATHLEEN STICKEL

New and experienced coaching staffs promise to be a successful asset to the women's field hockey and volleyball teams this year.

Rose Selby and Bob Covell are this year's young and ambitious volleyball coaches who assisted under last year's Coach Gertrude Jennings.

"Our goal is to concentrate on getting invited to the regional tournaments," comments a hard-driving Covell. Covell received his B.S. in electrical engineering from Purdue University and from there started his coaching of the Tullahoma AAU Jr. boy's volleyball team in Indiana, winning three regional championships.

He does his own sliding on the court playing with USVBA men's A and AA division volleyball teams.

Coach Selby has played on USVBA teams since 1973, winning several regional championships. Selby has also coached for the past six years in Campaign, Illinois. She received a B.A. in Psychology, her Master's and Ph.D. at the University of Illinois. She is currently an assistant professor at The American College and an adjunct professor here at Villanova.

The two coaches predict that their potential lies with the two new scholarships players added this year, Stephanie Moore from Fairview Park, Ohio and Nancy Patrick of Penn Wynne, Pa. Along with the returning athletes, Joanne Canuso, Sarah Holyoke, Lisa Ortlip, Diane Petraglia, Fran Gruber and newcomer, Kathie Biesel, the team will face tough competition such as Syracuse and Rutgers.

The field hockey team hosts two new leaders, Deborah Harvilla at the head position, assisted by Julie Keaveney.

Both are graduates of West Chester State with degrees in Health and Physical Education. Harvilla and Kaeveney have coached a wide variety of teams at the high school level and have taken on the Wildcats for a fresh, new season.

So, if these qualified and experienced coaches are any foreshadowing of the teams, the female Wildcats should have an impressive season.

Spider Preview

By JERRY VENTRESCA

The Cats now have the disappointing loss to Maryland behind and their first home game on Astroturf vs. the University of Richmond tomorrow to look forward to. Last week at Richmond the Spiders broke an 11-game losing streak (0-11 in 1979) when they defeated Bowling Green, 20-17, scoring the winning touchdown with 73 seconds left in the game.

Tom Anthony's interception capped a highly defensive battle at Richmond last year which the Cats won, 9-3. The Spiders travel to Villanova for the Cats home opener tomorrow.

Villanova holds a 4-2 advantage over the Spiders, though only one game has been decided by more than one touchdown. Last year the Cat defense dominated the Spiders in a 9-3 victory. The only touchdown of the game followed defensive tackle Paul Phillippy and middle guard Joe Lucas' fumble recovery and defensive end Bruce Kullman's safety highlighted an excellent defensive performance by the Cats.

On Richmond, Head Coach Dick Bedesem stated if the Cats suffer any letdown from the Maryland loss it could be costly because the Spiders are riding high following their home opening victory. "They have an excellent, tough defensive personnel. There's no change there (from past years). With their opening game win they'll be sky high. We've got to get our squad mentally ready." Bedesem also complimented Richmond's junior college transfer QB Steve Krainock: "From watching him on film, he throws the ball very well. His statistics were very impressive." Against Bowling Green Krainock had 17 of 23 completions for 185 yards and no interceptions.

NOTES: Pat O'Brien's career total offense figure is now 3,447 yards (all-time leader) . . . Richmond's Reuben Turner will be starting his 34th consecutive game for the Spiders . . . Senior Tim Kane, starting his first game at DE, was second in tackles with 12, a career high; Anthony Griggs led the team with 13 . . . LB Jim Matika also recovered a fumble . . . David Martin deflected three passes . . . O'Brien is fifth in all-time rushing (1,432). He needs 128 to tie Pete D'Alonzo for fourth . . . WR Tim Robinson had a 7-game reception streak broken.

Play

Second, they feel that the way the play was merchandised this year with tickets sold primarily abroad and including accommodations is a commercialization of what to them is a sacred event.

A week after seeing the Passion Play, on the feast of the Assumption, I visited Chartres, the cathedral built in 1220 and dedicated to Our Lady. The Solemn High Mass was celebrated by three priests with seventeen more in attendance, including a Cardinal and a Bishop.

A choir of nuns alternated with a choir of Chevaliers, laymen dedicated to Our Lady who are dressed in grey monk-like garb. The Mass and hymns were in Latin and the voices seemed to come from the spires of the vaulted Gothic roof. The participants in the ancient ritual were hushed and reverent and it might have been the fourteenth century or the sixteenth. Observances by competitors seemed as frozen as those athletes vivant.

ATTENTION PHILOSOPHY MAJORS:

Q. Why is Bacon so respected?

A. Because Bacon is the best thing that ever happened to a cheeseburger.

And you can save 30¢ when you buy our brand-new bacon cheeseburger.

We're pretty sure that Bacon didn't write Shakespeare after all. But then he didn't invent Roy Rogers bacon cheeseburger either. It takes a real imagination to top our perfect cheeseburger with crisp, delicious bacon.

Nevertheless, even Bacon would approve of our offer. For a limited time only when you buy one bacon cheeseburger, we'll give you 30¢ off. But, Sir Francis still can't take credit for our bacon cheeseburger. So why's it named after him?

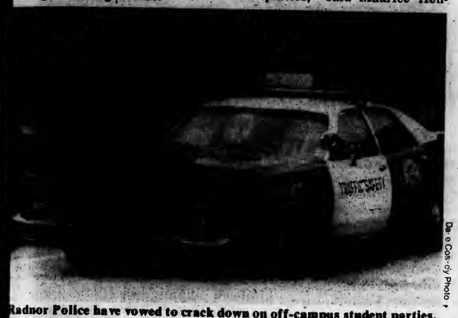
Police Pledge Toughness

Student Parties Raided Over Weekend

By BILL CLARK

According to police officials of two townships in the area, local authorities intend to clamp down on off-campus parties where underage drinking occurs.

"The Radnor Township Police are getting very hard-nosed. Our department will be more strict, very much so in fact. We have already raided two or three houses for parties," said Maurice Hennessy, chief of police of Radnor Township.



Radnor Police have vowed to crack down on off-campus student parties.

"We have been receiving more complaints from local residents about noise than in the past," said Hennessy. "It seems that no one from Villanova cares about the conditions of the community."

Hennessy went on to say that Radnor police would not break up any parties without a complaint from local residents. "As long as these parties are controlled and we receive no complaints, we can live with them," said Hennessy.

Police in Tredyffrin Township also indicated they intended to be much stricter than in the past. Last Saturday, they raided a party held at the Sugartown Mews Apartment complex.

"Our police force is definitely getting stricter as far as underage drinking is concerned," said Lt. Brown of the Tredyffrin Township Police. "There are not going to be many more parties down there (Sugartown Mews), that's for sure."

According to Hennessy, Radnor police will first ask a party to disband. If this does not occur within fifteen minutes, a citation that can amount up to $300 will be issued.

At one gathering in Wayne last weekend, Radnor police did issue a citation. According to one student at the party, Radnor Police did not wait fifteen minutes.

"They came and told us to break up the party. We went back and told everyone to leave. Three police cars were parked in front of the house, so everyone was afraid to leave. Five minutes after the first warning, we were issued a citation," said the student.

According to Tredyffrin Police, there were 179 people attending the party at Sugartown Mews. "The police went in and shut down the party. We were inside and outside the apartment complex, and dispersed the students," said Brown.

According to one partygoer, policemen blocked the front door of the apartment and forced everyone to exit through the patio door into the courtyard.

"Once we were in the courtyard, policemen took names, addresses, and proof of age. Some policemen administered breath tests to the students."

Tredyffrin police said that no citation was issued for the party, nor is any planned for the future.

Chief Hennessy said that Radnor Police would begin notifying the landlords of student apartments when repeated offenses occur. "Apparently our warnings are just not working. We will send over one or two men to warn the students, and ten minutes later we will get another complaint."

Maurice Hennessy, Chief of Radnor Police — Dave Coskey Photo

Radnor Police Department said they have met with several Villanova officials, including Fr. Deegan, vice-president for student life.

"When Villanova students go off-campus for parties, the University should still be responsible. Apparently they (the University officials) have not been notified about these parties, because they are definitely out of control," said Hennessy.

Cardinal To Bless Connelly Center

By MARIANNE LAVELLE

The Connelly Center, Villanova's new multi-purpose building, will be blessed by John Cardinal Krol, of the Archdiocese on Philadelphia, in a dedication ceremony this Sunday.

The blessing ceremonies, open to the public are scheduled to begin at 1:45 p.m. with a procession of the Villanova deans, vice-presidents, president and Cardinal Krol. The entourage will proceed from Dougherty Hall to the Plaza area, where the Cardinal is to bless the cornerstone of the Connelly Center as well as the inside of the building.

Also to be included in the ceremony will be a message delivered to the audience by Cardinal Krol and a performance by the Villanova Singers. Two student fraternities will provide ushers for the event.

"We hope students will come to see and hear the Cardinal," said Marc Tuchman, director of the Connelly Center.

"I understand that it is a tradition at Villanova to have a building dedicated," he said. "It is a special event, a religious event, and a part of tradition. We're excited to have an opportunity to bring together different factions of the University."

Tuchman said that members of the Connelly family have been invited to the event.

Also invited were major donors to the University's fund raising programs and members of the trustees, he said.

Also to be unveiled at the event is a large cross designed by Brother Richard Cannulli, of the Villanova department of art and art history, who also coordinates the Connelly Center art gallery.

The cross will stand to the left of the elevator in the main lobby of the center. The cross is to be blessed by the Cardinal.

Alcohol Education Emphasized

By BILL CLARK

Villanova has adopted an alcohol policy that stresses alcohol education in order that students may make an intelligent decision about alcohol use.

"The goal of the policy is to create an educational setting where young adults can understand the choice about alcohol and make it in an intelligent manner," said Rev. John E. Deegan, O.S.A. vice-president for student life.

The policy emphasizes the training of student leaders in understanding patterns of drinking, and how to identify someone who is a problem drinker.

"The alcohol education program, developed by the Student Activities office, uses a psychological approach to alcohol. This policy is not saying 'no booze' to students. It is an attempt to help Villanova students to understand alcohol," said Deegan.

Rev. John Deegan, O.S.A.

Anthony Martin, acting dean of men, said "Villanova's alcohol policy in print is a reflection of a state law and our attempt to come to gripe with that law."

"We feel, however, that we have an educational mission to meet the social needs of the students. When we see a situation where alcohol fits a legitimate need of students, and drinking is moderate and not the main purpose of the gathering, our approach is to make exceptions to the policy under certain circumstances."

Martin said, however, that Villanova will not allow the abuse of alcohol by students. "Villanova wants to be proud of what happens on campus," said Martin.

According to Martin, enforcement of Villanova's alcohol policy will be stricter than in the past. "Alcohol is an overwhelming problem and we have a moral responsibility to attempt to alleviate the problem."

Deegan said that "Villanova hasn't failed. We are merely picking up the pieces of a bad society. This is a lot to ask, but our mission is to give students an education.

"It (alcohol) is here, and we can't deny it. We are a reflection of a larger society. Villanova's role is to give students a choice about alcohol, and they need support in making that choice."

According to Deegan, the alcohol policy in relation to open containers on campus is simple and clear. "The policy of open drinking on campus is a state law. We have no control over that."

Henry Amoroso, student body president, feels that the policy is workable, "but leaves room for criticism."

"Villanova has a responsibility to keep students on campus. Alcohol is a part of society, and we all have to learn to deal with it. Students should be encouraged to have more parties on campus," said Amoroso.

Amoroso feels that Villanova has adopted a stricter alcohol policy than in past years. "I definitely feel that the R.A.'s attitudes have changed in regard to the policy. The enforcement of the policy is much different. They are not nearly as tolerant as in the past."

Martin does not feel that Villanova's alcohol policy forces students to go off campus for parties.

"We have to encourage students to be a bit more creative in their social lives. We believe that there are other ways for students to have a good time besides drinking to excess," said Martin.

Villanova hasn't failed. We are merely picking up the pieces of a bad society. This is a lot to ask, but our mission is to give students an education.

Rev. John E. Deegan

Local Colleges Vary On Alcohol Enforcement

By BILL ROCK

Several of Villanova's neighboring colleges and universities in the Philadelphia area are currently enforcing stricter interpretations of their alcohol policies, while others are content with their present stand concerning the consumption of alcoholic beverages.

St. Joseph's University is presently reviewing its alcohol policy in response to several visits to its campus by representatives of the Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board.

According to William Larkin, dean of student life at St. Joseph's, "At about this time last year, the LCB came to campus and questioned us. Naturally we were very concerned that they felt such a visit was necessary.

"In response to that, we are re-evaluating our policy on alcohol. No changes have been made yet, but they are under consideration. I cannot give you a clear statement on what our policy is, since it is in transition."

The University of Pennsylvania does not permit alcoholic beverages to be served at any university-sponsored activity.

Randy Malimud, news editor of Penn's student newspaper, The Daily Pennsylvania, stated, "We have had very little trouble with the LCB at Penn. I think that is basically because the university maintains a fairly strict policy. No school-wide functions can have alcohol.

"Still private parties by students and fraternity parties have had little trouble with serving alcohol. Recently, however, the administration seems to be cracking down somewhat on these parties. There is no evidence that the LCB has anything to do with it though."

Temple University employs a different approach. According to one student representative, "At a major school-wide party, you are issued a card, specifying a certain amount of liquor you can drink. That card is punched every time you get a drink, and you're not served more than the specified amount.

"We have had no problem with the LCB. Our security guards have the same powers as Philadelphia policemen, and they handle any alcohol-related disturbances."

Concetta Garistina, editor of the student newspaper at Rosemont College, claims there have been no major changes in the alcohol policy at Rosemont. "We do not really play up the fact of alcohol at school functions and it has never really created any problems. Maybe we can get away with more because we are a small school, but we have had no trouble with the LCB. I don't think there is any reason why we should."

At Bryn Mawr College, the possession of a college I.D. is necessary to gain admittance to a party where alcohol is being served.

According to a statement by the Student Government Association at Bryn Mawr, "If law enforcement officers attempt to gain admittance (to a party) without a warrant they are to be turned away and security is to be called . . .

"Each dorm (must appoint) a party security committee of at least three people . . . One member of the security committee should remain sober during parties. This person should keep a watchful eye on all guests in order to prevent possible accidents while under the influence."

Prof Evaluates Polish Strikes

By DREW MERRICK

The stunning political victories the Polish workers from the Baltic port of Gdansk won from their Communist leaders has both altered the structure of power and signifies a shift towards liberalization and democracy in Poland.

According to Dr. Jeffrey Hahn, associate professor of Political Science, "the decision to raise the price of meat by Edward Gierek, the ousted Polish Communist leader, was the cause of the Polish workers strike. Because the Polish government wouldn't submit to the workers demands for a wage increase equal to the increase in the price of meat, the workers believe that their only alternative was to strike," said Hahn.

"Many Polish intellectuals joined the strike and expanded the demands of the workers. Soon the workers were demanding a relaxation of censorship, and the establishment of independent trade unions with the rights to strike, in addition to the wage increase," continued Hahn.

Fearful of Soviet intervention, the Polish Communist leaders acceded to the demands of the workers by granting wage increases, promising more food and making political concessions, including the establishment of independent labor unions with the right to strike.

When asked about the Soviet Union's reaction to the concessions made by the Polish leaders to the workers, Hahn replied, "The Soviets are very uncomfortable for they realize that independent trade unions and strikes are incompatible with the Soviet version of Marxist-Leninist doctrine. The Soviets are fearful that an organization separate from the Communist Party is forming."

As to the possibility of a Soviet invasion and occupation of Poland, Hahn points out, "The Soviets would only invade Poland if the Poles were to break the conditions of the Warsaw Pact, or if the Communist Party lost control of the government.

"The Soviets don't want to invade Poland," said Hahn. An invasion of Poland would be very costly and it would place the Soviet Union at loggerheads with the Roman Catholic Church; a very powerful uniting force in Poland since eighty percent of the Polish population is Catholic."

Masters Program Adopted

By CAROL ALKONS

Villanova's College of Nursing will begin offering a Graduate Program in Nursing in January. The program will lead to a Master of Science in Nursing (M.S.N.) degree.

Two years ago, a faculty and advisory committee, directed by Dean M. Louise Fitzpatrick, recommended that a study be done to determine the feasibility of a graduate program at the Villanova College of Nursing, now in its 28th year.

"Since the school has been operating for so long with a quality Baccalaureate program accredited by the National League of Nursing (N.L.N), the College felt a professional commitment to offer a Master's program," said Dr. Joan T. Large, graduate coordinator.

The College also saw the need for a program designed to prepare "leaders for the profession": teachers of nursing practice, and administrators of nursing services.

"Most schools in the area do not offer programs in these aspects of nursing, but opt for the more popular clinical specialist programs," said Dr. Large.

"The response has been totally overwhelming," stated Dean Fitzpatrick. "We are delighted with the number of people showing interest in our program."

The program is open to both full-time and part-time students. College officials estimate that it will take at least three semesters for full-time students to complete the 42 credits required for a degree.

The College of Nursing is proud of its Advanced Nurse Training Grant to "prepare leaders in nursing." The college has received over $300,000 from H.E.W., Division of Nursing, to plan the program over a three year period.

The College expects that its N.L.N. rating will be extended to the graduate program upon evaluation of the first graduating class.

Campus G.O.P. Works for Reagan Ticket

By BILL COPPERTHWAITE

The College Republican Organization on campus is actively working for the election of Ronald Reagan for President and Arlen Specter for United States Senator from Pennsylvania.

The club is co-chaired by seniors Joe Quinn and Jim Saile. The club meets on Tuesdays, and according to Quinn, "has the best reputation of any Pennsylvania College Republican Club."

In 1976, President Ford made Villanova one of his campaign stops. "We organized it, and it was one of the best of his stops," according to Quinn. "In 1978, John Alden ran against Jeff Hahn, a Villanova professor, for state assemblyman, and we campaigned for Alden, who won the election."

Quinn maintained that the "primary objective" is to register people to vote in Pennsylvania, so that they will not have to go through the trouble of an absentee ballot. The club will also start a campus canvas to contact every student for a presidential poll.

Last Wednesday, Quinn attended a meeting at the University of Pennsylvania to plan strategy with the other College Republicans and decided to keep open the lines of communication and organize the grass roots support for Ronald Reagan and George Bush.

Quinn said that the club will start a labor pool for the Reagan-Bush Headquarters in Philadelphia, where the workers will be introduced to local Republicans.

"This is an open club, whatever interests you, you can find a place in the Republican Party," says Quinn, an economics major.

Quinn has many ideas about the election. He feels sorry for John Anderson and hopes that Reagan will seek his advice when elected. In his opinion, third party candidates have no chance of winning.

"Anderson is derailed by the media. Look at how many times he appears on the cover of the New York Times." People are becoming more political. This year's atmosphere was electrifying because of the Iranian Crisis. People are becoming more conservative and pragmatic like Reagan."

The GOP is not turning to the ultra-right, Quinn believes. "Compared to Ed Clark (Liberterian Presidential candidate) everyone is a right-winger. To some in Georgia, Carter is an ultra-rightist. You can call fiscal conservatism what you want, but it is what is needed. If you are out of a job and the free-spending Liberal Democrats do not provide a meaningful job, then you will vote for a conservative," Quinn said.

The College Republicans are trying to arrange a speech on campus by someone from the Reagan-Bush organization, but nothing is definite, according to Quinn.

Colleges to Present Graduate School Forum

Bryn Mawr, Haverford and Rosemont Colleges and Villanova University have again joined forces to bring representatives of more than sixty graduate schools to the area on Wednesday and Thursday, October 1 and 2.

All college students in the region are invited to attend the second annual Graduate and Professional School Admissions Forum, sponsored by the four institutions. It will be held at Haverford College on Wednesday and at Rosemont College on Thursday. Hours for both days are 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m.

"We are building on last year's successful effort and bringing in even more graduate schools this year," says Dorothy Blanchard, Director of Career Planning at Haverford College, "from many of the most prestigious universities in the east and midwest. Our student turnout was encouraging last year, and we're hoping for another good turnout this year."

A new feature at this year's forum, adds Ms. Blanchard, will be two informal seminars on business and law schools. "Students can ask questions of a panel of representatives, to learn more about professional schools in general," she explains.

Among the major institutions sending representatives to the Forum are graduate schools at Harvard, the University of Chicago, Emory, MIT, Brandeis, Princeton, Carnegie-Mellon and Dartmouth. Programs in business, law, engineering, theology, nursing, international affairs and the arts and sciences will be presented to students. For more information call MI 9-4709.

C & F Curriculum Change Adopted

By RICHARD DI STEFANO

The College of Commerce and Finance has implemented a number of significant changes in its required course of study.

Elective selections previously offered as "free" electives will now include choices in (1) history, (2) natural sciences, (3) English, especially in writing courses, and (4) the humanities, including foreign languages. These areas will be absorbed into the non-major category encountered after first-year core requirements are met.

Dean Alvin A. Clay of the College explains that, "Communications skills as well as technical skills are needed in order to understand society . . . To broaden life experiences, we must plant the seed early."

The Dean acknowledges that the choice formerly given students in planning their rosters often resulted in schedules that were biased in favor of the major field of study. Managers who deal with their employees, the government, and the public are considered more effective if they have multi-faceted educational backgrounds.

An example of this is the new Business and Society course, a Philosophy requirement. In the past, this was treated as an ethics topic, but due to the changing trends of the last decade, it is felt that this subject is more meaningful when presented to juniors in the context of today's atmosphere.

Innovations are also being made within the Commerce and Finance framework. In the three concentrations of Management, Marketing, and Finance, each class will receive the benefit for one week of a guest lecturer on the international aspects of the subject. This is in recognition of the fact that most major companies have expanding operations outside the United States.

Finally, work is being done with the Religious Studies Department to keep that aspect of business attuned to the Commerce and Finance curriculum. Dean Clay notes with pleasure that the cooperation of that department "fills the needs of a majority of the students."

The lower level, appropriately named "The Bottom Line," is dimly lit, contains a dance floor and a piano player on Wednesday through Saturday nights; features huge tanks of African fish and a cocktail lounge complete with juggling bartenders. Though the atmosphere and decor give the impression of formality and sophistication, the personable and very efficient waiters and waitresses make the patron feel very relaxed and at ease.

Best of all, menu prices are all under $10.95 and most are well below that.

The qualities which make Lanky's so appealing to a Villanovan, then, are its reasonable prices, unhurried atmosphere, friendly and professional service and its ability to cater to you regardless of your mood, appetite or attire. Although the restaurant is further away than other local establishments, a visit to Lanky's should prove to be a satisfying and memorable one.

ew Yes Stops Spectrum Twice

By MICHAEL JONES

e "updated" 1980s version of rogressive group Yes stopped Spectrum for two nights, Sep- ber 12 and 13. They came with w sound system and two new bers, Trevor Horn and Geoff s of the Buggles, replacing Anderson and Rick Wakeman. ough the format of the show ssed the union between the old new musicians, the crowd med somewhat confused by the ious difference between Trevor h and Jon Anderson.

es has traditionally been an emely visionary band both ically and lyrically. The new Yes touched a deep chord with the song Machine Messiah which, though frightening with its vision of the servitude of man to his technology still moved the energy in a positive direction.

The band has become more synthetic as evidenced by the use of the vocoder. Vocal treatments are perhaps more progressive but convey less emotional impact than the clear-throated warblings of Jon Anderson.

On one level the crowd really exploded upward and outward pressing against the roof of the Spectrum, but unlike previous Yes concerts it seemed that the crowd's energy rebounded back to the ground rather than breaking through the Gates of Delirium, a 1974 Yes album. The vision is not in the musical notes or the lyrics but in the experience from which the music stems.

Bass player and sole remaining founder of Yes, Chris Squire, played with unexpected energy considering his 11 years of recording with the band. His solo, The Fish, evoked images of salmon fighting their way upstream in much the same way as Steve Hillage's Fish Rising album. Squire played as if inspired by some divine muse.

Disappointingly, the show only lasted an hour and a half in contrast to the usual two and one-half to three hour Yes concert. The dozen or so songs were very tight musically and the old tunes chosen were well received by the audience. Yours Is No Disgrace, And Yes and I and Starship Trooper brought back memories of old Yes, but somehow Trevor Horn seemed a shallow replacement for Anderson.

All in all it was an impressive performance, tainted only by the inability of the present band to fully recapture the timeless nature of Yes during the early '70s, the height of which spawned the triple live album Yessongs and their magnus opus, Tales From Topographic Oceans. Yes can still take one Close to the Edge but their expression of it has changed.

Any staff or faculty member is welcome to submit his or her work to the Art and Art History Department in St. Mary's Hall, 645-4610.

Herbert's Desert Classic

By SHARON WINTERS

Frank Herbert's Dune trilogy is a masterpiece of science fiction. He creates a tale that chronicles the lives of the members of the Atreides family and their loyal adjutants against the backdrop of a barren, desert planet, Arrakis.

The first book, Dune, introduces the characters that will dominate the series. Arrakis, also known as Dune, is described in detail as well as its natives and their customs. In Dune Messiah, the middle book, the Atreides are firmly in power although the intrigues and plots against them are still serious matters of concern. The final book, Children of Dune, brings the story to a logical, but unexpected, conclusion.

Herbert makes Dune come to life. The planet appears to be a place that exists somewhere in space. He fashions a harsh, extremely arid setting for his story. Water is a precious commodity in Dune; Herbert constantly reminds readers of this through the natives rituals, customs, religion and clothing. He describes a life that would follow logically from the environment.

The natives or Fremen of Dune are predisposed through mythology and religion to accept a messiah who will turn Arrakis into a green paradise with running water. A young boy, Paul Atreides, is the god come to life.

Herbert does not allow the fairy tale of a lush Dune to last long. Horror overtakes the messiah. No one but Maud'Dib, ne Paul Atreides, and his children can see the terrible future that lies ahead for the planet's future. They have the ultimate knowledge that allows them to view all the possible futures that will result from their present and past actions.

Dune. . .has the distinction of being a winner of both the Nebula and Hugo awards.

Changing the possible futures to acceptable alternatives, is an uneasy task for many reasons. Most of them involve Maud'Dib's potent enemies. He is surrounded by treachery: feints within feints within feints abound.

Paul, for example, is hated by his original trainers, the Bene Gesserit, because his family is an "Abomination." Maud'Dib has diminished the Bene Gesserit control with a family that has the accumulated knowledge of all its ancestors at birth.

Herbert expands on reality in the formulation of the Bene Gesserit. They are portrayed as an order of women who undergo special training to make them exceptionally perceptive masters of control. Herbert makes their abilities rational rather than psychic.

That the Bene Gesserit is believable, is crucial to the story. They dominate from the start. The mother of the messiah is a renegade member of the order. Her children and her grandchildren are trained in the Bene Gesserit way and know about the group's philosophy. Herbert accomplishes the task of making the order a "living" entity.

The conclusion of the trilogy is attained by Paul's children. They do what he cannot emotionally do to save the planet. Herbert's ending is ironic; the gods must pay for their sins if Dune is to survive.

Frank Herbert was not content with giving the reader merely the story. He includes a map of Arrakis and appendixes that encapsulate Dune's ecology, ruling houses, religion and the purposes of the Bene Gesserit.

The Dune volume has gone through countless printings and has the distinction of being a winner of both the Nebula and Hugo awards. To say that the work is a science fiction classic is almost an understatement. The entire series is fascinating, entertaining reading with messages and statements on earth conditions for those who care to read beyond the popular alien storyline of a power struggle.

Frisbee Flings into Action

By JULIE ROBERTS

"Another Ultimate Year at V.U." At least that's what the shirts of Villanova's Ultimate Frisbee Team say. Sunday's tournament in New Jersey against the Airforms and the Plastic exchange will officially start the 1980 season.

Games will be held every Sunday during September and October. At the end of the official season, the best teams in the country will meet at the Rosebowl in Pasadena for the national championship.

Senior Co-captain Jim Schuster, who organized the V.U. Ultimate Team three years ago, is optimistic about this year's team. "We have seven seniors returning for their fourth season. These guys really play well together, but we have a tough schedule — Lehigh, Penn State, Swarthmore and last year's national champs, Glassboro State."

Ultimate Frisbee, which is one of four sports that has originated in the U.S., is gaining popularity. There are over 350 teams registered in the Ultimate Players Association.

Co-captain Ken Silverwood explains that Ultimate is faced with a few obstacles. "The major problem is trying to establish it as a legitimate college sport. It isn't a hoola-hoop fad. Ultimate is the sport of the 80's."

This year the women will have their own team. Senior captain "Rabbit" J. Roberts is pleased with the freshmen turnout. "Last year we only had about seven women so we played co-ed with the men's team. Because of the freshmen, we now have about 15 players which means the women will have more opportunities to play."

Ultimate, which is played somewhat like soccer, consists of seven players on each team. The object of the game is to pass the disk downfield until it is caught in the endzone and a point is scored. However, if a pass is dropped, or if the offensive player doesn't release the disk in 15 seconds the defense take possession. There are no referees so the offensive player usually makes the call.

Because the games are extremely fast paced, players must be in excellent physical condition. Schuster explains that it's all worth it. "The game has a free spirit attitude but with a competitive edge. There is no other feeling like sprinting for a soaring disk or diving into mud puddle to make an endzone catch. It's euphoric!"

Information on games and pratices can be found on the frisbee bulletin board outside of the Day-Hop Cafeteria.
